[16] On approving a settlement, the test to be applied “is whether the settlement is fair and reasonable and in the best interests of the class as a whole” (Cardozo v Becton, Dickinson & Co, 2005 BCSC 1612, 145 ACWS (3d) 381 citing at para 16 Dabbs v Sun Life Assurance Co of Canada, [1998] OJ No 1598, (24 February 1998), Ontario, 96-CT-022862 (Ont Gen Div) at para 9, aff’d (1998), 40 O.R. (3d) 429, 5 CCLI (3d) 18 (Ont Gen Div); Haney Iron Works Ltd v Manulife Financial (1998), 169 DLR (4th) 565, 9 CCLI (3d) 253 (BCSC) at para 27; and Fakhri v Alfalfa's Canada, 2005 BCSC 1123, 47 BCLR (4th) 379 at para 8).

[17] While the court has the power to approve or reject a settlement, it may not modify or alter a settlement (Haney Iron Works, supra at para 22; Dabbs, supra at para 10).

[18] The settlement is judged by a standard of reasonableness, not perfection (Châteauneuf v Canada, 2006 FC 286 at para 7, 54 CCPB 47).

[19] The factors to consider when the reasonableness of a settlement is being assessed have been delineated in a number of cases (Fakhri, supra at para 8) and are addressed below.

i. Likelihood of recovery or the likelihood of success

[20] It is evident from the litigation history of the Merlo and Davidson actions that there are many complex issues with these claims. Success was not guaranteed.

[21] There were various defences available to the Defendant. There was a risk that the Plaintiffs would not be successful at certification or at the common issues trial. Even if the Plaintiffs were able to get over these hurdles, they faced the prospect of appeals and individualized proceedings which could take an additional ten (10) years to complete. For these reasons, the Parties submit that any litigation discount factored into this settlement is outweighed by the potential litigation risks and inevitable delays of carrying on with the litigation.

[22] Furthermore, as part of the settlement, potential barriers to recovery and defences which would have otherwise been available to Canada have been waived.

ii. Amount and nature of discovery evidence

[23] The Parties submit that although this litigation has not reached the discovery phase, Class counsel developed a complete understanding of the underlying facts and circumstances of the claims.

[24] The Santos Affidavit details the steps taken by Klein Lawyers LLP in 2012, in creating a detailed questionnaire that was sent to each potential class member who contacted the firm. In 2014, Klein Lawyers LLP contacted the approximately 150 class members who completed detailed questionnaires. With this information, Klein Lawyers LLP was able to prepare charts illustrating the types of harassment experienced by 147 class members, the impacts of that harassment, and the experiences of class members after reporting such behaviour to the RCMP.

[25] I accept the submissions of Class counsel that even without discovery they had a wealth of information on the nature of the claims they were advancing. They were also well positioned to understand the factual matrix of these claims and the challenges they would face in moving forward with the litigation. Potential bars to recovery were a real risk. These factors informed the decision making process as counsel considered the proposed settlement and provided their recommendations to the Plaintiffs.

iii. Settlement terms and conditions

[26] The Parties submit that the Settlement Agreement is fair, efficient and in the best interests of the class.

[27] The inclusive class definition and a class period that dates back to 1974, provides compensation to class members who would otherwise be barred (because of limitation periods) from successfully pursuing an action. Further, considering the very personal and painful nature of the claims, the settlement process includes a non-adversarial claims process with numerous safeguards to protect the privacy of claimants.

[28] There are 6 levels of compensation, ranging between $10,000.00 – $220,000.00 dependent upon the nature of the conduct and its impact on the victim. Compensation is also available to spouses and children of claimants whose claims are assessed at the two highest levels (level 5 or level 6). The settlement is on a “claims made” versus a “lump sum” basis. This means there is no ceiling or cap on the total compensation that may be paid to members of the class. Therefore there is no risk of depletion of the settlement fund, nor is there any necessity to prorate claims. Simply put, every approved claim will be paid by the Defendant.

[29] At this stage, Class counsel conservatively estimates there will be over one thousand (1,000) claimants with an estimated pay out of approximately 89 million dollars.

[30] In the Settlement Agreement, the amounts allocated for non-pecuniary damages for the psychological injuries caused by workplace harassment is in line with, or exceeds, the amounts awarded in reported cases (Sulz v Canada (AG), 2006 BCSC 99, 263 DLR (4th) 58, aff'd 2006 BCCA 582, 276 DLR (4th) 391; Rees v Canada (Royal Canadian Mounted Police), 2004 NLSCTD 138, 239 Nfld & PEIR 1, rev'd 2005 NLCA 15, 246 Nfld & PEIR 79; Martin v Alberta (Workers' Compensation Board), 2014 SCC 25, [2014] 1 SCR 546; Clark v Canada, [1994] 3 FCR 323, 76 FTR 241; Unger v Singh, 2000 BCCA 94, 133 BCAC 265; Wong v Luong, 2004 BCSC 1489, 135 ACWS (3d) 354; Chancey v Chancey (1999), 86 ACWS (3d) 885, [1999] BCJ No 551 (SC); Kinsella v Logan (1996), 179 NBR (2d) 161, 63 ACWS (3d) 840 (CA), rev'ing (1995), 163 NBR (2d) 1, 55 ACWS (3d) 542 (QB); Nagy v Canada, 2005 ABQB 26, 41 Alta LR (4th) 61, aff'd 2006 ABCA 227, 272 DLR (4th) 601; J.R.I.G. v Tyhurst, 2001 BCSC 369, 103 ACWS (3d) 635, aff'd 2003 BCCA 224, 226 DLR (4th) 447).

[31] The claims process will be handled the Honourable Mr. Bastarache, C.C., Q.C., who has previously administered class actions settlements involving institutional abuse. He also played a significant role in assisting the parties to reach this settlement. He is highly regarded by the parties and they are satisfied that he will act fairly and compassionately in the role as Assessor.

[32] Ensuring a confidential process for claimants is an overarching feature of the settlement because of the nature of the psychological injuries. The settlement also includes a number of confidentiality safe guards which are particularly important for current serving members of the RCMP. The RCMP will not see the claims and they will not know the identity of the claimants. The RCMP designated contact will work from a secured room with access to the physical premises and to the records restricted.

[33] The settlement has strong support from class members. This settlement has a number of benefits beyond financial compensation, including an apology, change initiatives for the RCMP and the creation of a scholarship. These could not have been achieved through litigation.

iv. Recommendations and experience of counsel

[34] Class counsel, Klein Lawyers LLP and Kim Orr Barristers P.C., are highly experienced in class action litigation. Both firms have practiced in the specialized area of class action litigation for over 20 years.

[35] They have been involved in this litigation since the claims were filed. They recommend the settlement to Ms. Merlo and Ms. Davidson based upon a consideration of the benefits of the terms of the settlement as against the risks of continuing with the litigation. Their professional opinions are that the settlement affords the best opportunity for class members to be fairly compensated.

v. Future expense and likely duration of litigation

[36] If this settlement is not approved, the Merlo Action and the Davidson Action will resume. In the Merlo Action, the Defendant objected to certification and the certification hearing took 7 days. In the Davidson Action, part of the claim was struck (2015 ONSC 8008, 262 ACWS (3d) 648). The certification hearing started in 2016 and a decision has not yet been rendered.

[37] Based on the history of those proceedings to date, the Plaintiffs face the prospect of appeals; followed by the probability of further individualized proceedings which themselves may be subject to appeals.

[38] In reality, many years of litigation lie ahead if this settlement is not approved.

vi. Recommendations of neutral parties

[39] The parties concede that they would not have reached this settlement without the assistance of the Honourable Mr. Bastarache, C.C., Q.C., who has been a neutral participant in the settlement negotiations since April 2016.

[40] Additionally the parties were assisted by a number of experts who helped frame the terms of settlement, including the internal change initiatives within the RCMP, and also helped develop the compensation protocol.

[41] Psychologist Dr. Daylen helped to develop the recommended assessment protocol for this matter and proposed the contents of the different compensation levels which later became integrated, with some modification, into the Settlement Agreement.

[42] Professor Llewellyn is a Law Professor with an expertise in restorative justice. She provided guidance on the structure of the settlement process to ensure it was relational and restorative. Her recommendations assisted the parties in including restorative justice features in the Settlement Agreement such as change initiatives and the public apology.

[43] Dr. Berdahl is an expert in organizational behavior and workplace harassment. She was retained to prepare a report for the certification application in the Merlo Action. Her report outlines the necessity for confidentiality in the claims process and she made recommendations on steps to advance positive cultural changes within the RCMP.

vii. Number of objectors and nature of objections

[44] As of the date of the Motion, approximately 20,000 class members were provided with notice of the certification and notice of the settlement hearing. From that mass communication, only three written objections were received. Two of the objections are from individuals who are not included in the class definition. Therefore these were in effect objections to the class definition rather than objections to the settlement. The one other objection was from an individual who objected to the settlement amount on the basis that her claim would exceed the amounts provided for in the settlement. In which case, opting out of the settlement would have been the option open to this particular claimant.

viii. Presence of good faith and absence of collusion

[46] Negotiations towards settlement in the Merlo Action started in early 2014 and continued into 2015. In January 2016, negotiations in both the Merlo and Davidson actions were undertaken and culminated in the Settlement Agreement. There were a total of ten in person settlement meetings and numerous conference calls and various forms of other communications.

[47] The Parties explain that this litigation has been ongoing for over five (5) years, and that the successful rounds of negotiations included the assistance of the neutral party the Honourable Mr. Bastarache, C.C., Q.C..

[48] Legal counsel for the Plaintiffs was assisted throughout the process by a number of experts who made important contributions to the framework of the Settlement Agreement.

[49] Based on the above, I am satisfied that all parties acted in good faith and there is no evidence of collusion.

ix. Communication with class members

[50] Following the certification of this class action on January 13, 2017, a robust notice distribution scheme to potential class members was undertaken. Class counsel estimates that over 20,000 notices were sent out. Notices were also published in newspapers throughout the country.

[51] Class counsel advise that they have been contacted by over a thousand (1000) women wishing to participate in this Settlement

[52] The representative Plaintiffs have also had a hands-on role in the settlement discussions and communication with potential class members.

x. Information conveying to the court the dynamics of, and the positions taken by the parties during the negotiation

[53] The Merlo and Davidson actions were pursued as stand-alone claims and although there was some settlement discussion, both actions continued along their litigation path.

[54] As settlement negotiations in both the Merlo and Davidson actions were brought together, there were several reports addressing the issue of gender harassment within the RCMP. These reports provided the Parties with additional information as to the nature of the harassment problem in the RCMP and the steps that would be required to address the problem.

[55] In early 2014, the Defendant expressed an interest in a global settlement. Negotiations continued through 2015 and 2016. The Settlement Agreement was signed by all parties on October 6, 2016.

xi. Conclusion

[56] Having outlined and considered all the factors above, this Court finds the proposed Settlement Agreement fair, reasonable and in the best interests of the class as a whole. The Settlement Agreement is approved.

(b) Approval of the Notice Plan and Appointment of Assessor

[57] In addition to approval of the Settlement Agreement, the Parties also seek approval that the office of the Assessor (Honourable Mr. Bastarache, C.C., Q.C.) be responsible for disseminating the Notice to class members. The Honourable Mr. Bastarache, C.C., Q.C., conducted individual interviews and assessments to determine compensation in an out of court settlement for victims of sexual abuse by Catholic priests in the Diocese of Bathurst and Archdiocese of Moncton, New Brunswick. Based on his experience in this role, as well as his many years as a Supreme Court Justice, the Representative Plaintiffs believe that the Honourable Mr. Bastarache, C.C., Q.C., will fairly assess the claims and will deal with all claimants in a sensitive and empathetic manner. The Honourable Mr. Bastarache, C.C., Q.C., retained Versailles Communications to prepare a Notice Plan. The Notice will inform class members of how they may submit claims. The proposed manner of distribution for the Notice is the same as the distribution that was approved by this Court for the Notice of Certification and Settlement Approval Hearing.

[58] The Settlement Agreement is posted on the websites of Class counsel (Klein Lawyers LLP and Kim Orr Barristers P.C.), as well as on a settlement website which was created by the office of the Assessor (<https://merlodavidson.ca/en/>).

[59] The Notice will be distributed by:

- direct mail to potential class members;
- posting on the Assessor's website, Class counsel's websites, and the RCMP's website and intranet;
- publication of the Notice in major Canadian newspapers;
- an advertising campaign on Facebook; and
- posting in all RCMP physical premises.

[60] I approve the Notice Plan and I also approve the appointment of the Honorable Mr. Bastarache, C.C., Q.C., as the assessor to administer the settlement and determine which claimants are eligible for compensation pursuant to the terms of the Settlement Agreement.

(c) Relief from Rule 334.21(2)

[61] The Representative Plaintiffs seek relief from the application of Rule 334.21(2) of the Rules, supra, which states:

334.21 (2) A class member shall be excluded from the class proceeding if the member does not, before the expiry of the time for opting out specified in the certifying order, discontinue a proceeding brought by the member that raises the common questions of law or fact set out in that order.

334.21 (2) Le membre est exclu du recours collectif s'il ne se désiste pas, avant l'expiration du délai prévu à cette fin dans l'ordonnance d'autorisation, d'une instance qu'il a introduite et qui soulève les points de droit ou de fait communs énoncés dans cette ordonnance.

[62] They rely upon Rule 55 of the Rules which states:

55 In special circumstances, in a proceeding, the Court may vary a rule or dispense with compliance with a rule.

55 Dans des circonstances spéciales, la Cour peut, dans une instance, modifier une règle ou exempter une partie ou une personne de son application.

[63] They argue that this would be an appropriate case to apply the relief provided for in Rule 55.

[64] This Court has held in Chow v Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration), [1998] 161 FTR 156 at para 8, 46 Imm LR (2d) 231, in explaining the requirement of special circumstances, that “implicit, in special circumstances is, on the one hand, justice and, on the other hand, that there be no prejudice.” This Court further noted in Pearson v Canada (2000), 195 FTR 31 at para 5, 100 ACWS (3d) 44, that “any application of rule 55 must accord with the general principles espoused by the Federal Court Rules”.

3 These Rules shall be interpreted and applied so as to secure the just, most expeditious and least expensive determination of every proceeding on its merits.

3 Les présentes règles sont interprétées et appliquées de façon à permettre d’apporter une solution au litige qui soit juste et la plus expéditive et économique possible.

[66] The Parties submit that the Representative Plaintiffs should not be excluded from this proceeding, since allowing them to participate in the settlement claims process does not cause prejudice, actual or otherwise, upon the Defendant as they will discontinue the British Columbia and Ontario actions upon approval of the Settlement Agreement by this Court. They argue that the application of Rule 55 accords with the general principles of the Rules and specifically encompassed in Rule 3.

[67] The Court accepts these submissions and finds that, in these specific circumstances, Rule 334.21(2) shall not apply to the Representative Plaintiffs.

(d) Honorarium to Ms. Merlo and Ms. Davidson

[68] The payment of an honorarium of $15,000 to each the Representative Plaintiffs is requested on the basis that this is an exceptional case and the contributions of the Representative Plaintiffs are worthy of recognition in the form of honorarium payment. If approved, the payment will be payable out of Class counsel fees.

[69] This request is based upon their important contributions to this litigation and their considerable time and efforts as the Representative Plaintiffs. They each commenced their own class actions in BC and Ontario, and actively advanced those claims. This included publicizing their personal account of the gender and sexual orientation harassment which they endured within the RCMP. This has required the public re-living of painful events.

[70] They gave their name and gave their face to high profile class litigation and by necessity, they forfeited their privacy for the benefit of many others who can remain anonymous. Being prepared to spearhead such a cause comes at a personal cost and a deprivation of privacy.

[71] They have both travelled for the litigation and Settlement meetings, they have given media interviews to raise awareness of this class proceeding, and encouraged other class members to come forward with their experiences. They have had personal contact with hundreds of potential class members.

[72] In Robinson v Rochester Financial Ltd, 2012 ONSC 911 at para 43, [2012] 5 CTC 24, a list of considerations were identified in assessing whether the representative plaintiff(s) should receive an honorarium, as follows:

- (a) active involvement in the initiation of the litigation and retainer of counsel;
- (b) exposure to a real risk of costs;
- (c) significant personal hardship or inconvenience in connection with the prosecution of the litigation;
- (d) time spent and activities undertaken in advancing the litigation;
- (e) communication and interaction with other class members; and
- (f) participation at various stages in the litigation, including discovery, settlement negotiations and trial.

[73] In Eidoo v Infineon Technologies AG, 2015 ONSC 2675, [2015] OJ No 2062, citing at paragraph 13 The Law of Class Actions in Canada, by Warren K. Winkler et al, (Toronto: Canada Law Book, 2014), the Ontario Superior Court explains how usually compensation to the representative plaintiff is appropriate uniquely in situations where the plaintiff has provided services which are over and above the usual duties of a representative plaintiff.

[74] I have no difficulty concluding that this case warrants the award of honorarium to both Representative Plaintiffs, Ms. Merlo and Ms. Davidson, in the amount of $15,000.00 each.

(e) Class Counsel Fees and Disbursements

[75] Approval of legal fees in the amount of 15% is also sought. Both Representative Plaintiffs signed contingency fee agreements agreeing to pay 33.3%, however, because of the structure of the settlement, class members will only be paying 15% of recovery toward legal fees.

[76] No objections to the legal fees were raised.

[77] The Federal Rules provide:

Approval of payments

334.4 No payments, including indirect payments, shall be made to a solicitor from the proceeds recovered in a class proceeding unless the payments are approved by a judge.

Approbation des paiements

334.4 Tout paiement direct ou indirect à un avocat, prélevé sur les sommes recouvrées à l'issue d'un recours collectif, doit être approuvé par un juge.

[78] In Cardozo v Becton, Dickinson & Co, (supra at para 25), the British Columbia Supreme Court outlined various factors to be considered by the court in assessing the reasonableness of fees. These factors are addressed below.

i. Results achieved

[79] The terms of the settlement have been outlined above and offer advantages for class members which would not have been available had the matter proceeded through litigation. The class and class period are broadly defined, and the claims-made settlement ensures each approved claim will be paid. As well, the confidential and non-adversarial claims process is a significant feature of the settlement process considering the nature of the claims.

[80] The monetary compensation available under the Settlement Agreement is reasonable and within the range of compensation that might be awarded at trial.

[81] The Settlement Agreement also provides for non-monetary benefits for class members, namely, a public apology and the implementation of measures aimed at reducing and eliminating gender and sexual orientation based harassment in the RCMP.

[82] Class counsel also successfully negotiated settlement terms that the Defendant would not rely upon limitation periods or statutory bars to any of the class claims.

[83] Class counsel will also continue to be involved in settlement administration.

ii. Risks undertaken

[84] The litigation risks assumed by Class counsel here was substantial. The fact that no other Canadian law firms filed parallel actions indicated that this matter was seen by other lawyers as being highly complex and unlikely to succeed. Furthermore, Class counsel pursued this litigation to completion on their own rather than with a consortium of counsel from various provinces.

[85] Some of the risks associated with these claims included the fact that there was little accurate information as to the extent of gender and sexual orientation based harassment in the RCMP. Counsel was also aware that securing evidence to advance the claims was likely to require years of contested litigation and discoveries. There was a risk that the class would not be certified given the plethora of individual issues involved.

[86] The Defendant opposed certification of both the Merlo and Davidson actions. Based upon the submissions filed in those actions which were included in the Motion Record, it is clear that Canada was forcefully defending the claims.

[87] These were not claims that had a guarantee of success at the end of the day.

iii. Time expended

[88] The Parties submit that Class counsel diligently litigated the actions and engaged in intense settlement negotiations. Class counsel devoted considerable time and resources to the prosecution of the actions. In some cases, they hired personnel specifically to work on these claims. Many of the class members were interviewed and a total of six experts were retained. Class counsel also covered the costs of disbursements. By taking on litigation of this magnitude, counsel states that they were unable to explore or embark on other potentially lucrative class actions.

iv. Complexity of the matter

[89] This was multi-faceted complex class litigation with substantive legal complexity involving novel claims with potential legislative barriers. Expertise in in the areas of psychology, psychiatry, and the study of gender dynamics and gender and sexual orientation based harassment and discrimination were necessary. Additionally, class members were seeking more than monetary compensation. They wanted a public apology from the RCMP for the harassment experienced by class members, and they wanted to see initiatives and changes implemented within the RCMP to reduce and eliminate harassment. While relief of this nature is outside the litigation realm, these were factors which the class members insisted upon and which added a level of complexity for Class counsel.

v. Degree of responsibility assumed by counsel

[90] The Merlo Action in British Columbia was commenced in 2012 and the Davidson Action in Ontario was commenced in 2015. No other parallel actions were filed. Class counsel assumed complete responsibility for commencing and prosecuting this litigation.

vi. Importance of the matter to the client

[91] As indicated in the Merlo and Davidson Affidavits, this was deeply personal litigation. Their claims were for serious psychological injuries that impacted their lives and the lives of other class members in many diverse and significant ways.

[92] The Plaintiffs also wanted a settlement which would have a lasting impact of the culture of the RCMP by helping reduce the incidents of gender and sexual orientation based discrimination. Their insistence on an apology and change initiatives demonstrates the importance of this this litigation to the Plaintiffs.

vii. Quality and skill of counsel

[93] As noted above, there is no question that Class counsel is highly experienced in the specialized field of class actions. Their experience has been noted in other class action decisions

viii. Ability of the class to pay

[94] Given the nature of the defences raised by the Defendant, class members could likely not have been able to afford to retain legal counsel on a fee for service basis. Of note as well is that Class counsel here did not seek any third party litigation financing in this case. In doing so, Class counsel incurred added financial risk.

ix. Client and the class' expectation

[95] By signing the contingency fee agreements, Ms. Merlo and Ms. Davidson expected to pay legal fees of 33.33% of whatever they recovered. However, as Class counsel was able to negotiate a contribution from the Defendant toward Class Counsel Fees, the amount for legal fees that will be paid by each class member will only be 15%.

[96] The Notice of Settlement Approval Hearing informs class members that Class counsel will ask the Court to approve a Class Counsel Fee of 15% payable from the compensation awarded to each class member under the Settlement Agreement.

[97] No class member objected to the legal fees.

x. Fees in similar cases

[98] The Parties submit that a contingency fee of 33.33% in a class action has been held to be presumptively valid on the basis of the decisions in Middlemiss v Penn West Petroleum Ltd, 2016 ONSC 3537, [2016] OJ No 2936; Cannon v Funds for Canada Foundation, 2013 ONSC 7686, [2013] OJ No 5825.

xi. Conclusion

[99] I am satisfied in all of the circumstances that the fees meet the criteria for approval and I therefore approve the fees. In addition to being reasonable, the fees are less than those provided for by the contingency fee agreements signed by both Ms. Merlo and Ms. Davidson. I would also note that the fact that Class counsel was willing to act on a contingency fee basis for these claims, which faced a number of hurdles, achieves one of the policy objectives of class proceedings which is access to justice for those who might not otherwise be able to afford legal representation.

[100] Furthermore, pursuant to the Settlement Agreement, the Defendant has agreed to pay the reasonable disbursements. Accordingly there will be no deduction from the amounts paid to the class members for disbursements.

ORDER in T-1685-16THIS COURT ORDERS that:

- 1) The Settlement of this action as set out in the Settlement Agreement, including the Recitals, and Schedules and Appendices, in Schedule “A” attached to this Order, is fair and reasonable and in the best interests of Class Members, and is approved.
- 2) The Settlement and this Order are binding on the Parties and on every Class Member, including Persons Under Disability, unless they opted out or are deemed to have opted out on or before the expiry of the Opt Out Period, being March 29, 2017, and are binding whether or not such Class Member claims or receives compensation.
- 3) The Parties to the Settlement Agreement may make non-substantive amendments to the Settlement Agreement, including its Schedules and Appendices, provided that each Party to the Settlement Agreement agrees in writing to any such amendments.
- 4) The Notice to Class Members of the approval of the settlement of this action shall be substantially in the form and content attached to this Order as Schedule “B” (the “Notice”). The Notice shall be distributed in accordance with the Notice Plan attached to this Order as Schedule “C”.
- 5) The Notice shall be published within 10 business days of the “Implementation Date”, as defined in the Settlement Agreement.
- 6) The Defendant, Her Majesty the Queen, shall pay the amounts required under the Settlement Agreement, including the cost of Notice and administration of the Settlement.
- 7) The Honourable Michel Bastarache, C.C., Q.C., is appointed as Assessor to administer the Settlement.

- 8) The Assessor cannot be compelled to be a witness in any civil or criminal proceeding, administrative proceeding, grievance or arbitration where the information sought relates, directly or indirectly, to information obtained by the Assessor by reason of the Settlement or the settlement claims process.
- 9) No documents received by the Assessor, directly or indirectly, by reason of the Settlement or the settlement claims process, are producible in any proceedings.
- 10) The RCMP and Canada shall release to the Assessor information and documents required by him or as otherwise required by the Settlement Agreement, including in the Schedules and Appendices.
- 11) Rule 334.21(2) does not apply to the Representative Plaintiffs, Janet Merlo and Linda Gillis Davidson, and neither is excluded from this proceeding despite not having discontinued the parallel proceedings in British Columbia and Ontario (namely, Supreme Court of British Columbia Action No. S-122255, Merlo v Canada (AG) and Ontario Superior Court of Justice Action No. CV-15-52473600CP, Davidson v Canada (AG) collectively the “Parallel Actions”) prior to the opt out deadline.
- 12) The contribution to Class Counsel Fees payable by the Defendant, in the amount of $12 million plus applicable sales taxes is approved, and is ordered to be paid by the Defendant to Class Counsel within 30 days following the Court Approval Date. The sum of $6 million plus applicable sales taxes will be paid, by wire transfer, to each of Klein Lawyers LLP and Kim Orr Barristers P.C.
- 13) A payment by each Class Member of a Class Counsel Fee of 15%, plus applicable sales taxes, of the individual compensation paid to the Class Member under the Settlement, is approved. The 15% Class Counsel Fee is not payable on amounts paid to Class Members for reimbursement of out of pocket or travel expenses pursuant to Article 11.04 of the Settlement Agreement. The 15% Class Counsel Fee payable by each Class Member will be calculated by the Assessor who will hold back the Class Counsel Fee and applicable sales tax from the compensation otherwise payable to the Class Member. The Assessor will remit 50% of the Class Counsel Fees plus applicable sales tax to Klein Lawyers LLP and 50% plus applicable sales tax to Kim Orr Barristers P.C. by wire transfer on the first business day of each month for all payments made to Class Members in the prior month.

- 14) Upon the Court Approval Date, the Defendant, Her Majesty the Queen, and any and all other applicable provincial and territorial Ministers and governments who are liable for the actions of RCMP members acting as provincial constables under provincial legislation and/or other provincial-federal policing agreements, and their respective officers, agents, servants and employees (“Releasees”), are forever and absolutely released separately and severally by the Class Members from any and all actions, including claims made under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, causes of action, common law, Quebec civil law and statutory liabilities, contracts, claims, grievances and complaints, and demands of every nature or kind available, asserted or which could have been asserted, whether known or unknown, including for damages, contribution, indemnity, costs, expenses and interest which any Class Member ever had, now has, or may hereafter have, directly or indirectly, arising from or in any way relating to, or by way of any subrogated or assigned right, or otherwise in relation to gender and/or sexual orientation based discrimination, bullying and Harassment while working in the RCMP that occurred during the Class Period (the “Released Claims”), and this release includes any such claim made or that could have been made in any proceeding

- including the Parallel Actions whether asserted directly by the Class Member or by any other person, group or legal entity on behalf of or as representative for the Class Member.
- 15) The obligations assumed by the Defendant, Her Majesty the Queen, under the Settlement Agreement are in full and final satisfaction of any and all claims by Class Members against the Releasees, including claims made under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, relating to or arising from gender and/or sexual orientation based discrimination, bullying and Harassment while working in the RCMP that occurred during the Class Period.
 - 16) Class Members are barred from making any claim or taking or continuing any proceedings arising out of, or relating to, the Released Claims against any Releasee or other person, corporation or entity that might claim damages and/or contribution and indemnity and/or other relief against the defendant, Her Majesty the Queen, including relief of a monetary, declaratory, or injunctive nature, under the provisions of the Negligence Act, RSO, 1990, c N-1, or its counterparts in other jurisdictions, the Police Act, RSBC 1996, c 367 or its counterpart in other jurisdictions, the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the common law, Quebec civil law, or any statutory liability.
 - 17) The Representative Plaintiffs, Janet Merlo and Linda Gillis Davidson, are each awarded an honorarium of $15,000, which will be paid out of Class Counsel Fees.
 - 18) This Court shall retain continuing jurisdiction over the Settlement and its implementation, interpretation and enforcement.

PRESENT: The Honourable Mr. Justice Mandamin

BETWEEN:

PICTOU LANDING BAND COUNCIL AND MAURINA BEADLE

Applicants

and

ATTORNEY GENERAL OF CANADA

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT

[1] The Pictou Landing Band Council and Ms. Maurina Beadle apply for judicial review of the decision of Ms. Barbara Robinson, Manager, Social Programs, Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Canada (AANDC), not to reimburse the Pictou Landing Band Council (PLBC) for in-home health care to one of its members beyond a normative standard of care identified by Ms. Robinson.

[2] The Applicants also request that the Court make an order pursuant to section 24(1) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, Part 1 of the Constitution Act, 1982, being Schedule B to the Canada Act 1982 (UK), 1982, c 11 [Charter], directing the Respondent to reimburse the PLBC for exceptional costs incurred providing home care to Jeremy Meawasige and his mother, Ms. Beadle, from May 27, 2010 to the present.

[3] I have decided to grant the application for judicial review because I have determined Jordan's Principle is applicable in this case. Having decided as I have, I need not consider the application for an order for reimbursement pursuant to section 24(1) of the Charter.

[4] My reasons follow.

Background

[5] The Pictou Landing Band Council is the elected government of the Pictou Landing First Nation and makes governance decisions concerning its members, including the allocation of funding received from the federal government through block contribution agreements. This includes funding from AANDC and Health Canada to deliver continuing care services to members in need on the Pictou Landing Reserve.

[6] The other Applicant is Ms. Maurina Beadle, a 55 year-old member of the Pictou Landing First Nation. Her son, Jeremy Meawasige, is a teenager with multiple disabilities and high care needs. He has been diagnosed with hydrocephalus, cerebral palsy, spinal curvature and autism.

Jeremy can only speak a few words and cannot walk unassisted. He is incontinent and needs total personal care including showering, diapering, dressing, spoon feeding, and all personal hygiene needs. He can become self-abusive at times, and needs to be restrained for his own safety.

[7] Jeremy lives on the Pictou Landing Indian Reserve. Ms. Beadle, his mother, is Jeremy's primary caregiver and she was able to care for her son in the family home without government support or assistance until Ms. Beadle suffered a stroke in May 2010.

[8] After her stroke, Ms. Beadle was unable to continue to care for Jeremy without assistance. She was hospitalized for several weeks, and when she was released, required a wheelchair and assistance with her own personal care. The PLBC immediately started providing 24 hour care for both Ms. Beadle and Jeremy in their home. Between May 27, 2010 and March 31, 2011, the PLBC spent $82,164.00 on in-home care services for Ms. Beadle and Jeremy.

[9] The PLBC continued to provide home care support to Ms. Beadle and Jeremy. In October 2010, the Pictou Landing Health Centre arranged for an assessment of the family's needs. Since that time, the Health Centre has provided the family with in-home services as recommended by the assessment. From Monday to Friday, a personal care worker is present from 8:30 a.m. to 11:30 p.m. Over the weekends, there is 24 hour care. This level of care meets Jeremy's need for 24-hour care, less what his family can provide. The family providers are Ms. Beadle, to the degree she has recovered from her stroke and Jeremy's older brother, Jonavan, who attends to assist.

[10] Ms. Beadle and her son Jeremy have a deep bond with each other. His mother is often the only person who can understand his communication and needs. She spent many hours training him to walk and helping him with special exercises. She discovered his love of music and sings to him when he is upset or does not want to cooperate. Her voice calms him and can make him desist in self-abusive behaviour. She takes him on the pow-wow trail, travelling to communities where pow-wows are held. She says Jeremy is happiest when he is dancing with other First Nations people and singing to traditional music. Jeremy has never engaged in self-abusive behaviour on those occasions.

[11] By February 2011, the costs associated with caring for the family were approximately $8,200 per month. This represented nearly 80% of the PLBC's total monthly budget for personal and home care services funded by AANDC under the Assisted Living Program (ALP) and by Health Canada under the Home and Community Care Program (HCCP).

The Assisted Living Program and the Home and Community Care Program

[12] The ALP is administered by the PLBC and has both an institutional and in-home care component. The ALP provides funding for non-medical, social support services to seniors, adults with chronic illness, and children and adults with disabilities (mental and physical) living on reserve and includes such things as attendant care, housekeeping, laundry, meal preparation, and non-medical transportation.

[13] The Home and Community Care Program is also administered by the PLBC. Under the HCCP, the PLBC is required to prioritize and fund essential services before support services and Health Canada spells out what falls under each of these headings. The HCCP provides funding to assist with delivery of basic in-home health care services which require a licensed/certified health practitioner or the supervision of such a person. The PLBC determines how the contribution agreement dollars for the HCCP are spent in the provision of basic in-home health care services.

[14] The ALP and the HCCP are programs designed to complement each other, but not to provide duplicate funding for the same service. If a type of care, such as respite care, is already being paid for by one of the programs, it will not be an eligible expense under the other.

[15] Under the current block contribution agreement between the PLBC and Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Canada [AANDC] the PLBC receives $55,552.00 for funding eligible ALP services. Under the block contribution agreement between PLBC and Health Canada, the PLBC receives $75,364.00.

Request for Funding

[16] On February 16, 2011, Ms. Philippa Pictou, the Health Director at the Pictou Landing First Nation Health Centre contacted Ms. Susan Ross, the Atlantic Regional Home and Community Care Coordinator at Health Canada. Ms. Pictou expressed her opinion that Jeremy's case met the definition of Jordan's Principle and asked Ms. Ross to participate in case conferencing regarding his needs.

[17] Jordan's Principle was developed in response to a sad case involving a severely disabled First Nation child who remained in a hospital for over two years due to jurisdictional disputes between different levels of government over payment of home care on his First Nation community. The child never had the opportunity to live in a family environment because he died before the dispute could be resolved. Jordan's Principle aims to prevent First Nations children from being denied prompt access to services because of jurisdiction disputes between different levels of government.

[18] Jordan's Principle is a child-first principle that says the government department first contacted for a service readily available off reserve must pay for it while pursuing repayment of expenses. Jordan's Principle is a mechanism to prevent First Nations children from being denied equal access to benefits or protections available to other Canadians as a result of Aboriginal status.

[19] On February 28, 2011, a case conference was held regarding Jeremy's needs. In attendance were provincial care assessors from the Nova Scotia Department of Health and Wellness, the Pictou Landing Community Health Nurse, representatives of the PLBC, and Ms. Ross and Ms. Deborah Churchill on behalf of Canada.

[20] On April 19, 2011, a second case conference took place to discuss Jeremy's needs. Because Ms. Pictou had earlier requested that Jeremy's situation be considered a Jordan's Principle case, Ms. Barbara Robinson, the Jordan's Principle focal point for AANDC, was asked to participate. Both Ms. Ross and Ms. Robinson attended the second case conference, as did Mr. Troy Lees, a civil servant with the Nova Scotia provincial Department of Community Services.

[21] At the second case conference, Mr. Lees explained what the province would provide to a child with similar needs and circumstances off reserve. He explained there was a departmental directive that a family living off reserve could receive up to a maximum of $2,200 per month in respite services. Mr. Lees also stated that the province would not provide 24-hour care in the home by funding the equivalent to the costs of institutional care.

[22] On May 12, 2011, Ms. Pictou wrote to Health Canada and AANDC officials to formally request additional funding so that the PLBC could continue to provide home care services to Ms. Beadle and Jeremy. Attached to the request was a briefing note describing Ms. Beadle's and Jeremy's situation and their home care needs. Also attached was a copy of the Nova Scotia Supreme Court's March 29, 2011 decision in Nova Scotia (Department of Community Services) v Boudreau, 2011 NSSC 126, 302 NSR (2d) 50 [Boudreau].

[23] On May 27, 2011, Ms. Robinson, the Manager for Social Programs and the Jordan's Principle focal point for AANDC, emailed her decision to Ms. Pictou. The decision was delivered on behalf of both AANDC and Health Canada. In her decision, Ms. Robinson concluded there was no jurisdictional dispute in this matter as both levels of government agreed that the funding requested was above what would be provided to a child living on or off reserve. Ms. Robinson determined that Jeremy's case did not meet the federal definition of a Jordan's Principle case.

Decision Under Review

[24] Ms. Robinson [the Manager] informed Ms. Pictou of her decision to refuse the PLBC's request for additional funding for Jeremy's case by an extensive email dated May 27, 2011. She advised that she had an opportunity to confer with provincial health authorities and verified that the request for the provision of 24-hour home care for Jeremy would exceed the normative standard of care.

[25] The Manager recognized the First Nation's right to enhance the services that are provided to this family through own source revenues, but emphasized that services that exceed the normative standard of care and which are outside of the federal funding authorities would not be reimbursed through the AANDC Assisted Living or Health Canada Home and Community Care Programs.

[26] The Manager went on to state that provincial officials had confirmed that Jeremy's care needs would meet the placement criteria for long term institutional care, and that depending upon the classification of the long term care facility, the expenses associated with Jeremy's care would be fully funded by the AANDC Assisted Living, Institutional Care Program and/or the Province of Nova Scotia. However, she recognized this was a personal decision and that Jeremy's mother did not wish to place her child in a long term care facility.

[27] The Manager concluded by noting that although the case did not meet the federal definition of a Jordan's Principle case, AANDC and Health Canada would continue to work with stakeholders and to participate in case conferencing as required.

Relevant Legislation

[28] The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, Part 1 of the Constitution Act, 1982, being Schedule B to the Canada Act 1982 (UK), 1982, c 11 provides:

15. (1) Every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

15. (1) La loi ne fait acception de personne et s'applique également à tous, et tous ont droit à la même protection et au même bénéfice de la loi, indépendamment de toute discrimination, notamment des discriminations fondées sur la race, l'origine nationale ou ethnique, la couleur, la religion, le sexe, l'âge ou les déficiences mentales ou physiques.

[29] The Social Assistance Act, RSNS 1989, c 432 [SAA] provides:

9 (1) Subject to this Act and the regulations the social services committee shall furnish assistance to all persons in need, as defined by the social services committee, who reside in the municipal unit.

[Emphasis added]

[30] The Municipal Assistance Regulations, NS Reg 76-81 provides:

1. In these regulations

(e) "assistance" means the provision of money, goods or services to a person in need, including

(i) items of basic requirement: food, clothing, shelter, fuel, utilities, household supplies and personal requirements,

(ii) items of special requirement: furniture, living allowances, moving allowances, special transportation, training allowances, special school requirements, special employment requirements, funeral and burial expenses and comforts allowances. The Director may approve other items of special requirement he deems essential to the well being of the recipient,

(iii) health care services: reasonable medical, surgical, obstetrical, dental, optical and nursing services which are not covered under the Hospital Insurance Plan or under the Medical Services Insurance Plan,

(iv) care in homes for special care,

(v) social services, including family counselling, homemakers, home care and home nursing services,

(vi) rehabilitation services;

Arguments of the Parties

Applicants' Submissions

[31] The Applicants organized their submissions according to the issues they identified.

What is the appropriate standard of review?

[32] The Applicants submit the central issue raised in this judicial review is whether the decision-maker ought to have exercised her discretion to provide additional funding to the PLBC for continuing care services. The Applicants submit that in the particular circumstances of this case, a positive decision was necessary to ensure Jeremy and Ms. Beadle continue to receive equal benefit under the law as guaranteed by section 15 of the Charter. The Applicants submit the appropriate standard of review for issues involving the Charter is invariably one of correctness.

[33] The Applicants also submit that the Respondent erred in law by failing to properly interpret and apply the Nova Scotia SAA in accordance with the jurisprudence of the Nova Scotia Supreme Court. As an error of law, the Applicants submit the standard of review on this issue must also be correctness.

[34] Finally, the Applicants allege that the impugned decision was based on a serious misapprehension of the evidence following a gravely flawed fact-finding process. The Applicants submit this Court has held that the Government of Canada may be held to a reasonableness standard when exercising discretionary power pursuant to contribution funding agreements with First Nations Bands.

Did the decision-maker err in law in interpreting and applying the Nova Scotia Social Assistance Act?

[35] The Applicants submit the ALP Manual and the relevant funding agreement with the PLBC both state that funding is provided to bands to ensure individuals living on reserve receive services “reasonably comparable” to those provided by the province. The Applicants submit the Respondent denied additional funding to the PLBC on the grounds that Jeremy and Ms. Beadle would only be entitled to home-care services to a maximum of $2,200 per month if they lived off reserve. The Applicants argue that in reaching this decision, the Respondent committed an error of law.

[36] In Nova Scotia, social services and assistance for people with disabilities are provided under the SAA. Section 9 of the SAA states that, subject to regulations, the government “shall furnish assistance to all persons in need”. Section 18 of the SAA provides the Governor in Council to make regulations pursuant to the SAA. Under s 1(e)(iv) of the Municipal Assistance Regulations, NS Reg 76-81 “assistance” is defined to include “home care”.

[37] Nova Scotia’s Direct Family Support Policy from 2006 states that the funding for respite to people with disabilities “shall not normally exceed” $2,200 per month. The Policy also states that additional funding may be granted in “exceptional circumstances”. The Applicants submit Ms. Robinson conceded in cross-examination that Jeremy and Ms. Beadle met much of the criteria under the “exceptional circumstances” portion of the policy. However, the Applicants submit Ms. Robinson concluded this Policy did not reflect Nova Scotia’s normative standard of care because a provincial official had issued a separate directive that stated that no funding in excess of $2,200 would ever be provided.

[38] The Applicants submit that in cross-examination Ms. Robinson also indicated that she had read the judgment in Boudreau, where the Nova Scotia Supreme Court concluded that the $2,200 monthly cap was not lawful or binding in any way.

[39] The Applicants cited from the Court decision in Boudreau at paras 61 & 62 stating:

What does the SAA obligate the Department to do in the case at Bar?
I note s. 27 of the SAA permits regulations “prescribing the maximum amount of assistance that may be granted” but no regulations relevant to the case at Bar are in place.

How much “assistance” as defined in the Municipal Assistance Regulations, is the “care” obligation vis-à-vis Brian Boudreau? In my view, the obligations of the Department pursuant to the SAA and Regulations are met when the “assistance” reasonably meets the “need” in each specific case.

[Emphasis added]

[40] The Applicants submit that Ms. Robinson stated in cross-examination that the Boudreau judgment was “not relevant” to her decision. They submit this is an error of law and that the decision must be quashed for this reason alone.

Was the decision based on a serious misunderstanding of the evidence?

[41] The Applicants submit that even if the refusal to provide additional funding to the PLBC is not found to be discriminatory, the decision remains unreasonable as it was based on a serious misapprehension of evidence and on a gravely flawed fact finding process.

[42] The Applicants argue that the decision is unreasonable because it was based on an erroneous understanding of what was actually being requested by the PLBC. The Applicants point to Ms. Robinson’s decision of May 27, 2011 to illustrate that Ms. Robinson denied the PLBC’s request on the basis that 24 hour care was not available off reserve. However, the Applicants submit this was not what was requested by the PLBC.

[43] The Applicants point to a particular paragraph in Ms. Pictou's Briefing Note which was attached to the request for additional funding which states:

Jeremy Meawasige's reasonable "need" for "homecare" is 24 hours a day, 7 days a week (less the time his family can reasonably attend to his care), but which department is obliged to meet his care needs?

The Applicants submit that this demonstrates that Ms. Robinson erred by characterizing the PLBC's request as funding for 24-hour services as well as additional assistance for meal preparation and light housekeeping.

[44] The Applicants argue that since Ms. Robinson failed to understand what was requested by the PLBC, it cannot be said that the request for additional funding was properly or fairly considered. The Applicants submit that Courts have held that a decision-maker's misapprehension of facts or evidence constitutes a palpable and overriding error. Crane v Ontario (Director, Disability Support Program), (2006), 83 OR (3d) 321 (ON CA) at paras 35-36. The Applicants submit that in this case, Ms. Robinson's misapprehension of the PLBC's request not only affected the fact-finding process, but it formed the very basis for the denial of the request. The Applicants submit this amounts to an unreasonable error.

[45] The Applicants submit Ms. Robinson also ignored relevant information before her. The Applicants argue the provincial Home Care Policy confers up to $6,600 per month in home care services to people with disabilities, and is not capped at $2,200. The Applicants argue that presented with this evidence, Ms. Robinson's assertion that the normative standard of care off reserve is invariably limited to $2,200 per month is untenable and that this amounts to an error in law.

Did the decision-maker exercise her discretion in a manner that violated section 15(1) of the Charter?

[46] The Applicants claim that the decision to deny additional funding to the PLBC so that it could continue providing Jeremy and Ms. Beadle with home care was discriminatory and contrary to s. 15(1) of the Charter. The Applicants submit that while the federal government may enter into contribution agreements with Band Councils to provide services, such agreements cannot supersede its obligations under the Charter. The Applicants also submit that the government's exercise of discretionary powers must conform to the Charter. The Applicants argue that Ms. Robinson had a duty to consider the requests for additional funding under the relevant agreements in a manner that respects the Beadles' rights to receive equal benefits compared to those residing off reserve in their province of residence.

[47] The Applicants submit that for First Nations people living on reserve, Jordan's Principle is a means by which the fundamental objectives of s. 15(1) can be achieved.

[48] The Applicants argue that the exceptional and unanticipated health needs of the Beadle family jeopardize the PLBC's ability to provide the services the family reasonably requires and would likely be entitled to off reserve. The Applicants submit that Ms. Robinson had a duty to exercise her discretion under the relevant funding agreements in a manner that conforms to s. 15(1) of the Charter.

[49] The Applicant also argues that infringement under s. 15(1) cannot be justified under s. 1 of the Charter.

Respondent's Submissions

[50] The Respondent's submissions are similarly organized according to the issues identified by the Respondent.

The standard of review is reasonableness

[51] The Respondent submits the question of whether the service provided by the PLBC exceeded the provincial normative standard of care is a question of fact and requires a decision maker to gather facts about the assistance needs of the claimant, the treatments required, and the nature of the disabilities at issue. The Respondent asserts that it also requires fact gathering about the services that are currently available to similar people living off reserve and gathering factual information from provincial authorities and the federal program requirements. The Respondent submits the decision maker is entitled to give significant weight to the definition of the normative standard of care provided by the provincial authorities.

With respect to the assessment of the request made by the Applicants, the Respondent submits the determination of what was actually requested is a question of fact. Ms. Robinson was required to review Jeremy's situation and determine what their request constituted based on all of the material submitted. The Respondent submits that the Supreme Court of Canada in Dunsmuir v New Brunswick, 2008 SCC 9 [Dunsmuir] has determined that where a question is a factual determination which depends purely on the weighing of evidence, the applicable standard of review is reasonableness. The Respondent submits that where, as here, the underlying factual and legal issues cannot be separated, the appropriate standard of review is still reasonableness. Dunsmuir at paras 53-54.

[52] The Respondent submits that the standard of reasonableness in the present case is particularly appropriate because the decision maker was asked to make a determination of eligibility under a federal policy for which she was the expert designated authority in a discrete and special administrative regime, with particular expertise, and with the unique ability to interact with provincial authorities whose cooperation is required to make the necessary determination. The Respondent submits that the reasonableness standard is the most reflective of the nature of the inquiry and the context in which it takes place.

[53] Regarding the Charter issue, the Respondent submits there is no standard of review of this issue in this Court. The Respondent argues that the Charter issue is a matter of constitutional law and not administrative law. This is the first time that the s. 15 argument has been raised in this matter. The Respondent submits this is the Court of first instance for the determination of the constitutional question.

Jordan's Principle was not engaged in this case

[54] The Respondent submits that in order to determine whether Jordan's Principle was engaged, Ms. Robinson had to determine if there was a jurisdictional dispute between Canada and Nova Scotia regarding the provision of funding for Jeremy's care and if the funding provided by Canada met the normative standard of care in Nova Scotia.

[55] The Respondent submits there was no jurisdictional dispute. Both Canada and Nova Scotia agreed that Jeremy's situation entitled him to receive institutional care and the Province acknowledged it would pay for those services over and above federal authority.

[56] The Respondent argues that Ms. Robinson determined the normative standard of care for in-home services in Nova Scotia was $2,200 per month as a result of her consultation with provincial officials from multiple departments, and after raising with them the applicability of the SAA, the Direct Family Support Policy, the Health and Wellness Program, and the recent decision of the Nova Scotia Supreme Court in Boudreau. The Respondent submits Ms. Robinson brought all of the Applicants' concerns and arguments before the provincial officials who informed her that the amount Jeremy would receive if he lived off reserve would be no more than $2,200.

[57] The Respondent asserts that Ms. Robinson's approach to determining the normative standard of care was correct and her conclusion that the request was beyond the normative standard of care was reasonable. The Respondent submits the provincial officials were in the best position to say what services are available to residents of the province living off reserve and thus using this information as a basis for her decision was reasonable.

[58] Regarding the Applicants' submissions on the applicability of the Boudreau case, the Respondent submits Boudreau is a case about exceptional circumstances to the provincial standard of care but does not purport to change the standard of care itself. The provincial authority had already determined that Boudreau required in-home care in an amount less than what the PLBC has provided here. Also, the $2,200 limit had not previously been applied in Boudreau's case because he had been "grandfathered".

[59] The Respondent submits that the situation in Boudreau is quite different from Jeremy's because Boudreau was receiving exceptional circumstances funding prior to the October 2006 Directive from the Department of Community Services that indicated the maximum for respite in-home care was $2,200 per month, with no exceptions. Moreover, the Respondent submits Canada and Nova Scotia have already determined that the applicable standard for Jeremy is institutional, not respite care. The Respondent submits the Applicants are trying to use the Boudreau case to create a new standard of care that neither the Province nor Canada recognizes.

The request for additional funding was properly assessed

[60] The Respondent submits the evidence is clear that the Applicants requested the equivalent of 24-hour per day care, and only for Jeremy, contrary to the Applicants' arguments that Ms. Robinson misapprehended the request for additional funding.

[61] The Respondent submits the Applicants allege that they requested only funding for in-home care 24 hours per day, 7 days per week, less what Jeremy's own family could provide. For this proposition, the Respondent notes the Applicants rely on a specific sentence in the Briefing Note Ms. Pictou prepared on Jeremy's case which was sent to Health Canada and AANDC.

[62] The Respondent submits that in the immediately preceding paragraph in the Briefing Note, Ms. Pictou refers to 24 hour per day, 7 days a week care without any limitation regarding family assistance. Further, the Respondent argues that in the email with the formal request for additional funding (to which the Briefing Note was attached), Ms. Pictou stated:

Even if it is not a Jordan's Principle case, I would like either the Federal or Provincial Government to reimburse us up to the level that he would qualify for if institutionalized (estimated by Community Services to be $350 per day).

[63] The Respondent submits it was reasonable for Ms. Robinson to conclude that the Applicants had requested the funding equivalent of 24 hour per day in-home care, and to verify whether that need was beyond the normative standard of care that the province would provide for in-home care for any Nova Scotian.

[64] Even if the Applicants' request could be interpreted as 24 hours minus what family members could provide (which is not admitted), the Respondent submits Ms. Robinson's factual finding that the Applicants' funding request exceeded the provincial standard for in-home care is reasonable given the evidence.

The decision does not violate section 15(1) of the Charter.

[65] The Respondent submits the decision not to grant the request for additional funding up to the daily rate of institutional care does not discriminate against Jeremy or any other First Nations child. First, the Respondent submits the benefit the Applicants requested is not a benefit provided by law. Under the ALP and HCCP, the PLBC has funding to provide their community with reasonably comparable services to those that would be available to the off reserve population. The Respondent submits funding for those benefits was and is available to Jeremy, and he is treated no differently from any other Nova Scotian with similar needs. There is no distinction on which a discrimination claim can rest.

[66] The Respondent submits that Jordan's Principle clearly is not engaged in this case. Jordan's Principle was adopted to ensure that no First Nations child would be denied services while governments debated over the jurisdictional responsibility to provide an eligible service. The Respondent argues that what is at stake in this case is not a jurisdictional dispute at all, but a claim that the PLBC's decision to provide in-home care to one of its members beyond the normative provincial standard of care legally obliges Canada to fund such services.

[67] The Respondent submits that the evidence clearly indicates that Jeremy's needs well exceed the levels of in-home care that would be available to anyone living off reserve in Nova Scotia. This was confirmed by the provincial officials who indicated that this level of in-home care would not be available and institutionalization would be the supported option. The Respondent submits this is not a case where the application of federal programs or policies denies a benefit that would otherwise be available to someone else. The Respondent argues that the Applicants are attempting to create a benefit out of the ALP and HCCP that simply does not exist at law.

[68] The Respondent submits that neither Ms. Robinson's decision, nor the structure of the ALP and HCCP funding itself creates any distinction between Jeremy and a person with similar disabilities and care needs that is not living on a reserve. The Respondent notes that under the ALP and the HCCP, Canada has elected to provide funding for services that are reasonably comparable with people living off reserve so that no such distinction will be created. In this regard, the Respondent submits Ms. Robinson was required to verify the provincial normative standard of care, and did so by specifically enquiring with the provincial authorities whether, if Jeremy was living off reserve, funding for his care needs could be provided in-home. The Respondent submits that the information provided to Ms. Robinson from the provincial authorities was clear that if Jeremy lived off reserve, the supported option would be institutionalization, and that the maximum funding he could receive for in-home care if he remained in the home was $2,200 per month.

Issues

[69] In my view the following issues arise in this case:

1. Was Jordan's Principle engaged in this case?
2. Did the Manager properly assess the request for funding?
3. Did the Manager exercise her discretion in a manner that violated section 15(1) of the Charter?

Standard of Review

[70] The Supreme Court of Canada held in Dunsmuir that there are only two standards of review: correctness for questions of law and reasonableness involving questions of mixed fact and law and fact. Dunsmuir at paras 50 and 53.

[71] The Supreme Court also held that where the standard of review has been previously determined, a standard of review analysis need not be repeated. Dunsmuir at para 62.

[72] I have been unable to find any previous jurisprudence in which Jordan's Principle and the appropriate standard of review in determining the "normative standard of care off reserve" has been considered.

[73] I note that this matter involves questions of fact, and questions of mixed law and fact as they relate to a question of policy, that of Jordan's Principle. There is no privative provision and the matters are determined by an official designated as an AANDC departmental "focal point for Jordan's Principle" which is suggestive of expertise.

[74] The Manager was required to determine what it was that the PLBC was requesting. This was a factual determination based on the submissions of Ms. Philippa Pictou and information provided in case assessments. The Manager was also charged with determining whether this case met the criteria for a Jordan's Principle case. As the Jordan's Principle focal point for AANDC the Manager had a specialized expertise in this matter.

[75] Finally, the Manager was required to determine the normative standard of care that would be available from provincial health authorities to individuals living off reserve in the same circumstances as Jeremy. There appears to be no specific procedure for her to follow to determine what the normative standard of care is. The Manager was not specifically tasked with interpreting and applying the SAA or any jurisprudence. Essentially, it was a fact-finding exercise which would attract a reasonableness standard of review.

[76] In Dunsmuir questions of mixed fact and law and fact give rise to a standard of reasonableness. Dunsmuir at paras 50 and 53. Accordingly, I agree with the Respondent that the appropriate standard of review for the Manager's decision with respect to Jordan's Principle is reasonableness.

Analysis

[77] The issues in this case revolve around the question of on-reserve, in-home support for Jeremy, a First Nation child with multiple handicaps who was cared for by his mother until the time of her stroke.

[78] The Applicants submit Canadian children with disabilities and their families rely on continuing care generally provided by provincial governments according to provincial legislation. Provincial governments do not provide the same services to First Nations children who live on reserves. The federal government assumed responsibility for funding delivery of continuing care programs and services on reserve at levels reasonably comparable to those offered in the province of residence. Such services have been historically funded and provided by the federal government through AANDC and Health Canada as a matter of policy.

[79] AANDC and Health Canada entered into a funding agreement with the PLBC to deliver services offered under the ALP and HCCP. The PLBC is required to administer the programs “according to provincial legislation and standards.” The ALP funding agreement states the PLBC can seek additional funding in “exceptional circumstances” which are not “reasonably foreseen” at the time the agreement was entered into. The HCCP agreement has a similar clause which refers to necessary increases due to “unforeseen circumstances”.

[80] Personal home care services off reserve for people with disabilities in Nova Scotia are governed by the Social Assistance Act. Section 9(1) of the SAA provides persons in need shall be provided with assistance, including home care and home nursing services. The Nova Scotia Department of Community Services implements the SAA and funds home care for people with disabilities through the Direct Family Support Policy. The policy provides that funding for home care shall not normally exceed $2,200 per month but states additional funding may be granted in exceptional circumstances.

Was Jordan’s Principle engaged in this case?

[81] As stated above, Jordan’s Principle was developed in response to a case involving a severely disabled First Nation child who remained in a hospital due to jurisdictional disputes between the federal and provincial governments over payment of home care services for Jordan in his First Nation community. The child never had the opportunity to live in a family environment because he died before the dispute could be resolved. Jordan's Principle aims to prevent First Nations children from being denied prompt access to services because of jurisdiction disputes between different levels of government.

[82] Jordan's Principle says the government department first contacted for a service readily available off reserve must pay for it while pursuing repayment of expenses. While Jordan's Principle is not enacted by legislation, it has been approved by a unanimous vote of the House of Commons. Such a motion is not binding on the government.

[83] In order to understand the status of Jordan's Principle, it is helpful to have regard to the Hansard reports of the debate in the House of Commons. The private member's motion of May 18, 2007 reads:

That, in the opinion of the House, the government should immediately adopt a child first principle, based on Jordan's Principle, to resolve jurisdictional disputes involving the care of First Nations children.

The motion was further debated on October 31, 2007 and again on December 5, 2007. At that time, a member of the governing party stated:

I support this motion, as does the government. I am pleased to report the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and officials in his department are working diligently with their partners in other federal departments, provincial and territorial governments, and first nations organizations on child and family services initiatives that will transform the commitment we make here today into a fact of daily life for first nations parents and their children.

That is not all. In addition to implementing immediate, concrete measures to apply Jordan's principle in aboriginal communities, I would like to inform the House and my colleague that the government is also implementing other measures to improve the well-being of first nations children...

The vote in the House of Commons on December 12, 2007 was unanimous, recording Yeas: 262, Nays: 0.

[84] Clearly, Jordan's principle was implemented by AANDC. Ms. Barbara Robinson, Manager – Social Programs, was designated the Jordan's Principle focal point for AANDC in Atlantic Canada. She described AANDC's implementation of Jordan's Principle in the following terms:

Jordan's Principle is a child-first principle which exists to resolve jurisdictional disputes between the federal and provincial governments regarding health and social services for on-reserve First Nations children. It ensures that a child will continue to receive care while the jurisdictional dispute between the provincial and federal government is resolved but does not create a right to funding that is beyond the normative standard of care in the child's geographic location.

Jordan's Principle applies when:

- a) The First Nations child is living on reserve (or ordinarily resident on reserve); and
- b) A First Nations child who has been assessed by health and social service professionals and has been found to have multiple disabilities requiring services from multiple service providers; and
- c) The case involves a jurisdictional dispute between a provincial government and the federal government; and
- d) Continuity of care – care for the child will continue even if there is a dispute about responsibility. The current service provider that is caring for the child will continue to pay for the necessary services until there is a resolution; and

e) Services to the child are comparable to the standard of care set by the province – a child living on reserve (or ordinarily resident on reserve) should receive the same level of care as a child with similar needs living off-reserve in similar geographic locations.

[Emphasis added]

[85] The Respondent submits there is no evidence that a jurisdictional dispute exists between the Province of Nova Scotia and the federal government for the provision of in-home care services. Both provincial health authorities and AANDC and Health Canada agree that the maximum Jeremy would receive if he lived on or off the reserve is $2,200 for home care services.

[86] I do not think the principle in a Jordan's Principle case is to be read narrowly. The absence of a monetary dispute cannot be determinative where officials of both levels of government maintain an erroneous position on what is available to persons in need of such services in the province and both then assert there is no jurisdictional dispute.

[87] I would observe that the normative standard of care in this case encompasses the provincial rules for the range of services available to persons in Nova Scotia residing off reserve. Jordan's Principle would have been meant to include services for exceptional cases where allowed for in the province where the child is geographically located.

[88] While there is an administratively prescribed maximum level of $2,200 per month for in-home services in Nova Scotia, the statutorily mandated policy has been found to encompass exceptional cases that may exceed that maximum.

[89] In Boudreau, a Nova Scotia Court heard an application for a certiorari order by the Department of Community Services of the Assistance Appeal Board decision holding that Boudreau, a 34-year old adult off reserve with multiple handicaps, was entitled to receive increased home care services under the exceptional circumstances provision of the Direct Family Services Policy and also under section 9 of the SSA.

[90] The Court found the application for certiorari to be valid because the Appeal Board erred in referring to Employment Support and Income Assistance Act instead of the SAA. However, the Court declined to make a certiorari order because it found the Department of Family Community Services had a clear obligation to provide “assistance” to Boudreau as required by section 9 of the SSA. In the alternative, the Court found even if the respite decision by the Department was discretionary, the facts accepted established the assistance was essential and the Department’s obligations included the additional funding requested.

[91] The effective result in Boudreau is that a person with multiple handicaps residing off reserve was entitled to receive home services assistance over the $2,200 maximum limit which the Court observed “cannot override the legislation and regulations”.

[92] In the case at hand, the Manager stated in cross-examination that her legal authority to fund is rooted under the Treasury Board authority referencing the applicable provincial policy. She acknowledged she was told by provincial officials that the provincial policy provides they can fund above the $2,200 level but they can’t because of the directive. She acknowledged she was informed the Department of Family Services provincial policy says there may be exceptional circumstances but provincial officials told her there would be no exceptional circumstances recognized. Ms. Robinson stated she needed to ensure she was following the provincial policy as it is being implemented.

[93] The Manager does not need to interpret the SAA and Regulations. She was clearly informed by provincial officials of the legislatively mandated policy. She knew the legislated provincial policy provided for exceptional circumstances. She knew the provincial officials were administratively disregarding the Department of Social Services legislated policy obligations. She also was put on notice by the PLBC of this issue as they had provided her with a copy the Boudreau decision. Ms. Robinson's mandate from Treasury Board does not extend to disregarding legislated provincial policy.

[94] Nova Scotia's Direct Family Support Policy states that the funding for respite to people with disabilities "shall not normally exceed" $2,200 per month. The Policy also states that additional funding may be granted in "exceptional circumstances". Finally, the Direct Family Support Policy explicitly states that First Nations children living on reserves are not eligible to services from the Province.

[95] As I stated, Jordan's principle is not to be narrowly interpreted.

[96] In this case, there is a legislatively mandated provincial assistance policy regarding provision of home care services for exceptional cases concerning persons with multiple handicaps which is not available on reserve.

[97] The Nova Scotia Court held an off reserve person with multiple handicaps is entitled to receive home care services according to his needs. His needs were exceptional and the SAA and its Regulations provide for exceptional cases. Yet a severely handicapped teenager on a First Nation reserve is not eligible, under express provincial policy, to be considered despite being in similar dire straits. This, in my view, engages consideration under Jordan's Principle which exists precisely to address situations such as Jeremy's.

[98] I find the Manager's finding that Jordan's Principle was not engaged is unreasonable.

Did the decision-maker properly assess the request for funding?

[99] The Manager took part in case conferences in which provincial health officials, First Nation officials and other AANDC and Health Canada officials took part. As a result of taking part in these case conferences, she had a full understanding of the issues and care needs Jeremy required. She was able to obtain opinions from the health assessors as to what was needed in Jeremy's case.

[100] I begin by addressing the factual issue in the PLBC request for funding. The monetary amount is necessarily linked to the extent of care home care support required for Jeremy although not for Ms. Beadle's personal needs who, presumably is within the normal scope of the ALP and HCCP funded home care services.

[101] The Applicants have stated that the request for additional funding was for "Jeremy Meawasige's reasonable 'need' for 'homecare' [as] 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, less the time his family can reasonable attend to his care.” [Emphasis added] This paragraph is found in the briefing note attached to the request for additional funding. On the other hand, the Respondent submits that the paragraph preceding the paragraph cited by the Applicants indicates that the request is for 24 hour care, 7 days a week.

[102] It is clear from the PLBC’s submissions that at the time of the Manager’s decision, the Pictou Landing Health Centre provided the family with a personal care worker from 8:30 am to 11:30 pm from Monday to Friday, and 24 hour care over the weekends by an off reserve agency. As I understand it, the 24 hour care on the weekends was in response to the Pictou Landing Health Centre being closed over the weekend rather than the need for 24-hour home care. On the evidence, the request for in home support did not cover the overnight period during weekdays.

[103] Moreover, one has to have regard for the extent of family support. It must be remembered that, before her stroke, Ms. Beadle provided for all of Jeremy’s needs without government assistance. Ms. Beadle has recovered to some extent from her stroke and helps Jeremy as she can. Jeremy’s older brother stays overnight to also assist. When one considers the importance of Ms. Beadle to Jeremy’s communicative and personal needs, it seems to me that the family support is not inconsequential. I find the request for Jeremy’s in home support was not for 24 hours a day, 7 days a week.

[104] It is not entirely clear exactly what amount is being requested. I do note, as the Respondent pointed out, the PLBC requested it would like to be reimbursed up to the level that Jeremy would qualify for if institutionalized. This amount, as estimated by the Department of Community Services, was $350 per day. The $350 per day represents the equivalent expense to have Jeremy live in an institution. However, it is clear the PLBC was not asking to institutionalize Jeremy; rather, it was proposing that as a means of quantifying the request for funding.

[105] The Manager was required to assess the factual circumstances, the submissions made and the recommendations and information provided by the in-home assessors. I conclude that the Manager erred in determining that what was being requested was 24 hour in home care. This was an unreasonable finding based on all the information provided.

Application of Jordan's Principle

[106] Issues involving Jordan's Principle are new. The principle requires the first agency contacted respond with child-first decisions leaving jurisdictional and funding decisions to be sorted out later. Parliament has unanimously endorsed Jordan's Principle and the government, while not bound by the House of Commons resolution, has undertaken to implement this important principle.

[107] The PLBC is required by its contributions agreements with AANDC and Health Canada to administer the programs and services "according to provincial legislation and standards". When Ms. Beadle suffered her stroke, the PLBC responded and provided the needed services for her and Jeremy.

[108] The PLBC is a small First Nation with some 600 members. The exceptional circumstances here have required nearly 80% of the costs of the PLBC total monthly ALP and HCCP budget for personal and home care services. In short, this is not a cost that the PLBC can sustain.

[109] Jordan's Principle applies between the two levels of government. In this case the PLBC was delivering program and services as required by AANDC and Health Canada in accordance with provincial legislative standards. The PLBC is entitled to turn to the federal government and seek reimbursement for exceptional costs incurred because Jeremy's caregiver, his mother, can no longer care for him as she did before.

[110] I also note that the only other option for Jeremy would be institutionalization and separation from his mother and his community. His mother is the only person who, at times, is able to understand and communicate with him. Jeremy would be disconnected from his community and his culture. He, like sad little Jordan, would be institutionalized, removed from family and the only home he has known. He would be placed in the same situation as was little Jordan.

[111] I am satisfied that the federal government took on the obligation espoused in Jordan's Principle. As result, I come to much the same conclusions as the Court in Boudreau. The federal government contribution agreements required the PLBC to deliver programs and services in accordance with the same standards of provincial legislation and policy. The SAA and Regulations require the providing provincial department to provide assistance, home services, in accordance with the needs of the person who requires those services. PLBC did. Jeremy does. As a consequence, I conclude AANDC and Health Canada must provide reimbursement to the PLBC.

[112] It is to be observed that AANDC does not deny that home services be provided for Jeremy; rather it denies funding home services above the $2,200 administratively imposed provincial maximum which the Court found in Boudreau cannot override provincial legislation and regulation.

[113] The PLBC has met its obligations under its funding agreement with AANDC and Health Canada. The participating federal departments, particularly AANDC, have adopted Jordan's Principle. In my view, they are now required by their adoption of Jordan's Principle to fulfil this assumed obligation and adequately reimburse the PLBC for carrying out the terms of the funding agreements and in accordance with Jordan's Principle.

[114] In the alternative, much as in Boudreau, if the implementation of Jordan's Principle is discretionary, the federal government undertook to apply Jordan's Principle when exceptional circumstances arose. The facts of Jeremy's situation clearly establish the exceptional circumstances necessary to meet this requirement. The federal government cannot deny its obligation to provide additional funding not requested by PLBC for Jeremy.

[115] In either situation, the PLBC is, in my view, due reimbursement and additional funding from AANDC and Health Canada for Jeremy's needs. I note both AANDC and Health Canada have expressed willingness to continue to work with PLBC to resolve the situation.

[116] Jordan's Principle is not an open ended principle. It requires complimentary social or health services be legally available to persons off reserve. It also requires assessment of the services and costs that meet the needs of the on reserve First Nation child. The funding amount is not definitively determined in accordance with these requirements, in that the needs of Jeremy and Ms. Beadle are somewhat mixed, the case conferences did not appear to quantify the costs involved, and alternative reimbursement amounts were proposed. In result, the amount remains to be addressed by the parties.

[117] I conclude the decision-maker did not properly assess the PLBC request for funding to meet Jeremy's needs. The request for judicial review succeeds and the Manager's decision is quashed.

[118] There remains the question of whether or not, in the circumstances, reconsideration should be ordered. Clearly, deference is due to the administrative entity that makes decisions within the realm of its expertise.

[119] In Stetler v the Ontario Flue-Cured Tobacco Growers' Marketing Board, 2009 ONCA 234 at paragraph 42, the Ontario Court of Appeal stated:

While “[a] court may not substitute its decision for that of an administrative decision-maker lightly or arbitrarily”, exceptional circumstances may warrant the court rendering a final decision on the merits. Such circumstances include situations where remitting a final decision would be “pointless”, where the tribunal is no longer “fit to act”, and cases where, “in light of the circumstances and the evidence in the record, only one interpretation or solution is possible, that is, where any other interpretation or solution would be unreasonable”: Giguère v. Chambre des notaires du Québec, 2004 SCC 1 (CanLII), [2004] 1 S.C.R. 3 at para. 66.

[120] When one considers Jordan's Principle calls for an immediate timely response regardless of jurisdictional questions and the exceptional circumstances that arise here in Jeremy's case, I am of the view this constitutes an exceptional circumstance warranting this Court to not remit the matter back for reconsideration but to direct that the PLBC is entitled to reimbursement beyond the $2,200 maximum as it relates to Jeremy's needs for assistance. The remaining question is the amount of reimbursement which I consider must be left to the parties.

Did the decision-maker exercise her discretion in a manner that violated section 15(1) of the Charter?

[121] Having decided as I did, I need not consider the Charter submissions by the Applicant and Respondent.

Costs

[122] In oral submissions, the Respondent did not oppose the Applicants' submission for costs, should the latter be successful, acknowledging the matter to be complex but suggesting the middle range of Column 3.

[123] I thank both parties for their able submissions in addressing this complex but important matter.

Conclusion

[124] I conclude the Manager failed to consider the application of Jordan's Principle in Jeremy's case as required.

[125] I also find the Manager's refusal of the PLBC reimbursement request was unreasonable.

[126] The application for judicial review is granted and I hereby quash the impugned decision.

[127] I do not remit the matter back for reconsideration but direct that the PLBC is entitled to reimbursement by the Respondent beyond the $2,200 maximum as it relates to Jeremy's needs for assistance.

[128] I would award costs to the Applicants for two counsel at the middle range of Column 3.

JUDGMENT

THIS COURT'S JUDGMENT is that:

1. The application for judicial review is granted.
2. The May 27, 2011 decision of the Manager is quashed.
3. I direct that Applicant PLBC is entitled to reimbursement beyond the $2,200 maximum by the Respondent as it relates to Jeremy's needs for assistance.
4. Costs for the Applicants for two counsel at the middle range of Column 3.

The appellants, direct and indirect purchasers, brought a class action alleging that the respondents engaged in an illegal conspiracy to fix the price of high-fructose corn syrup (“HFCS”) resulting in harm to manufacturers, wholesalers, retailers and consumers. HFCS is a sweetener used in various food products, including soft drinks and baked goods. The respondents are the leading producers of HFCS in North America. On the application for certification, it was determined that the pleadings disclosed causes of action for the direct purchasers in constructive trust and for the indirect purchasers under s. 36 of the Competition Act, in tort and in restitution. The action was certified. On appeal, the majority of the court allowed the appeal with respect to the indirect purchasers and held that it was “plain and obvious” that indirect purchasers did not have a cause of action. The appeal with respect to direct purchasers was dismissed. The matter was remitted to the British Columbia Supreme Court to reconsider the certification of the action of the direct purchasers alone. In this Court, the appellants challenge the decision that the indirect purchasers have no cause of action. On cross-appeal, the respondents request dismissal of the direct purchasers’ claim in constructive trust.

Held (Cromwell and Karakatsanis JJ. dissenting on the appeal): The appeal should be dismissed and the cross-appeal allowed.

Per McLachlin C.J. and LeBel, Fish, Abella, Rothstein, Moldaver and Wagner JJ.: Having decided in Pro-Sys Consultants Ltd. v. Microsoft Corporation, 2013 SCC 57, [2013] 3 S.C.R. 477, that indirect purchasers have the right to bring an action, a question in this case is whether the additional challenges that arise where the class is made up of indirect and direct purchasers are sufficient to warrant dismissing the action. The inclusion of indirect and direct purchasers in the proposed class does not acheteurs indirects ont-ils un droit de recours contre l’auteur présumé de la majoration? — La composition du groupe proposé, formé à la fois d’acheteurs directs et d’acheteurs indirects, justifie-t-elle le rejet du recours? — Est-il satisfait en l’espèce au critère de certification relatif à l’existence d’un groupe identifiable d’acheteurs indirects? — Les acheteurs directs ont-ils un droit de recours en imposition d’une fiducie par interprétation? — Class Proceedings Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, ch. 50, art. 4(1).

Les appelantes, des acheteurs directs et indirects, ont intenté un recours collectif, faisant valoir que les intimées ont participé à un complot illégal pour fixer le prix du sirop de maïs à haute teneur en fructose (« SMHTF »), ce qui a porté préjudice à des fabricants, grossistes, détaillants et consommateurs. Cet édulcorant entre dans la confection de diverses denrées alimentaires, dont les boissons gazeuses et les produits de boulangerie. Les intimées sont les principaux fabricants de SMHTF en Amérique du Nord. Il a été décidé à l’instruction de la demande de certification que les actes de procédure révèlent des causes d’action, pour les acheteurs directs, en imposition d’une fiducie par interprétation, et, pour les acheteurs indirects, en vertu de l’art. 36 de la Loi sur la concurrence, en responsabilité délictuelle et en restitution. Le recours collectif a été certifié. Les juges majoritaires de la Cour d’appel ont accueilli l’appel en ce qui concerne les acheteurs indirects et conclu qu’il était « manifeste » que ces derniers n’avaient aucune cause d’action. L’appel a été rejeté en ce qui concerne les acheteurs directs. L’affaire a été renvoyée à la Cour suprême de la Colombie-Britannique pour qu’elle réexamine seulement la certification du recours collectif des acheteurs directs. Les appelantes contestent en l’espèce la décision de ne reconnaître aux acheteurs indirects aucune cause d’action. Dans l’appel incident, les intimées sollicitent le rejet de la demande des acheteurs directs visant l’imposition d’une fiducie par interprétation.

Arrêt (les juges Cromwell et Karakatsanis sont dissidents quant au pourvoi) : Le pourvoi est rejeté et le pourvoi incident est accueilli.

produce difficulties that would warrant dismissing the action. Where indirect and direct purchasers are included in the same class and the evidence of the experts at the trial of the common issues will determine the aggregate amount of the overcharge, there will be no double or multiple recovery. The court also possesses the power to modify settlement and damage awards in accordance with awards already received in other jurisdictions if the respondents are able to satisfy it that double recovery may occur.

Assuming all facts pleaded to be true, a plaintiff satisfies the requirement that the pleadings disclose a cause of action unless it is plain and obvious that the claim cannot succeed. In relation to the causes of action in restitution for the indirect purchasers, the requirement that there be a direct relationship between the defendant and the plaintiff for a claim in unjust enrichment is not settled. Case law does not appear to necessarily foreclose a claim where the relationship between the parties is indirect. It is not plain and obvious that a claim in unjust enrichment should fail at the certification stage on this ground alone. As to the recognition of passed-on losses — the injury suffered by indirect purchasers is recognized at law as is their right to bring actions to recover for those losses. No insurmountable problem is created by allowing the claims in restitution to be brought. Nor is it plain and obvious that a cause of action for the indirect purchasers under s. 36 of the Competition Act cannot succeed and this cause of action should therefore not be struck out.

A court must certify a proceeding if, among other requirements, there is an identifiable class of two or more persons. The difficulty lies where there is insufficient evidence to show some basis in fact that two or more persons will be able to determine if they are in fact a member of the class. Allowing a class proceeding to go forward without identifying two or more persons who will be able to demonstrate that they have suffered a loss at the hands of the alleged overchargers subverts the purpose of class proceedings, which is to provide a more efficient means of recovery for plaintiffs who have suffered harm but for whom it would be impractical or unaffordable to bring a claim individually. Here, there is no basis in fact to demonstrate that the information necessary to determine class membership is possessed by any of the putative class members. The appellants have not introduced evidence to establish some basis in fact that at least two class members could prove they purchased a product actually containing HFCS during the Lorsque le groupe est composé d'acheteurs indirects et directs et que la preuve des experts lors de l'examen au fond des questions communes permet d'établir le montant global de la majoration, il n'y a pas de recouvrement double ou multiple. En outre, les tribunaux disposent du pouvoir de modifier un règlement et les dommages-intérêts octroyés en fonction de ceux déjà obtenus dans d'autres ressorts si les intimés réussissent à les convaincre qu'il y a risque de recouvrement double.

À supposer que tous les faits invoqués soient vrais, il est satisfait à l'exigence selon laquelle les actes de procédure doivent révéler une cause d'action à moins qu'il ne soit manifeste que la demande ne peut être accueillie. Quant aux causes d'action en restitution des acheteurs indirects, il n'est pas établi qu'un lien direct entre le défendeur et le demandeur constitue une condition préalable à une action pour enrichissement injustifié. La jurisprudence ne semble pas exclure nécessairement une action opposant des parties unies par un lien indirect. Il n'est pas manifeste qu'une action pour enrichissement injustifié doit être rejetée à l'étape de la certification pour ce seul motif. Quant au transfert de la perte, le préjudice subi par les acheteurs indirects est reconnu en droit, tout comme leur droit d'exercer des recours pour recouvrer le montant de ces pertes. Le fait de permettre la présentation de la demande en restitution ne pose aucun obstacle insurmontable. Il n'est pas manifeste non plus que la cause d'action des acheteurs indirects fondée sur l'art. 36 de la Loi sur la concurrence est vouée à l'échec et, par conséquent, elle ne doit pas être radiée.

Le tribunal doit certifier qu'il s'agit d'un recours collectif s'il existe, notamment, un groupe identifiable de deux personnes ou plus. Or, lorsque la preuve ne permet pas de conclure qu'un certain fondement factuel établit qu'au moins deux personnes sauront si elles appartiennent ou non au groupe, c'est là où le bât blesse. Certifier un recours collectif sans connaître au moins deux personnes qui seront en mesure de prouver les pertes que leur ont fait subir les auteurs présumés de la majoration contrecarre l'objectif des recours collectifs, qui est d'offrir une voie de recours plus efficace aux demandeurs ayant subi un préjudice mais pour qui il serait irréaliste d'exercer un recours individuel ou qui n'ont pas les moyens de le faire. En espèce, aucun fondement factuel ne permet d'établir qu'un seul des membres du groupe proposé dispose des renseignements nécessaires pour déterminer s'il appartient ou non au groupe. Les appelantes n'ont pas établi qu'un certain fondement factuel permet de conclure qu'au moins deux class period and were therefore identifiable members of the class. The problem in this case lies in the fact that indirect purchasers, even knowing the names of the products affected, will not be able to know whether the particular item that they purchased did in fact contain HFCS. While there may have been indirect purchasers who were harmed by the alleged price-fixing, they cannot self-identify using the proposed definition. The foundation upon which an individual action could be built must be equally present in the class action setting. That foundation is lacking here. In the end, given the finding that an identifiable class cannot be established for the indirect purchasers, the class action as it relates to the indirect purchasers cannot be certified.

With respect to the one cause of action remaining to the direct purchasers, it is determined that the cause of action in constructive trust should fail. Neither the requirement of a proprietary nexus nor the requirement that the constructive trust be imposed only where a monetary remedy was found to be inadequate were met in this case and as such it is plain and obvious that the direct purchaser claim in constructive trust has no chance of succeeding.

Per Cromwell and Karakatsanis JJ. (dissenting on the appeal): In this case, there is some basis in fact to find an identifiable class of two or more persons that includes indirect purchasers.

The requirement that the class be identifiable does not include the requirement that individual members be capable of proving individual loss. The Class Proceedings Act (“CPA”) is designed to permit a means of recovery for the benefit of the class as a whole, without proof of individual loss, even where it is difficult to establish class membership. Thus, if no individual seeks an individual remedy, it will not be necessary to prove individual loss. Such class actions permit the disgorgement of unlawful gains and serve not only the purposes of enhanced access to justice and judicial economy, but also the broader purpose of behaviour modification. Further, the aggregate damages provisions in the CPA are tools which are intended to permit access to justice and behaviour modification in cases where liability to the class has been proven but individual membership in the class is difficult or impossible to determine. The legislation explicitly contemplates difficulties or, in some cases, impossibility in self-identification. Such difficulties have not been membres pourraient démontrer l’achat au cours de la période visée par le recours d’un produit contenant bel et bien du SMHTF, et par le fait même leur appartenance à un groupe identifiable. Le problème en l’espèce tient au fait que les acheteurs indirects ne seront pas en mesure de savoir si l’article qu’ils ont acheté contenait ou non du SMHTF même s’ils connaissent le nom des produits en cause. Bien que la fixation des prix reprochée ait peut-être porté préjudice à des acheteurs indirects, ils ne peuvent démontrer qu’ils font partie du groupe à la lumière de la définition proposée. Le fondement sur lequel reposerait le recours individuel doit pouvoir se transposer au recours collectif. Or, ce fondement fait défaut en l’espèce. En définitive, puisqu’il est conclu à l’impossibilité d’établir l’existence d’un groupe identifiable composé des acheteurs indirects, le recours collectif dans leur cas ne peut être certifié.

Quant aux acheteurs directs, la seule cause d’action qui leur est reconnue, en imposition d’une fiducie par interprétation, doit être rejetée. Il n’est pas satisfait en l’espèce à la condition d’un lien avec un bien, ni à celle voulant que la fiducie par interprétation soit imposée uniquement si une réparation pécuniaire est jugée inadéquate. Il est donc manifeste que la demande des acheteurs directs visant l’imposition de ce type de fiducie est vouée à l’échec.

Les juges Cromwell et Karakatsanis (dissidents quant au pourvoi) : En l’espèce, un certain fondement factuel permet de conclure à l’existence d’un groupe identifiable de deux personnes ou plus auquel appartiennent les acheteurs indirects.

Pour qu’il y ait un groupe identifiable, il ne faut pas que chacun des membres du groupe soit en mesure d’établir une perte individuelle. La Class Proceedings Act (la « CPA ») est conçue de manière à donner un recours au groupe dans son ensemble, sans qu’il soit nécessaire de prouver une perte individuelle, même s’il est difficile d’établir l’appartenance au groupe. En conséquence, si personne ne cherche à obtenir une réparation individuelle, il ne sera pas nécessaire de prouver une perte individuelle. De tels recours collectifs permettent la restitution de gains provenant d’activités illégales et répondent non seulement aux objectifs d’accès à la justice et d’économie des ressources judiciaires, mais aussi à l’objectif général de modification des comportements. En outre, les dispositions autorisant l’octroi de dommages-intérêts globaux prévues à la CPA favorisent l’accès à la justice et la modification des comportements dans les cas où la responsabilité envers le groupe a été démontrée, mais où l’appartenance au groupe est difficile ou impossible considered fatal to authorizations under the CPA provided that there is some basis in fact that the class exists. The criteria for membership must be clearly defined — not the ability of a given individual to prove that they meet the criteria. Whether claimants can prove their claim for an individual remedy is a separate issue that need not be resolved at the certification stage.

Here, the record contained an evidentiary basis to establish the existence of the class and to show that the members of the class suffered harm. It may never be necessary or legally required to identify individual class members. The CPA, while primarily a procedural statute, also creates a remedy that recognizes that damages to the class as a whole can be proven, even when proof of individual members' damages is impractical, and that is available even if those who are not members of the class can benefit. The statute should be construed generously to give life to its purpose of encouraging judicial economy and access to justice and modifying the behaviour of wrongdoers.

Even though it is not necessary at the certification stage to show that individual class members could stand alone as plaintiffs, this record contains a sufficient evidentiary basis to establish the existence of an identifiable class of two or more persons. Direct purchasers of HFCS used it extensively in products that were sold widely to retailers and to consumers. Given the nature of a price-fixing case, loss flows directly from the purchase of HFCS, or in the case of indirect purchasers, products containing HFCS. Claimants will not have to prove definitively that they purchased a particular product that contained HFCS. It will be sufficient if the trial judge is satisfied, upon expert or other evidence, that an individual claimant probably purchased a product containing it. The requirement that there be an evidentiary foundation — or some basis in fact — to support the certification criteria does not include a preliminary merits test and does not require the plaintiffs to indicate the evidence upon which they will prove these claims. The question at the certification stage is not whether the claim is likely to succeed, but whether the suit is appropriately prosecuted as a class action. The appellants in this case have tendered evidence which establishes some basis in fact to show that the proposed class is identifiable and that individual class members may be able to establish individual loss on a balance of à établir. La loi prévoit expressément la possibilité qu'il soit difficile, voire impossible, pour certaines personnes de s'estimer visées. De telles difficultés n'ont pas été jugées fatales à la certification sous le régime de la CPA dans la mesure où l'existence d'un groupe repose sur un certain fondement factuel. Les critères d'appartenance au groupe doivent être clairement définis — et non la faculté d'une personne donnée de prouver qu'elle y satisfait. Que les demandeurs puissent ou non établir le bien-fondé de leur demande de réparation individuelle est une question distincte n'ayant pas à être tranchée à l'étape de la certification.

Le dossier permet de conclure que le groupe existe et que les membres du groupe ont subi un préjudice. Il ne sera peut-être jamais nécessaire ni impératif en droit que les membres individuels du groupe soient connus. La CPA, une loi à caractère principalement procédural, crée également une réparation qui reconnaît que les préjudices causés au groupe dans son ensemble peuvent être prouvés, même si la preuve des préjudices individuels est irréaliste, et qui peut être ordonnée même si elle est susceptible de profiter à des non-membres. Cette loi doit être interprétée libéralement pour donner effet à l'objectif du législateur, à savoir favoriser l'économie des ressources judiciaires, l'accès à la justice et la modification du comportement des malfaiteurs.

Même s'il n'est pas nécessaire à l'étape de la certification d'établir que chacun des membres du groupe aurait la capacité pour agir seul, le dossier en l'espèce étaye suffisamment l'existence d'un groupe identifiable de deux personnes ou plus. Les acheteurs directs de SMHTF ont utilisé largement cet édulcorant dans la confection de produits qui ont été vendus à grande échelle aux détaillants et consommateurs. En matière de fixation des prix, la perte découle directement de l'achat du SMHTF, ou dans le cas des acheteurs indirects, de produits en contenant. Les demandeurs n'auront pas à démontrer, preuves à l'appui, avoir acheté un certain produit contenant du SMHTF. Il suffira que le juge de première instance soit convaincu, à la lumière de la preuve, notamment d'expert, qu'un demandeur donné a probablement acheté un produit contenant l'édulcorant en question. L'exigence que chacun des critères de certification repose sur un certain fondement factuel n'emporte pas d'examen sommaire au fond du recours et n'exige pas l'énumération des éléments à l'appui de la demande. La question à cette étape n'est pas s'il est vraisemblable que la demande aboutisse, mais s'il convient de procéder par recours collectif. En l'espèce, les appelantes ont établi un certain fondement factuel permettant de conclure que le groupe probabilities. Individual claimants, including indirect purchasers, would be able to self-identify as potential plaintiffs based on knowledge of the products in which HFCS is known to have been commonly used.

LE JUGE ROTHSTEIN —

I. Introduction

[1] Dans les affaires de fixation des prix, l'acheteur indirect est celui qui s'est procuré un produit, non pas directement auprès de la personne à qui on reproche d'en avoir fixé le prix (l'auteur de la majoration), mais auprès d'une partie intervenant à une autre étape de la chaîne de distribution. Les personnes qui préconisent l'irrecevabilité au Canada des recours des acheteurs indirects contre l'auteur

double or multiple recovery and failure to deter anti-competitive behaviour as reasons why they should not be permitted in Canada. These were some of the issues before the Court in the companion case of Pro-Sys Consultants Ltd. v. Microsoft Corporation, 2013 SCC 57, [2013] 3 S.C.R. 477 (“Pro-Sys”). In that case, a proposed indirect purchaser class action, those arguments were found to be insufficient bases upon which to deny indirect purchasers the right to bring an action against the alleged overcharger.

[2] In this case, both the indirect and direct purchasers are class members. Having decided in Pro-Sys that indirect purchasers have the right to bring an action, a question in this case is whether the additional challenges that arise where the class is made up of indirect and direct purchasers are sufficient to warrant dismissing the action. If the Court finds that the action may proceed, it must then consider whether the class action should have been certified by the applications judge.

[3] For the reasons that follow, I would find that the inclusion of indirect and direct purchasers in the proposed class does not produce difficulties that would warrant dismissing the action. However, I find this case cannot meet the certification requirements because there is not an identifiable class of indirect purchasers as required for certification under the British Columbia Class Proceedings Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 50 (“CPA”). I would dismiss the appeal on that basis. The case of the direct purchasers, which is restricted to constructive trust, is dismissed as I find there is no cause of action. The cross-appeal is therefore allowed.

II. Background

[4] Sun-Rype Products Ltd., a juice manufacturer, is the direct purchaser representative plaintiff and Wendy Bredin (formerly Wendy Weberg) is the indirect purchaser representative plaintiff in de la majoration invoquent la difficulté de suivre la majoration d’un maillon à l’autre de cette chaîne, le risque de recouvrement double ou multiple et l’omission de décourager le comportement anticoncurrentiel comme autant de raisons justifiant leur argument. Il s’agit de certaines des questions dont est saisie la Cour dans l’affaire connexe Pro-Sys Consultants Ltd. c. Microsoft Corporation, 2013 CSC 57, [2013] 3 R.C.S. 477 (« Pro-Sys »). Dans cette dernière, un recours collectif projeté formé par des acheteurs indirects, les arguments mentionnés précédemment ont été jugés insuffisants pour refuser à ces acheteurs le droit de poursuivre en justice l’auteur présumé de la majoration.

II. Contexte

[4] Sun-Rype Products Ltd., un fabricant de jus, est la demanderesse-représentante des acheteurs directs, et Wendy Bredin (auparavant Weberg) remplit le même rôle au nom des acheteurs indirects en

this action. The representative plaintiffs (referred to collectively as the “appellants”), brought the class action pursuant to the CPA. They allege that Archer Daniels Midland Company and ADM Agri-Industries Company (the “ADM respondents”), Cargill, Incorporated, Cerestar USA, Inc., formerly known as American Maize-Products Company, and Cargill Limited (the “Cargill respondents”), and Corn Products International, Inc., Bestfoods, Inc., formerly known as CPC International, Inc., Casco Inc. and Unilever PLC doing business as Unilever Bestfoods North America (the “Casco respondents”) (collectively, the “respondents”), engaged in an illegal conspiracy to fix the price of high-fructose corn syrup (“HFCS”) resulting in harm to manufacturers, wholesalers, retailers and consumers.

[5] HFCS is a sweetener used in various food products, including soft drinks and baked goods. The respondents are the leading producers of HFCS in North America. The appellants claim that between January 1, 1988 and June 30, 1995, the respondents engaged in an “intentional, secret and illegal conspiracy to fix the price of HFCS”, which allowed them to charge the class members more for HFCS than they would have charged but for the alleged illegal conduct (A.F., at paras. 9 and 11).

III. Summary of the Proceedings Below

A. Commencement of the Action

[6] The appellants commenced this class action in June 2005 on behalf of “all persons resident in British Columbia and elsewhere in Canada who purchased HFCS or products containing HFCS manufactured by the [respondents] (collectively, the ‘class’) from January 1, 1988 to June 30, 1995 (the ‘Class Period’)” (2010 BCSC 922 (CanLII), at para. 2). It alleged the following causes of action (ibid., at para. 27):

l’espèce. Les demandresses-représentantes (collectivement les « appelantes ») ont intenté le recours collectif en vertu de la CPA. Selon elles, Archer Daniels Midland Company et ADM Agri-Industries Company (les « intimées ADM »), Cargill, Incorporated, Cerestar USA, Inc., auparavant connue sous le nom d’American Maize-Products Company et Cargill Limitée (les « intimées Cargill ») ainsi que Corn Products International, Inc., Bestfoods, Inc., auparavant connue sous le nom de CPC International, Inc., Casco Inc. et Unilever PLC, faisant affaire sous la dénomination d’Unilever Bestfoods North America (les « intimées Casco ») (collectivement les « intimées »), ont participé à un complot illégal pour fixer le prix du sirop de maïs à haute teneur en fructose (« SMHTF »), ce qui a porté préjudice à des fabricants, grossistes, détaillants et consommateurs.

III. Résumé des instances devant les juridictions inférieures

A. Genèse de l’instance

[6] Les appelantes ont intenté le recours collectif en juin 2005 au nom de [TRADUCTION] « tous les résidents de la Colombie-Britannique et d’ailleurs au Canada qui ont acheté du SMHTF fabriqué par les [intimées] ou des produits en contenant (collectivement le “groupe”) entre le 1^{er} janvier 1988 et le 30 juin 1995 (la “période visée par le recours”) » (2010 BCSC 922 (CanLII), par. 2). Le groupe a fait valoir les causes d’action suivantes (ibid., par. 27) :

| <ul style="list-style-type: none"> a) contravention of s. 45(1) of Part VI of the Competition Act giving rise to a right of damages under s. 36(1) of that Act; b) tortious conspiracy and intentional interference with economic interests; c) unjust enrichment, waiver of tort and constructive trust; and d) punitive damages. | <ul style="list-style-type: none"> a) infraction au par. 45(1) de la partie VI de la Loi sur la concurrence ouvrant droit à des dommages-intérêts au titre du par. 36(1) de cette loi; b) délit civil de complot et atteinte intentionnelle à des intérêts financiers; c) enrichissement injustifié, renonciation à un recours délictuel et fiducie par interprétation; d) dommages-intérêts punitifs. |

B. Pre-certification Motion to Strike

[7] The respondents brought a pre-certification motion to strike the appellants' claims on the basis that they were statute-barred. In an order dated May 10, 2007, the motions judge only allowed the claim for a remedial constructive trust because it was subject to a longer (10-year) limitation period than the other claims (2007 BCSC 640, 72 B.C.L.R. (4th) 163). The respondents appealed the order to the British Columbia Court of Appeal ("B.C.C.A.") and the appellants cross-appealed (2008 BCCA 278, 81 B.C.L.R. (4th) 199). The result was that the B.C.C.A. found that the direct purchaser representative plaintiff, Sun-Rype, could maintain only its cause of action in remedial constructive trust and that all of its claims for damages, including damages under the Competition Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-34, were statute-barred. As to the indirect purchaser representative plaintiff, Wendy Bredin, the B.C.C.A. found that she could maintain all of her causes of action because the limitation period on her claims did not begin until "she received the telephone call from her lawyer advising her of the proposed class action" (para. 138).

B. Requête en radiation présentée avant la certification du recours collectif

[7] Avant la certification du recours collectif, les intimées ont présenté une requête en radiation des demandes des appelantes pour cause de prescription. Par ordonnance datée du 10 mai 2007, le juge des requêtes a accueilli uniquement la demande relative à l'imposition d'une fiducie par interprétation à titre de réparation parce qu'elle était assujettie à un délai de prescription plus long (10 ans) que les autres (2007 BCSC 640, 72 B.C.L.R. (4th) 163). Les intimées ont interjeté appel de l'ordonnance à la Cour d'appel de la Colombie-Britannique (« C.A.C.-B. »), et les appelantes ont formé un appel incident (2008 BCCA 278, 81 B.C.L.R. (4th) 199). La Cour d'appel a conclu que la demanderesse-représentante des acheteurs directs, Sun-Rype, pouvait maintenir uniquement sa demande en imposition d'une fiducie par interprétation à titre de réparation, et que ses demandes en dommages-intérêts, notamment celles présentées en vertu de la Loi sur la concurrence, L.R.C. 1985, ch. C-34, étaient prescrites. Quant à la demanderesse-représentante des acheteurs indirects, Wendy Bredin, la Cour d'appel a conclu qu'elle pouvait continuer à faire valoir toutes ses causes d'action parce que le délai de prescription applicable à ses demandes n'avait commencé à courir qu'au moment où [TRADUCTION] « elle a reçu l'appel de son avocat qui l'a avisée de l'existence du recours collectif projeté » (par. 138).

C. Certification Proceedings in the British Columbia Supreme Court, 2010 BCSC 922 (CanLII)

[8] The British Columbia Supreme Court (“B.C.S.C.”) dealt with the appellants’ application for certification by its decision dated June 30, 2010. As to the issue of whether indirect purchasers could bring actions against their alleged overchargers, Rice J. found that it was “not plain and obvious” that indirect purchaser claims were unavailable as a matter of law in Canada (para. 58).

[9] Rice J. then addressed the requirement under s. 4(1)(a) of the CPA that the pleadings disclose a cause of action. Excluding the portions of the claim struck by the pre-certification decision on the limitation periods, Rice J. found that the pleadings disclosed causes of action for the direct purchasers in constructive trust and for the indirect purchasers under s. 36 of the Competition Act, in tort and in restitution. Rice J. also found that the remaining certification requirements, namely (i) whether there were common issues; (ii) whether there was an identifiable class; (iii) whether the class action was the preferable procedure; and (iv) whether Sun-Rype and Wendy Bredin could adequately represent the class, were met. He certified the action identifying common issues relating to the indirect purchasers’ claims seeking statutory, common law and equitable damages and restitution based on allegations that the respondents engaged in an international and unlawful conspiracy to fix the price of HFCS during the class period. The common issues certified by Rice J. are listed in the appendix to these reasons.

D. Appeal of the Certification to the British Columbia Court of Appeal, 2011 BCCA 187, 305 B.C.A.C. 55

[10] The majority of the B.C.C.A. (per Lowry J.A., Frankel J.A. concurring) held that it was “plain and obvious” that indirect purchasers did not have

C. Procédure de certification devant la Cour suprême de la Colombie-Britannique, 2010 BCSC 922 (CanLII)

[8] La Cour suprême de la Colombie-Britannique (« C.S.C.-B. ») tranche la demande des appelantes visant la certification d’un recours collectif le 30 juin 2010. Pour ce qui est de savoir si les acheteurs indirects peuvent poursuivre l’auteur présumé de la majoration, le juge Rice conclut qu’il [TRADUCTION] « n’est pas manifeste » que les demandes d’acheteurs indirects sont irrecevables en droit au Canada (par. 58).

D. Appel de la certification à la Cour d’appel de la Colombie-Britannique, 2011 BCCA 187, 305 B.C.A.C. 55

[10] Les juges majoritaires de la C.A.C.-B. (le juge Lowry, avec l’accord du juge Frankel) concluent qu’il est [TRADUCTION] « manifeste » que les

a cause of action (para. 97). The majority reached this conclusion for the same reasons as in its decision in Pro-Sys Consultants Ltd. v. Microsoft Corp., 2011 BCCA 186, 304 B.C.A.C. 90: it held that the rejection of the passing-on defence in Canada carried as its necessary corollary a corresponding rejection of the offensive use of passing on in the form of an indirect purchaser action. The majority found Canadian law “to be consistent with American federal law as established by the Supreme Court of the United States in Hanover Shoe . . . and Illinois Brick” (Pro-Sys (C.A.), at para. 74).

[11] With respect to the indirect purchasers, the majority allowed the appeal and found that the pleadings did not disclose a cause of action on their part (para. 98). However, with respect to direct purchasers, the majority found that the appeal should be dismissed (para. 74). The B.C.C.A. set aside the certification order of Rice J. and remitted the matter to the B.C.S.C. to reconsider the certification of the action of the direct purchasers alone.

[12] Donald J.A., dissenting, as he did in Pro-Sys, would have found that indirect purchaser actions were permitted as a matter of law in Canada and would have certified the action for both direct and indirect purchasers, finding that all of the requirements in s. 4(1) of the CPA were met.

IV. Analysis

[13] This appeal was brought concurrently with the appeal in the companion case of Pro-Sys. Counsel for the appellants are the same in both cases, and the appellants in this case rely heavily on the appellants’ submissions in Pro-Sys to support their arguments. In view of the significant overlap in issues, these reasons will frequently refer to the reasons in Pro-Sys.

[14] In this Court, the three groups of respondents filed separate factums. However, each adopts the pleadings of the others in the appeal and the cross-appeal. In the appeal, the respondents argue first acheteurs indirects n’ont aucune cause d’action (par. 97). Ils parviennent à cette conclusion pour les mêmes motifs que dans leur arrêt Pro-Sys Consultants Ltd. c. Microsoft Corp., 2011 BCCA 186, 304 B.C.A.C. 90 : selon eux, le rejet de la défense de transfert de la perte au Canada emporte nécessairement le rejet du transfert de la perte comme cause d’action, c’est-à-dire de l’action intentée par les acheteurs indirects. Les juges majoritaires estiment que le droit canadien [TRADUCTION] « s’accorde avec le droit fédéral américain, tel qu’il a été établi par la Cour suprême des États-Unis dans Hanover Shoe [. . .] et Illinois Brick » (Pro-Sys (C.A.), par. 74).

[12] Le juge Donald, dissident en l’espèce tout comme il l’est dans Pro-Sys, estime que les recours des acheteurs indirects sont recevables en droit au Canada, et il est d’avis de certifier le recours collectif des acheteurs directs et des acheteurs indirects, estimant que toutes les conditions prévues au par. 4(1) de la CPA sont réunies.

IV. Analyse

[14] Les trois groupes d’intimées ont déposé des mémoires distincts à la Cour, mais chacun de ces groupes fait siens les actes de procédure des autres dans l’appel et l’appel incident. En appel, and foremost that indirect purchasers do not have a cause of action. They also argue that the class action should be decertified in respect of the indirect purchasers because the class is not identifiable as required by s. 4(1)(b) of the CPA. On the cross-appeal, the respondents request dismissal of the direct purchasers' claim in constructive trust on the grounds that the elements required to establish a constructive trust are not present. They also seek decertification of the class action on the basis that Rice J. applied the wrong standard of proof in his analysis of the certification requirements.

[15] As indicated, I am unable to find an identifiable class as it relates to the indirect purchasers and would dismiss the appeal on that basis. Nonetheless, for completeness, the various arguments presented in this case are assessed below. I turn first to the indirect purchaser question and then consider the arguments pertaining to the certification of the class action.

A. Indirect Purchaser Actions (the “Passing On” Issue)

[16] The appellants largely adopt the submissions of Pro-Sys Consultants Ltd. on the passing-on issue. As the offensive use of passing on has been analysed in the reasons in Pro-Sys, it is unnecessary to repeat it in its entirety here. I add only the following to address the differences that arise with regard to passing on where indirect purchasers and direct purchasers are part of the same class.

(1) Double or Multiple Recovery as Between Indirect and Direct Purchasers

[17] The respondents argue that the “fundamental difficulty with the case of the indirect purchasers is that they seek recovery of amounts to which the direct purchasers have a valid claim, such that, les intimées soutiennent d’abord et avant tout que les acheteurs indirects sont dépourvus de cause d’action. Elles ajoutent qu’il faut annuler la certification du recours collectif à l’égard des acheteurs indirects parce qu’ils ne forment pas un groupe identifiable, comme l’exige l’al. 4(1)(b) de la CPA. Dans l’appel incident, elles sollicitent le rejet de la demande des acheteurs directs visant l’imposition d’une fiducie par interprétation, plaidant l’absence des éléments requis pour l’établir. Elles sollicitent également l’annulation de la certification du recours collectif parce que le juge Rice aurait appliqué la mauvaise norme de preuve dans son analyse des conditions de certification.

A. Recours collectif intenté par les acheteurs indirects (la question du « transfert de la perte »)

(1) Recouvrement double ou multiple par les acheteurs indirects et les acheteurs directs to recognize the claim of the indirect purchasers would be to recognize an overlapping claim to the same amount and the prospect of double recovery” (Cargill factum, at para. 54). They argue that, because the passing-on defence has been rejected in Canada, the direct purchasers are entitled to 100 percent of the amount of the overcharge. Consequently they say that indirect purchasers “make a duplicative and overlapping claim to an overcharge to which the direct purchasers are entitled based on settled principles” (para. 61).

[18] For the reasons given in the Pro-Sys appeal, this argument is insufficient to deny indirect purchasers the right to be included in the class action. I agree with Rice J. that, by including both direct and indirect purchasers in the class and by using economic methodologies to ascertain the aggregate amount of the loss, there will be no over-recovery from the respondents (B.C.S.C., at para. 53).

[19] In this case, the appellants seek recovery of a defined sum equal to the aggregate of the overcharge. Where indirect and direct purchasers are included in the same class and the evidence of the experts at the trial of the common issues will determine the aggregate amount of the overcharge, there will be no double or multiple recovery. Recovery is limited to that aggregate amount, no matter how it is ultimately shared by the direct and indirect purchasers. This was the view of the B.C.C.A. in Pro-Sys Consultants Ltd. v. Infineon Technologies AG, 2009 BCCA 503, 98 B.C.L.R. (4th) 272 (“Infineon”), at para. 78, and of the Quebec Court of Appeal in Option consommateurs v. Infineon Technologies AG, 2011 QCCA 2116 (CanLII), at para. 114. The appeal of the latter decision was heard together with Pro-Sys and this case. See Infineon Technologies AG v. Option consommateurs, 2013 SCC 59, [2013] 3 S.C.R. 600.

les acheteurs directs peuvent valablement réclamer. Ainsi, en reconnaissant le droit d’action des acheteurs indirects, on reconnaît un autre droit d’action sur une somme d’argent unique et la possibilité d’un recouvrement double » (mémoire de Cargill, par. 54). Selon elles, comme la défense de transfert de la perte a été écartée au Canada, les acheteurs directs ont le droit de recouvrer la totalité de la majoration. Elles disent donc que la demande des acheteurs indirects en recouvrement du montant de la majoration « télescope celle des acheteurs directs, qui y ont droit en vertu de principes établis » (par. 61).

[19] Dans la présente affaire, les appelantes demandent le recouvrement d’une somme précise équivalente au montant global de la majoration. Lorsque le groupe est composé d’acheteurs indirects et directs et que le témoignage des experts lors de l’examen au procès des questions communes permet d’établir le montant global de la majoration, il n’y a pas de recouvrement double ou multiple. Le recouvrement intégral est limité à cette somme, peu importe comment elle sera finalement répartie entre les acheteurs directs et les acheteurs indirects. C’est l’avis exprimé par la C.A.C.-B. dans Pro-Sys Consultants Ltd. c. Infineon Technologies AG, 2009 BCCA 503, 98 B.C.L.R. (4th) 272 (« Infineon »), par. 78, et par la Cour d’appel du Québec dans Option consommateurs c. Infineon Technologies AG, 2011 QCCA 2116 (CanLII), par. 114. L’appel dans cette dernière affaire a été entendu en même temps que celui dans l’affaire Pro-Sys et le présent pourvoi. Voir Infineon Technologies AG c. Option consommateurs, 2013 CSC 59, [2013] 3 R.C.S. 600.

[20] To the extent that there is conflict between the class members as to how the aggregate amount is to be distributed upon the awarding of a settlement or upon a successful action, this is not a concern of the respondents and is not a basis for denying indirect purchasers the right to be included in the class action.

(2) Over-Recovery as Between Jurisdictions

[21] In addition to concern of double recovery as between indirect and direct purchasers, the respondents also express concerns of over-recovery arising from actions in the U.S. Specifically, the respondents state that in the U.S., direct purchasers of HFCS have already reached a settlement with the respondents for the entire overcharge. They claim that if the rights of the indirect purchasers to bring an action are recognized in Canada, this will create “overlapping claims to the same loss between direct purchasers in the U.S. and indirect purchasers in British Columbia” (Cargill factum, at para. 71). As stated in the Pro-Sys reasons, the court is equipped to deal with these risks. The court possesses the power to modify settlement and damage awards in accordance with awards already received by plaintiffs in other jurisdictions if the respondents are able to satisfy it that double recovery may occur. If the respondents adduce relevant evidence, the court will be able to ensure that double recovery does not occur.

(3) Restitutionary Law Principles

[22] The majority of the B.C.C.A. rejected the offensive use of passing on based on the theory that once the passing-on defence is rejected, the direct purchasers would be entitled to the whole amount by which they were overcharged:

. . . I am unable to see why the [direct purchasers] would not as a matter of law be entitled to the whole of the amount they overpaid regardless of any amount that may

(2) Trop-perçu découlant de recours exercés dans plusieurs ressorts

(3) Principes du droit de la restitution

[TRADUCTION] . . . je n’arrive pas à voir pourquoi en droit les [acheteurs directs] ne pourraient pas recouvrer l’intégralité du montant de la majoration, peu importe have been passed on to the [indirect purchasers] in the same way they would if they were the only plaintiffs in the action. Anything less would serve to disadvantage them because of the nature of the proceedings such that they would be deprived of what they would legally be entitled to recover. [para. 84]

[23] I would agree that absent an action by indirect purchasers or absent the inclusion of indirect purchasers in the action, the direct purchasers would be able to recover the entire amount of the overcharge because the overcharger would be unable to invoke the passing-on defence. However, this is not the same as saying the direct purchasers are entitled to the entire amount of the overcharge. The disgorgement of amounts obtained through wrongdoing is one of the fundamental principles of restitutionary law (P. D. Maddaugh and J. D. McCamus, The Law of Restitution (loose-leaf ed.), vol. I, at p. 3-1). Restitutionary law is “a tool of corrective justice” that seeks to take money away from the party who has unjustly taken it and return it to the party who unjustly lost it (Kingstreet Investments Ltd. v. New Brunswick (Finance), 2007 SCC 1, [2007] 1 S.C.R. 3, at paras. 32 and 47). While a defendant cannot invoke the passing-on defence, the direct purchasers cannot deny that they have passed on the overcharge to the indirect purchasers. Where indirect purchasers are able to demonstrate that overcharges were passed on to them, they are entitled to claim those overcharges.

(4) Deterrence and Compensation

[24] As part of their argument that indirect purchaser actions should not be allowed, the respondents make much of the fact that in many other price-fixing cases in Canada, awards to indirect purchasers have been disbursed in the form of cy-près payments because the amounts in question were so small as to make identification of and distribution to each individual class member impractical. They claim that cy-près distributions do not advance the deterrence objective of the Canadian competition laws because any deterrence function could be achieved to an equal extent by a claim made solely by direct purchasers. They also argue le surcoût potentiellement transféré aux [acheteurs indirects], comme s'ils étaient les seuls demandeurs. Leur accorder moins les défavoriserait compte tenu de la nature de l'instance, de sorte qu'ils seraient privés de ce qu'ils sont en droit de recouvrer. [par. 84]

[23] Je conviens que, si les acheteurs indirects n'exercent aucun recours, seuls ou avec les acheteurs directs, ces derniers seraient à même de recouvrer le montant intégral de la majoration vu l'impossibilité pour l'auteur de cette dernière d'invoquer le transfert de la perte en défense. Or, cela ne revient pas à dire que les acheteurs directs ont droit à l'intégralité de cette somme d'argent. La remise des biens mal acquis constitue l'une des pierres angulaires du droit de la restitution (P. D. Maddaugh et J. D. McCamus, The Law of Restitution (éd. à feuilles mobiles), vol. I, p. 3-1). Le droit de la restitution constitue « un outil de la justice corrective » qui cherche à reprendre à la partie qui a acquis injustement des fonds pour les rendre à celle qui les a perdus injustement (Kingstreet Investments Ltd. c. Nouveau-Brunswick (Finances), 2007 CSC 1, [2007] 1 R.C.S. 3, par. 32 et 47). Si un défendeur ne peut invoquer le transfert de la perte en défense, les acheteurs directs ne peuvent nier avoir refilé la majoration aux acheteurs indirects. Dans les cas où les acheteurs indirects peuvent le démontrer, ils ont le droit de demander le remboursement du montant de la majoration.

(4) Dissuasion et indemnisation

that because the award would be distributed to a not-for-profit entity in place of the class members, the compensation goal of the Canadian competition laws is also frustrated.

[25] There is merit to these arguments; however, the precedent for cy-près distribution is well established (see M. A. Eizenga et al., Class Actions Law and Practice (loose-leaf), at § 9.19). While cy-près distributions may not appeal to some on a policy basis, this method of distributing settlement proceeds or damage awards is contemplated by the CPA, at s. 34(1):

34 (1) The court may order that all or any part of an award under this Division that has not been distributed within a time set by the court be applied in any manner that may reasonably be expected to benefit class or subclass members, even though the order does not provide for monetary relief to individual class or subclass members.

[26] It is also a method the courts have used in indirect purchaser price-fixing cases, as demonstrated by the respondents' summary of nine cases in which distribution of the settlement funds was made on a cy-près basis. And, while its very name, meaning "as near as possible", implies that it is not the ideal mode of distribution, it allows the court to disburse the money to an appropriate substitute for the class members themselves (see D. Blynn, "Cy Pres Distributions: Ethics & Reform" (2012), 25 Geo. J. Legal Ethics 435, at p. 435).

[27] As such, while the compensation objective is not furthered by a cy-près distribution, it cannot be said that deterrence is reduced by the possibility that a settlement will eventually be distributed in that manner. These factors do not preclude indirect purchasers from bringing an action or from being included in the class.

demande présentée uniquement par les acheteurs directs serait tout aussi dissuasive. Elles ajoutent qu'elle ne sert pas non plus l'objectif d'indemnisation, car elle serait versée à un organisme à but non lucratif plutôt qu'aux membres du groupe.

[25] Ces arguments sont valables, mais la jurisprudence en matière de versement suivant le principe de l'aussi-près est bien établie (voir M. A. Eizenga et autres, Class Actions Law and Practice (feuilles mobiles), § 9.19). Bien qu'il puisse ne pas plaire à certains pour des raisons de principe, ce mode de distribution de l'indemnité accordée par suite d'un règlement ou des dommages-intérêts adjugés est prévu au par. 34(1) de la CPA :

[TRADUCTION]

B. The Certification of the Class Action

[28] Having determined that indirect purchasers may pursue actions against their alleged overchargers, the issue is now whether this action should be certified. The analysis of the certification requirements was carried out by the applications judge, Rice J., but was not addressed by the majority of the B.C.C.A. The majority of the B.C.C.A. disposed of the action based solely on its finding that passing on could not be used offensively to allow indirect purchasers to bring an action.

[29] The requirements for certification under the CPA are set forth in s. 4(1):

- 4 (1) The court must certify a proceeding as a class proceeding on an application under section 2 or 3 if all of the following requirements are met:
- (a) the pleadings disclose a cause of action;
 - (b) there is an identifiable class of 2 or more persons;
 - (c) the claims of the class members raise common issues, whether or not those common issues predominate over issues affecting only individual members;
 - (d) a class proceeding would be the preferable procedure for the fair and efficient resolution of the common issues;
 - (e) there is a representative plaintiff who
 - (i) would fairly and adequately represent the interests of the class,
 - (ii) has produced a plan for the proceeding that sets out a workable method of advancing the proceeding on behalf of the class and of notifying class members of the proceeding, and

B. La certification du recours collectif

[TRADUCTION]

- 4 (1) Le tribunal saisi d'une demande visée à l'article 2 ou 3 certifie une instance à titre de recours collectif lorsque les conditions suivantes sont réunies :
- (a) les actes de procédure révèlent une cause d'action;
 - (b) il existe un groupe identifiable de 2 personnes ou plus;
 - (c) les demandes des membres du groupe soulèvent une question commune, que celle-ci l'emporte ou non sur les questions qui touchent uniquement les membres individuels;
 - (d) le recours collectif serait la meilleure procédure pour régler la question commune de manière juste et efficace;
 - (e) un demandeur-représentant :
 - (i) défendrait de manière juste et appropriée les intérêts du groupe,
 - (ii) a présenté, pour le recours collectif, un plan qui établit une méthode praticable de faire progresser l'instance au nom du groupe et d'aviser les membres du groupe de l'existence du recours collectif,

(iii) does not have, on the common issues, an interest that is in conflict with the interests of other class members.

(iii) n'a pas de conflit d'intérêts avec d'autres membres du groupe en ce qui concerne les questions communes.

[30] The respondents contest only three of the certification criteria. The first is whether the pleadings disclose a cause of action as required under s. 4(1)(a). They argue that the remaining cause of action of the direct purchasers in constructive trust should be struck and that the indirect purchaser causes of action in restitution and under s. 36 of the Competition Act should fail. They do not contest the indirect purchasers' causes of action in tort. Second, they say that the requirement under s. 4(1)(c) that the claims raise common issues is not met. Third, they argue that the class is not identifiable as it relates to the indirect purchasers as required under s. 4(1)(b).

(1) Do the Pleadings Disclose a Cause of Action?

(1) Les actes de procédure révèlent-ils une cause d'action?

[31] Section 4(1)(a) of the CPA requires that the pleadings disclose a cause of action. This requirement is judged on the standard of proof applied in Hunt v. Carey Canada Inc., [1990] 2 S.C.R. 959, at p. 980, namely that a plaintiff satisfies this requirement unless, assuming all facts pleaded to be true, it is plain and obvious that the plaintiff's claim cannot succeed (Alberta v. Elder Advocates of Alberta Society, 2011 SCC 24, [2011] 2 S.C.R. 261 (“Alberta Elders”), at para. 20; Hollick v. Toronto (City), 2001 SCC 68, [2001] 3 S.C.R. 158, at para. 25).

[31] L'alinéa 4(1)(a) de la CPA exige que les actes de procédure révèlent une cause d'action. Cette analyse s'effectue selon la norme de preuve appliquée dans Hunt c. Carey Canada Inc., [1990] 2 R.C.S. 959, p. 980, à savoir que le demandeur répond à l'exigence à moins qu'il ne soit manifeste que sa demande ne peut être accueillie, à supposer que tous les faits invoqués soient vrais (Alberta c. Elder Advocates of Alberta Society, 2011 CSC 24, [2011] 2 R.C.S. 261 (« Alberta Elders »), par. 20; Hollick c. Toronto (Ville), 2001 CSC 68, [2001] 3 R.C.S. 158, par. 25).

[32] I first consider the respondents' arguments in relation to the causes of action in restitution for both the indirect and direct purchasers (remedial constructive trust) and then turn to the arguments against the cause of action of the indirect purchasers under s. 36 of the Competition Act.

(a) Restitution — Indirect Purchasers

[33] In the alternative, the appellants claim that the respondents have been unjustly enriched as a result of the alleged overcharge on the sale of HFCS and that the class members have suffered a deprivation in the amount of the overcharge attributable to the sale of HFCS in B.C. and in Canada. They plead that this overcharge resulted from wrongful or unlawful acts and that there can thus be no juristic reasons for the enrichment. The appellants seek the disgorgement of the alleged overcharge paid to the respondents by the class members.

[34] The respondents argue that “both the benefit conferred and deprivation (or loss) suffered was that of the direct purchasers alone” and as such, it is the direct purchasers alone who can bring a claim for restitution for wrongful conduct. They submit that no benefit was conferred directly by the indirect purchaser to the overcharger and that the deprivation in question was suffered by the direct purchasers and not the indirect purchasers, because the passing on of losses is not recognized at law (Cargill factum, at para. 30).

[35] I understand the respondents to be making two separate points: one, that a direct relationship between a plaintiff and a defendant is needed to ground a claim in unjust enrichment; and two, that because indirect purchasers cannot base a claim on passed-on losses, they have no cause of action in unjust enrichment. Both of these arguments have been addressed in the reasons in Pro-Sys.

[36] The requirement that there be a direct relationship between the defendant and the plaintiff for a claim in unjust enrichment is not settled. As indicated in the Pro-Sys reasons, Peel (Regional Municipality) v. Canada, [1992] 3 S.C.R. 762, states only that “[t]he cases in which claims for unjust enrichment have been made out generally deal with benefits conferred directly and specifically on the defendant” (p. 797 (emphasis added)). Peel requires only that a claim in unjust enrichment must

a) Restitution — Acheteurs indirects

be based on “more than an incidental blow-by” and that “[a] secondary collateral benefit will not suffice” (p. 797). These words would appear not to necessarily foreclose a claim where the relationship between the parties is indirect. However, as in Pro-Sys, this does not resolve the issue. First, it is not apparent here that the benefit received by the respondents was mere “incidental blow-by” or “collateral benefit”. Second, the appellants in Pro-Sys argue that Alberta Elders is an example of a case where an unjust enrichment was found absent a direct relationship, calling the requirement into question. Accordingly, it cannot be said that it is plain and obvious that a claim in unjust enrichment should fail at the certification stage on this ground alone.

[37] As to the recognition of passed-on losses, that question has been answered conclusively: the injury suffered by indirect purchasers is recognized at law as is their right to bring actions to recover for those losses. For the reasons previously explained, no insurmountable problem is created by allowing the claims in restitution to be brought by a class comprised of both direct and indirect purchasers. Unjustly obtained amounts are recoverable on the basis that they have been extracted at the plaintiffs’ expense (Maddaugh and McCamus, at p. 3-9). That is what is alleged to have occurred in this case. The appellants allege that the respondents committed wrongful acts that were directed at both the direct and the indirect purchasers and as such both groups should be able to recover their losses.

[38] It is true that, absent indirect purchasers, the rejection of the passing-on defence entitles direct purchasers to 100 percent of the amount of the overcharge. However, this entitlement is altered when indirect purchasers are included in the action. As explained above, this does not mean, as the respondents suggest, that to allow indirect purchasers to join the action would be “to admit of the possibility that a plaintiff could recover twice Peel vient établir uniquement que le fondement d’une action pour enrichissement sans cause ne doit pas revêtir « qu’un caractère purement incident » et qu’« [u]n avantage secondaire et accessoire ne suffit pas » (p. 797). Ces propos ne semblent pas exclure nécessairement une action opposant des parties unies par un lien indirect. Toutefois, tout comme dans l’affaire Pro-Sys, cela ne règle pas la question. Premièrement, il n’est pas évident en l’espèce que l’avantage obtenu par les intimées ne revêtait qu’un « caractère purement incident » ou n’était que « secondaire ». Deuxièmement, les appelants dans l’affaire Pro-Sys soutiennent qu’Alberta Elders est un exemple d’arrêt où la Cour a conclu à l’enrichissement injustifié malgré l’absence d’un lien direct, ce qui soulève un doute sur le caractère impératif de cette condition. On ne saurait donc dire qu’il est manifeste qu’une action pour enrichissement injustifié doit être rejetée à l’étape de la certification pour ce seul motif.

— once from the person who is the immediate beneficiary of the payment or benefit . . . and again from the person who reaped an incidental benefit” (Cargill factum, at para. 32, citing Peel, at p. 797). Rather, it means that the indirect and direct purchasers will share the aggregate amount recovered in the event that the action is successful. To the extent that there are competing claims among the direct and indirect purchasers, I agree with Rice J. that this may be sorted out at a later stage of the proceeding (B.C.S.C., at para. 195). At this stage, both groups share the common interest of maximizing the amount recoverable from the respondents. The indirect purchasers’ cause of action in restitution should therefore not be struck out.

(b) Constructive Trust — Direct Purchasers

[39] On cross-appeal, with respect to the one cause of action remaining to the direct purchasers, the respondents argue that the cause of action in constructive trust should fail.

[40] The respondents claim that neither the requirement of a “proprietary nexus” nor the requirement that the constructive trust be imposed only where a monetary remedy was found to be inadequate were met in this case. As such it is plain and obvious that the direct purchaser claim in constructive trust has no chance of succeeding (see Casco cross-appeal factum, at para. 28, citing Tracy (Guardian ad litem of) v. Instaloans Financial Solution Centres (B.C.) Ltd., 2010 BCCA 357, 320 D.L.R. (4th) 577, for the requirements of a constructive trust). I agree.

[41] In Pro-Sys, noting that Kerr v. Baranow, 2011 SCC 10, [2011] 1 S.C.R. 269, was the relevant controlling authority, I found that the claim in constructive trust must fail because there was no referential property and no explanation by the appellants why a monetary remedy would be inappropriate or insufficient. For the same reasons, reviendrait à [TRADUCTION] « admettre la possibilité d’un double recouvrement par le demandeur — d’abord, de la personne qui bénéficie immédiatement du paiement ou de l’avantage [. . .] et ensuite, de la personne qui en a tiré un avantage incident » (mémoire de Cargill, par. 32, citant l’arrêt Peel, p. 797). Cela signifie plutôt que les acheteurs indirects et les acheteurs directs se partageront la somme globale recouvrée s’ils ont gain de cause. Dans l’éventualité où les acheteurs directs et les acheteurs indirects présentent des demandes concurrentes, je partage l’avis du juge Rice qu’il est possible de régler ce point plus tard au cours de l’instance (C.S.C.-B., par. 195). À ce stade, les deux groupes ont en commun l’intérêt à récupérer la somme d’argent la plus élevée possible auprès des intimées. En conséquence, il ne faut pas radier la cause d’action en restitution des acheteurs indirects.

b) Fiducie par interprétation — Acheteurs directs

I find it plain and obvious that Sun-Rype's claim in constructive trust in this case must fail and should be struck.

(c) Section 36 of the Competition Act — Indirect Purchasers

(i) Passed-On Losses Recognized at Law

[42] Section 36 of the Competition Act provides a cause of action to “[a]ny person who has suffered loss or damage as a result of (a) conduct that is contrary to any provision of Part VI”. The respondents, basing their argument on their fundamental position that passed-on losses are not recognized at law, assert that s. 36 was not intended to provide a right of action to indirect purchasers.

[43] For the reasons explained in Pro-Sys, this argument is rejected. It is not plain and obvious that a cause of action for the indirect purchasers under s. 36 of the Competition Act cannot succeed.

(ii) Jurisdiction Over Extraterritorial Conduct

[44] The respondents argue that “an alleged conspiracy entered into outside Canada, among foreign defendants, to fix prices of products sold to foreign direct purchasers does not constitute an offence under the Competition Act giving rise to a right of civil action” (ADM factum, at para. 54). They claim that the jurisdiction of Canadian courts over violations of the Competition Act by foreign defendants “will have to be determined by reference to the presumptive connecting factors identified in Club Resorts, which determination is beyond the scope of the present appeal” (para. 53) and that conduct cannot be contrary to Part VI of the Competition Act “unless there is a real and substantial link between that conduct and Canada” (para. 60).

réparation pécuniaire est inappropriée ou insuffisante. Pour les mêmes motifs, il est manifeste à mon avis que la demande de Sun-Rype visant à faire reconnaître l'existence d'une fiducie par interprétation est vouée à l'échec et doit être radiée.

c) Article 36 de la Loi sur la concurrence — Acheteurs indirects

(i) Transfert de la perte reconnu en droit

(ii) Compétence sur les actes commis à l'étranger

[45] I agree with the respondents that the framework proposed in Club Resorts Ltd. v. Van Breda, 2012 SCC 17, [2012] 1 S.C.R. 572, will need to be applied in establishing whether there is “real and substantial connection” sufficient to find that Canadian courts have jurisdiction in this case. However, I would question the respondents’ characterization of the factual situation.

[46] The conduct in question, while perpetrated by foreign defendants, allegedly involved each respondent’s Canadian subsidiary acting as its agent. The sales in question were made in Canada, to Canadian customers and Canadian end-consumers. There is at least some suggestion in the case law that where defendants conduct business in Canada, make sales in Canada and conspire to fix prices on products sold in Canada, Canadian courts have jurisdiction (see VitaPharm Canada Ltd. v. F. Hoffmann-LaRoche Ltd. (2002), 20 C.P.C. (5th) 351 (Ont. S.C.J.), at paras. 58, 63-86 and 101-2 (“It is arguable that a conspiracy that injures Canadians gives rise to liability in Canada, even if the conspiracy was formed abroad”: para. 58); Fairhurst v. Anglo American PLC, 2012 BCCA 257, 35 B.C.L.R. (5th) 45, at para. 32 (the B.C.C.A. refusing to deny certification of a class action based on the argument that Canadian courts had no jurisdiction over Competition Act violations occurring outside of Canada); British Columbia v. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd., 2006 BCCA 398, 56 B.C.L.R. (4th) 263, at paras. 32-45 (“A conspiracy occurs in British Columbia if the harm is suffered here, regardless of where the ‘wrongful conduct’ occurred. On that basis, the court has jurisdiction over the ex juris defendants who are alleged to be parties to the conspiracy”: para. 41)).

[47] The respondents have not demonstrated that it is plain and obvious that Canadian courts have no jurisdiction over the alleged anti-competitive acts committed in this case. The cause of action under s. 36 of the Competition Act should not be struck out.

(2) Are There Common Issues?

[48] Section 4(1)(c) of the CPA requires that the claims of the class members raise common issues. The respondents' arguments as to the commonality requirement centre on the standard of proof to be applied to this and the other certification requirements other than the requirement that the pleadings disclose a cause of action. Here, as in Pro-Sys, the respondents urge the Court to resolve the remainder of the certification requirements on a balance of probabilities. They say the Court should adopt the U.S. approach of weighing conflicting evidence at the certification stage. For the reasons set out in Pro-Sys, the standard to be applied here is "some basis in fact" and not a balance of probabilities.

[49] As to the standard to be applied to the expert evidence, the respondents do not argue that it is insufficient to demonstrate commonality; rather, they submit that Rice J. erred in that he applied the wrong standard of proof to the expert methodologies that he examined.

[50] The reasons in Pro-Sys have set out that the standard to be applied to expert evidence is one requiring a credible and plausible methodology capable of proving harm on a class-wide basis.

[51] It is evident that on the certification application, Rice J. analysed the significant amount of expert evidence that was before him and that he applied the correct standard to both the certification requirements ("plain and obvious" for s. 4(1)(a) and "some basis in fact" for s. 4(1)(b) to (e)) and the expert methodology required to establish some basis in fact (whether the expert evidence consisted of a credible and plausible model capable of proving harm on a class-wide basis). There is no basis upon which to interfere with his common issues determination.

(2) Existe-t-il une question commune?

[50] Dans Pro-Sys, il est établi que la norme qui s'applique à la preuve d'expert est celle de la méthode valable et acceptable permettant de prouver le préjudice à l'échelle du groupe.

[51] Il ressort à l'évidence que, lors de l'instruction de la demande visant la certification, le juge Rice a analysé la preuve d'expert volumineuse dont il disposait et qu'il a appliqué la bonne norme tant aux conditions de certification (celle du caractère [TRADUCTION] « manifeste » pour l'al. 4(1)(a) et celle du « certain fondement factuel » pour les al. 4(1)(b) à (e)) qu'à la méthode d'expert employée pour établir l'existence d'un certain fondement factuel (celle de la méthode valable et acceptable permettant de prouver qu'un préjudice a été causé à l'échelle du groupe). Il n'y a aucune raison de modifier sa conclusion sur les questions communes.

(3) Is There an Identifiable Class?

[52] Section 4(1)(b) of the CPA provides that the court must certify a proceeding if, among other requirements, there is an identifiable class of two or more persons. Hollick provides that this certification requirement will be satisfied by demonstrating “some basis in fact” to support it (para. 25).

[53] The class definition proposed by the appellants is “all persons resident in British Columbia and elsewhere in Canada who purchased HFCS or products containing HFCS manufactured by the defendants (collectively, the ‘class’) from January 1, 1988 to June 30, 1995 (the ‘Class Period’)” (B.C.S.C., at para. 2).

[54] The respondents take issue with the inclusion of indirect purchasers in the class. They acknowledge that while impracticability or impossibility in distributing class action proceeds to indirect purchasers does not necessarily preclude finding an “identifiable class”, the facts of this particular case are such that the class cannot be found to be “identifiable” to the extent that it includes indirect purchasers (ADM factum, at para. 85). The respondents argue that the inclusion of indirect purchasers in the class in the present case runs contrary to the purpose of the “identifiable class” requirement because indirect purchasers are not able, based on the class definition, to determine if they are members of the class. Relying on Western Canadian Shopping Centres Inc. v. Dutton, 2001 SCC 46, [2001] 2 S.C.R. 534, the respondents argue that the identifiable class requirement should allow for class membership to be determinable.

[55] They argue that the proposed class definition does not allow for indirect purchasers to determine if they are in fact members of the class as defined. Contrary to the Infineon and Pro-Sys cases where there was evidence that class membership could likely be determined, here “it is simply impossible to make a determination of the presence, or lack of presence, of HFCS in particular products a

(3) Existe-t-il un groupe identifiable?

[53] La définition du groupe proposée par les appelantes est la suivante : [TRADUCTION] « . . . tous les résidents de la Colombie-Britannique et d’ailleurs au Canada qui ont acheté du SMHTF fabriqué par les défenderesses ou des produits en contenant (collectivement le “groupe”) entre le 1^{er} janvier 1988 et le 30 juin 1995 (la “période visée par le recours”) » (C.S.C.-B., par. 2).

consumer in British Columbia may have purchased between 1988 and 1995” (ADM factum, at para. 97). They argue that prominent direct purchasers such as Coke, Pepsi, Vitality Foodservice Canada Inc., Ocean Spray Cranberries and George Weston Limited have used both HFCS and liquid sugar in their products. In many cases, the labels on the products sold in Canada by these direct purchasers did not reflect which sweetener was used. They also point out that on cross-examination on her affidavit, the representative plaintiff Wendy Bredin stated that “she did not know whether any product she purchased during the class period actually contained HFCS” (para. 18). They state that “[i]f the proposed representative Plaintiff in this action is unable to say whether any product she bought in the class period contained HFCS, it is difficult to see how any other potential class member could be aware of this fact” (para. 103).

[56] This is not a typical ground on which the “identifiable class” requirement is challenged. Here, there is no question whether the class definition is too narrow or too broad, whether the definition contains subjective criteria or whether the class definition creates a need to consider the merits. However, when the purpose for which there must be a class definition that designates an “identifiable class” is examined, the problems with the appellants’ case become evident.

[57] I agree with the courts that have found that the purpose of the class definition is to (i) identify those persons who have a potential claim for relief against the defendants; (ii) define the parameters of the lawsuit so as to identify those persons who are bound by its result; (iii) describe who is entitled to notice of the action (Lau v. Bayview Landmark Inc. (1999), 40 C.P.C. (4th) 301 (Ont. S.C.J.), at paras. 26 and 30; Bywater v. Toronto Transit Commission (1998), 27 C.P.C. (4th) 172 (Ont. Ct. J. (Gen. Div.)), at para. 10; Eizenga et al., at § 3.31). Dutton states that “[i]t is necessary . . . that any particular person’s claim to membership in the class be determinable by stated, objective criteria” (para. 38).

SMHTF dans les produits qu’un consommateur de la Colombie-Britannique aurait achetés entre 1988 et 1995 » (mémoire d’ADM, par. 97). Elles font valoir que des acheteurs directs importants comme Coke, Pepsi, Vitality Foodservice Canada Inc., Ocean Spray Cranberries et George Weston limitée ont utilisé tantôt du SMHTF tantôt du sucre liquide dans leurs produits. Dans bien des cas, les étiquettes des produits vendus au Canada par ces acheteurs directs n’indiquaient pas l’édulcorant utilisé. Les intimées soulignent également que, lorsqu’elle a été contre-interrogée sur son affidavit, la demanderesse-représentante, Wendy Bredin, a dit « ignorer si elle avait acheté au cours de la période visée par le recours un seul produit contenant du SMHTF » (par. 18). Elles notent que « [s]i la personne disposée à agir à titre de demanderesse-représentante en l’espèce n’est pas en mesure de savoir si elle a acheté un seul produit contenant du SMHTF au cours de cette période, on voit mal comment un autre membre éventuel du groupe le pourrait » (par. 103).

According to Eizenga et al., “[t]he general principle is that the class must simply be defined in a way that will allow for a later determination of class membership” (§ 3.33).

[58] I do not take issue with the class definition on its face. It uses objective criteria, it does not turn on the merits of the claim, and it cannot be narrowed without excluding members who may have a valid claim. Where the difficulty lies is that there is insufficient evidence to show some basis in fact that two or more persons will be able to determine if they are in fact a member of the class.

[59] The appellants claim that the respondents “attempt to use the complexity inherent in claims arising from a large-scale price-fixing conspiracy to deny those injured by the alleged conduct a legal remedy” and that “courts have found that class definitions similar or identical to that proposed in this case were appropriate” (response factum, at paras. 58 and 61). The appellants rely on the instruction in Dutton, at para. 38, that “[i]t is not necessary that every class member be named or known.” They cite Sauer v. Canada (Agriculture), 2008 CanLII 43774 (Ont. S.C.J.), in support of the proposition that courts can engage in a “relatively elaborate factual investigation in order to determine class membership” and that “[t]he fact that particular persons may have difficulty in proving that they satisfy the conditions for membership is often the case in class proceedings and is not, by itself, a reason for finding that the class is not identifiable” (para. 67, citing Sauer, at para. 28).

[60] However, in Sauer the passage relied upon pertained to the issue of the objectivity of the criteria used in the class definition. In that case, a class action involving cows infected with bovine spongiform encephalopathy (“BSE”) or “mad cow disease”, the class was defined to include “all cattle farmers in Canada”, except Quebec (para. 11). The representative plaintiff adduced evidence of his puisse être déterminée sur des critères explicites et objectifs » (par. 38). Selon Eizenga et autres, [TRADUCTION] « [l]e principe général veut que le groupe soit tout simplement défini de manière à permettre de déterminer par la suite qui en fait partie » (§ 3.33).

own personal losses as well as those of others in the community as a result of the BSE crisis. The defendants challenged the term “cattle farmers” as being too broad and creating a problem for those farmers seeking to self-identify. Lax J. of the Ontario Superior Court of Justice held that in such situations the court could engage in a factual investigation to determine class membership.

[61] That is not the situation in this case. Here, there is no basis in fact to demonstrate that the information necessary to determine class membership is possessed by any of the putative class members. The appellants have an obligation at the certification stage to introduce evidence to establish some basis in fact that at least two class members can be identified. Here, they have not met even this relatively low evidentiary standard.

[62] This is not a case of mere difficulty in proving membership in a defined class. That is what distinguishes this case from Pro-Sys. In Pro-Sys, even if class membership is not immediately evident to potential class members based on the class definition, records of purchase or the presence of the application software or operating systems that form the subject of the appeal on the computers of the putative class members would serve to identify them as part of the identifiable class. Further, in Pro-Sys, Sam Leung, president and director of Pro-Sys Consultants Ltd., one of the representative plaintiffs, offered proof that he had purchased the product in question in the form of the invoice for the purchase of the computer. That evidence demonstrated that class membership was determinable and established some basis in fact that there was an identifiable class.

[63] Conversely, in this case, the respondents’ evidence is that HFCS and liquid sugar had been used interchangeably by direct purchasers during the class period. They also claim that Québec (par. 11). Le demandeur-représentant avait produit la preuve des pertes que lui et des confrères avaient essuyées par suite de la crise de l’ESB. Selon les défendeurs, le terme « éleveurs de bovins » était trop large et posait problème aux agriculteurs cherchant à être reconnus comme membres du groupe. La juge Lax, de la Cour supérieure de justice de l’Ontario, a conclu que dans de telles situations, le tribunal peut examiner les faits pour déterminer l’appartenance au groupe.

[63] À l’inverse, dans la présente affaire, la preuve des intimées montre que les acheteurs directs ont utilisé de façon interchangeable le SMHTF et le sucre liquide au cours de la période visée par le recours. En outre, les intimées prétendent que

Canadian labelling requirements during the class period were such that food and beverage producers were not required to specify which of the two sweeteners was contained in their products. A generic label indicating “sugar/glucose-fructose” could be used for either liquid sugar or HFCS. The result is that a consumer who purchased such a product during the class period would have had no way of determining whether that product contained HFCS, even if they had bothered to check the label. [ADM factum, at para. 100]

[64] The appellants say only that “hundreds of millions of dollars of HFCS was sold to Canadian direct purchasers during the Class Period” and that this HFCS was used in “products such as soft drinks, baked goods and other food products which are purchased by restaurants, grocery wholesalers, supermarkets, convenience stores, movie theatres and others” (response factum, at para. 69). Their expert offers evidence that the amount of HFCS used and the specific products which contained it are identifiable (para. 69, citing the Leitzinger Report, at paras. 10-11, 18-20 and 27 (A.R., vol. II, at pp. 85-86, 89-91 and 95-96)).

[65] The question, however, is not one of whether the identified products contained HFCS, or even whether the overcharge would have reached the indirect purchaser level (i.e. whether passing on had occurred). The problem in this case lies in the fact that indirect purchasers, even knowing the names of the products affected, will not be able to know whether the particular item that they purchased did in fact contain HFCS. The appellants have not offered evidence that could help to overcome the identification problem created by the fact that HFCS and liquid sugar were used interchangeably.

[66] Even Ms. Bredin testified that she is unable to state whether the products she purchased contained HFCS. This fact will remain unchanged because, as noted above, liquid sugar and HFCS were used interchangeably and a generic label indicating only “sugar/glucose-fructose” could be used for either type of sweetener. Ms. Bredin presented no evidence to show that there is some basis in fact that she would be able to answer this question. On

the evidence presented on the application for certification, it appears impossible to determine class membership.

[67] The appellants claim that “although some class members may not be able to self-identify, class membership is determinable by reference to the nature of the purchases made by each individual and the quantity of HFCS in the products purchased” (response factum, at para. 71). However, this is no answer to the self-identification problem. While there may have been indirect purchasers who were harmed by the alleged price-fixing, they cannot self-identify using the proposed definition. Allowing a class proceeding to go forward without identifying two or more persons who will be able to demonstrate that they have suffered loss at the hands of the alleged overchargers subverts the purpose of class proceedings, which is to provide a more efficient means of recovery for plaintiffs who have suffered harm but for whom it would be impractical or unaffordable to bring a claim individually. In this case, class membership is not determinable.

fondement factuel permet de conclure qu’elle pourra répondre à cette question. Vu la preuve produite dans le cadre de la demande de certification, il paraît impossible de déterminer l’appartenance au groupe.

[67] La prétention des appelantes que, [TRADUCTION] « même s’il est possible que certains membres ne puissent se reconnaître comme tels, l’appartenance au groupe peut s’établir eu égard à la nature des achats réalisés par chaque personne et à la quantité de SMHTF contenue dans les produits achetés » (mémoire en réponse, par. 71). Or, ce n’est pas une solution au problème qu’éprouveront les membres éventuels à se reconnaître comme tels. Bien que la fixation des prix reprochée ait peut-être porté préjudice à des acheteurs indirects, ils ne peuvent démontrer qu’ils font partie du groupe à la lumière de la définition proposée. Certifier un recours collectif sans connaître au moins deux personnes qui seront en mesure de prouver les pertes que leur ont fait subir les auteurs présumés de la majoration contrecarre l’objectif des recours collectifs, qui est d’offrir une voie de recours plus efficace aux demandeurs ayant subi un préjudice mais pour qui il serait irréaliste d’exercer un recours individuel ou qui n’ont pas les moyens de le faire. Il est impossible de déterminer l’appartenance au groupe en l’espèce.

[69] In this case, the appellants argue that denying that there is an identifiable class is to confuse the ability to identify a class with the ability to identify each individual member of that class (response factum, at para. 72). I agree that it is not necessary for each individual class member to be identified at the outset of the litigation in order for the class to be certified. However, as set out in the legislation, the matter will only be certified if, inter alia, “there is an identifiable class of 2 or more persons” (s. 4(1)(b)). In this case, the problem is that the indirect purchaser plaintiff did not offer any evidence to show some basis in fact that two or more persons could prove they purchased a product actually containing HFCS during the class period and were therefore identifiable members of the class.

[70] Justice Karakatsanis says that there is some basis in fact to conclude that some indirect purchasers could prove that they probably purchased products containing HFCS (para. 115). With respect, no evidence was provided to establish some basis in fact that any individual indirect purchasers could do so. Allowing the class to be certified in such circumstances would be to lower the evidentiary standard necessary to satisfy the criteria at the certification stage from some basis in fact to mere speculation.

[71] Justice Karakatsanis also states that “expert evidence may provide a credible and plausible method offering a realistic prospect of establishing loss on a class-wide basis” (para. 108). However, even if expert evidence satisfies the certification judge that the class as a whole was harmed, that does not obviate the need for the certification judge to be satisfied that there is some basis in fact indicating that at least two persons can prove they incurred a loss.

If, as in this case, there is no basis in fact to show that at least someone can prove they fit within the class definition, the class cannot be certified because the criteria of “an identifiable class of 2 or more persons” is not met. No amount of expert evidence establishing that the defendants have harmed the class as a whole does away with this requirement.

[73] This is not to say that an identifiable class could never be found in similar circumstances as appear in this case. An identifiable class could be found if evidence was presented that provided some basis in fact that at least two persons could prove they had suffered individual harm. The problem in this case is that no such evidence was tendered.

[74] Justice Karakatsanis writes that “if no individual seeks an individual remedy, it will not be necessary to prove individual loss” (para. 97), and that the aggregate damages provisions of the CPA allow class actions to proceed “where liability to the class has been proven but individual membership in the class is difficult or impossible to determine” (para. 102 (emphasis in original)).

[75] As I understand it, Justice Karakatsanis’s point is that where liability to the class has been proven, there is no requirement to prove that any person is a member of a class or that any person has suffered individual damage. The necessary implication is that class proceeding legislation alters existing causes of action. For example, s. 36 of the Competition Act creates a cause of action for “[a]ny person who has suffered loss or damage”. My colleague’s approach would suggest a class action claim could proceed under s. 36 of the Competition Act without any person establishing that they had suffered loss or damage. However, the CPA neither creates a new cause of action nor alters the basis of existing causes of action. Rather, it allows claimants plus d’être visées par la définition. Si, comme en l’espèce, aucun fondement factuel ne permet de démontrer que c’est le cas, le recours ne peut être certifié puisqu’il n’est pas satisfait au critère relatif à l’existence d’[TRADUCTION] « un groupe identifiable de 2 personnes ou plus ». Aucune preuve d’expert établissant le préjudice causé par les défenderesses au groupe en entier, si abondante soit-elle, ne pourrait faire disparaître cette exigence.

[74] Selon ma collègue, « si personne ne cherche à obtenir une réparation individuelle, il ne sera pas nécessaire de prouver une perte individuelle » (par. 97) et les dispositions de la CPA autorisant l’octroi de dommages-intérêts globaux permettent que soit intenté un recours collectif dans le cas « où la responsabilité envers le groupe a été démontrée, mais où l’appartenance au groupe est difficile ou impossible à établir » (par. 102 (en italique dans l’original)).

with causes of action to unite and pursue their claims as a class.

[76] The aggregate damages provisions of the CPA allow the court to dispense with the need to calculate the quantum of damages for each individual class member and permits distribution of the proceeds on a cy-près basis rather than to individual members of the class. However, where the proposed certified causes of action require proof of loss as a component of proving liability, the certification judge must be satisfied that there is some basis in fact that at least two persons can prove they incurred a loss. Establishing that the class as a whole has suffered loss does not obviate this requirement.

(4) Conclusion on Identifiable Class

[77] The goal of the certification stage, as indicated by McLachlin C.J. in Hollick, is to determine if, procedurally, the action is best brought in the form of a class action (para. 16). In this case, given that the appellants did not show that there was some basis in fact to believe that at least two persons can establish they are members of the class, I am unable to answer that question in the affirmative.

[78] An advantage of a class proceeding is that it serves judicial economy by allowing similar individual actions to be aggregated (Hollick, at para. 15; Dutton, at para. 27). In my view, implicit in this objective is that the foundation upon which an individual action could be built must be equally present in the class action setting. That foundation is lacking here.

[79] I do not disagree with Justice Karakatsanis that behaviour modification can be an objective of class proceedings. However, the circumstances here demonstrate that class proceedings are not always the appropriate means of addressing behaviour modification. In cases in which loss or damage due to price-fixing cannot be proven, the appropriate habilite les demandeurs ayant en commun une cause d'action à s'unir pour la faire valoir collectivement.

(4) Conclusion sur la question du groupe identifiable

[78] L'un des avantages du recours collectif est qu'il favorise l'économie des ressources judiciaires par le regroupement d'actions individuelles semblables (Hollick, par. 15; Dutton, par. 27). À mon sens, cet objectif implique que le fondement sur lequel reposerait le recours individuel doit pouvoir se transposer au recours collectif. Or, ce fondement fait défaut en l'espèce.

[79] Je ne suis pas en désaccord avec la juge Karakatsanis selon qui la modification des comportements peut constituer un objectif des recours collectifs. Or, la présente situation démontre qu'il ne convient pas toujours de procéder par recours collectif pour obtenir un tel résultat. S'il se révèle impossible d'établir la perte ou les dommages recourse may be for the Commissioner of Competition to charge the defendants under the Competition Act. A process commenced by the Commissioner requires only proof of price-fixing. There is no need to prove passing on or that any particular consumer overpaid for a particular product. Whether the Competition Bureau intends to prosecute the respondents in this case is not known. Regardless, it does not change the fact that in a case such as this, where certification criteria cannot be met, such prosecutions may have to be considered if behaviour modification is the objective.

V. Conclusion

[80] Given the finding that an identifiable class cannot be established for the indirect purchasers, the class action as it relates to the indirect purchasers cannot be certified. I would dismiss the appeal with costs. Given the finding that the pleadings do not disclose a cause of action in constructive trust, the claim of the direct purchasers cannot succeed and should be dismissed. The class action as it relates to the direct purchasers cannot be certified. The cross-appeal is allowed with costs.

KARAKATSANIS J. (dissenting on the appeal) —

I. Overview

[81] I disagree with my colleague's conclusion that the claim by the indirect purchasers fails to meet the certification requirement under s. 4(1)(b) of the Class Proceedings Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 50 (CPA). In my view, there is "some basis in fact" to find "an identifiable class of 2 or more persons". Accordingly, I would allow the appeal and remit the matter to the British Columbia Supreme Court for trial.

attribuables à la fixation des prix, il peut être opportun pour le commissaire de la concurrence de porter des accusations contre les défendeurs en vertu de sa loi habilitante. Lorsqu'il intente une poursuite, le commissaire n'a qu'à établir la fixation des prix. Point n'est besoin de démontrer le transfert de la perte ou de prouver qu'un consommateur donné a payé trop cher un certain produit. On ne sait pas si le Bureau de la concurrence poursuivra les intimées en l'espèce. Quoiqu'il en soit, cela ne change rien au fait que, dans un cas comme celui qui nous occupe, où il n'est pas satisfait aux critères de certification, il pourrait falloir envisager de telles poursuites si l'objectif recherché est la modification des comportements.

V. Conclusion

I. Aperçu

[81] Je ne souscris pas à la conclusion de mon collègue selon laquelle le recours des acheteurs indirects ne satisfait pas à la condition de certification prévue à l'al. 4(1)(b) de la Class Proceedings Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, ch. 50 (CPA). Selon moi, un « certain fondement factuel » permet de conclure à l'existence d'un [TRADUCTION] « groupe identifiable de 2 personnes ou plus ». Je suis donc d'avis d'accueillir le pourvoi et de renvoyer l'affaire à la Cour suprême de la Colombie-Britannique pour instruction.

[82] The appellants' proposed class definition includes "all persons resident in British Columbia and elsewhere in Canada who purchased HFCS or products containing HFCS manufactured by the defendants (collectively, the 'class') from January 1, 1988 to June 30, 1995 (the 'Class Period')" (2010 BCSC 922 (CanLII), at para. 2).

[83] This class includes both the direct and indirect purchasers of high-fructose corn syrup (HFCS) — the subject of alleged price fixing. At issue is the identification of a class which would include indirect purchasers — the retailers and consumers — who purchased products containing HFCS.

[84] Justice Rothstein notes that this definition of the class appears to satisfy the requirements of an identifiable class on its face. It uses objective criteria; it does not turn on the merits of the claim; and it cannot be narrowed without excluding members who may have a valid claim (Western Canadian Shopping Centres Inc. v. Dutton, 2001 SCC 46, [2001] 2 S.C.R. 534, at para. 38). However, the class of indirect purchasers is challenged on the basis that individuals will be unable to determine whether they purchased a product containing HFCS and thus whether they are a member of the class. The issue of the appropriateness of the representative plaintiff is not before the Court.

[85] Justice Rothstein concludes that there is no basis in fact to identify a class because there is no or insufficient evidence that class members can be identified or can self-identify (paras. 58 and 65-67). He concludes that it is impossible for the indirect purchasers to prove they purchased a product containing HFCS and thus suffered loss.

[86] I have two objections to this conclusion. First, I am not persuaded that the requirement that the class be identifiable includes the requirement that individual members of the class be capable of proving individual loss. Indeed, as discussed below, the CPA provides for remedies when the class has

[85] Selon le juge Rothstein, aucun fondement factuel ne permet de reconnaître l'existence du groupe, parce que la preuve ne montre guère que les membres du groupe pourront être déterminés ou se reconnaître comme tels (par. 58 et 65-67). Il conclut qu'il est impossible pour les acheteurs indirects de prouver qu'ils ont acheté un produit contenant du SMHTF et qu'ils ont donc subi une perte.

[86] Je ne souscris pas à cette conclusion pour deux motifs. Premièrement, je ne suis pas convaincue que pour qu'il y ait un groupe identifiable, il faut que chacun des membres du groupe soit en mesure d'établir une perte individuelle. En fait, comme nous le verrons, la CPA prévoit que des mesures de suffered harm that are available without proof of individual loss. Such an approach best serves the purposes of class proceedings, which are designed not only to provide enhanced access to justice and judicial economy, but also to motivate behaviour modification.

[87] Second, even if proof of individual loss is necessary to establish an identifiable class under the CPA, I do not agree that, on this record, it will be impossible to determine whether an individual is a member of the class.

[88] The application judge, Rice J., held that the appellants satisfied the requirement that there is an identifiable class. The Court of Appeal did not address this issue (2011 BCCA 187, 305 B.C.A.C. 55). For the reasons that follow, I conclude that there is no basis to set aside the decision of the application judge.

II. Class Requirements — General Principles

[89] Section 4(1)(b) of the CPA requires that there be “an identifiable class of 2 or more persons”.

[90] In Dutton, this Court addressed the specific certification requirement that there be an identifiable class (para. 38):

First, the class must be capable of clear definition. Class definition is critical because it identifies the individuals entitled to notice, entitled to relief (if relief is awarded), and bound by the judgment. It is essential, therefore, that the class be defined clearly at the outset of the litigation. The definition should state objective criteria by which members of the class can be identified. While the criteria should bear a rational relationship to the common issues asserted by all class members, the criteria should not depend on the outcome of the litigation. It is not necessary that every class member be named or known. It is necessary, however, that any particular person’s claim to membership in the class be determinable by stated, objective criteria réparation peuvent être accordées lorsque le groupe a subi un préjudice, sans qu’il soit nécessaire d’établir une perte individuelle. C’est là l’approche qui répond le mieux aux objectifs des recours collectifs, lesquels visent à favoriser non seulement l’accès à la justice et l’économie des ressources judiciaires, mais aussi la modification des comportements.

II. Conditions préalables à la reconnaissance du groupe — principes généraux

Premièrement, le groupe doit pouvoir être clairement défini. La définition du groupe est essentielle parce qu’elle précise qui a droit aux avis, qui a droit à la réparation (si une réparation est accordée), et qui est lié par le jugement. Il est donc primordial que le groupe puisse être clairement défini au début du litige. La définition devrait énoncer des critères objectifs permettant d’identifier les membres du groupe. Les critères devraient avoir un rapport rationnel avec les revendications communes à tous les membres du groupe mais ne devraient pas dépendre de l’issue du litige. Il n’est pas nécessaire que tous les membres du groupe soient nommés ou connus. Il est toutefois nécessaire que l’appartenance d’une personne au groupe puisse être déterminée sur des critères explicites et objectifs [91] Obviously, it is not sufficient to make a bald assertion that a class exists. The record must contain a sufficient evidentiary basis to establish the existence of the class (Lau v. Bayview Landmark Inc. (1999), 40 C.P.C. (4th) 301 (Ont. S.C.J.), at para. 23). But the evidentiary standard at the certification stage is not onerous: the applicant must establish that there is “some basis in fact” for each of the requirements (Hollick v. Toronto (City), 2001 SCC 68, [2001] 3 S.C.R. 158, at para. 25). This standard falls below the standard used in the United States and purposefully avoids a trial on the merits at the certification stage. See Pro-Sys Consultants Ltd. v. Microsoft Corporation, 2013 SCC 57, [2013] 3 S.C.R. 477, at para. 102.

III. Application to This Case

A. The Record and Position of the Parties

[92] The respondents led evidence establishing that prominent direct purchasers such as Coke, Pepsi, Vitality Foodservice Canada Inc., Ocean Spray Cranberries and George Weston Limited have used both HFCS and liquid sugar in their products. At the time, the relevant laws permitted the use of a generic label indicating “sugar/glucose-fructose” for either type of sweetener. In many cases, the labels on the products sold in Canada by these direct purchasers did not reflect which sweetener was used. Indeed, the representative plaintiff stated on cross-examination that she did not know whether any product she purchased during the class period actually contained HFCS.

[93] HFCS was used in “products such as soft drinks, baked goods and other food products which [were] purchased by restaurants, grocery wholesalers, supermarkets, convenience stores, movie theatres and others” (appellants’ response factum, at para. 69). The appellants filed expert evidence and proposed methodology to show that the amount of HFCS used and the specific products which contained it are identifiable (ibid., citing the Leitzinger Report, at paras. 10-11, 18-20 and 27). The expert evidence also provides specific industry research confirming that the use of HFCS in the soft-drink

[91] De toute évidence, il ne suffit pas de simplement affirmer qu’un groupe existe. Le dossier doit étayer suffisamment la déclaration (Lau c. Bayview Landmark Inc. (1999), 40 C.P.C. (4th) 301 (C.S.J. Ont.), par. 23). La norme de preuve applicable à l’étape de la certification n’est toutefois pas exigeante : le demandeur doit établir qu’« un certain fondement factuel » sous-tend chacune des conditions (Hollick c. Toronto (Ville), 2001 CSC 68, [2001] 3 R.C.S. 158, par. 25). Cette norme est moins rigoureuse que celle qui s’applique aux États-Unis, et vise expressément à éviter un examen au fond à l’étape de la certification. Voir Pro-Sys Consultants Ltd. c. Microsoft Corporation, 2013 CSC 57, [2013] 3 R.C.S. 477, par. 102.

III. Application à la présente affaire

A. Le dossier et la position des parties

[93] Le SMHTF entrait dans la fabrication de [TRADUCTION] « denrées alimentaires comme les boissons gazeuses et les produits de boulangerie achetées par des restaurants, grossistes, supermarchés, dépanneurs, cinémas et autres établissements » (mémoire en réponse des appelantes, par. 69). Les appelantes ont déposé une preuve d’expert et proposé une méthode pour démontrer qu’il est possible d’établir la quantité de SMHTF utilisée et de déterminer les produits précis qui en contenaient (ibid., citant le rapport de M. Leitzinger, par. 10-11, 18-20 et 27). La preuve industry was more prevalent as time went on, and largely had replaced liquid sugar as early as two years into the class period (A.R., vol. II, at p. 94; Leitzinger Report, at para. 24).

[94] The respondents' position is that because HFCS was used interchangeably with liquid sugar, and because labeling requirements during the class period did not require food and beverage producers to specify which of the two sweeteners was contained in their products, indirect purchasers (retailers and consumers) would have had no way of determining whether the product contained HFCS, even if they had checked the label (factum of Archer Daniels Midland Company and ADM Agri-Industries Company, at paras. 99-100).

[95] The appellants submit that "although some class members may not be able to self-identify, class membership is determinable by reference to the nature of the purchases made by each individual and the quantity of HFCS in the products purchased" (response factum, at para. 71). Indeed, the industry research data suggests that such information may be more readily available for indirect purchasers who are commercial retailers with more consistent recording practices.

B. Class Identification Does Not Require That Individual Class Members Can Prove Individual Loss

[96] Justice Rothstein accepts that the class definition complies on its face with the Dutton criteria. However, he concludes that there is insufficient evidence to show that any persons will be able to determine if they bought a product containing HFCS and thus if they are a member of the class. My colleague says that if individuals cannot show they have suffered individual loss, this "subverts the purpose of class proceedings, d'expert fait également état de travaux de recherche portant sur l'industrie des boissons gazeuses, lesquels confirment que l'utilisation du SMHTF était à la hausse depuis quelques années et que, deux ans après le début de la période visée par le recours, cette substance avait déjà largement remplacé le sucre liquide (d.a., vol. II, p. 94; rapport de M. Leitzinger, par. 24).

[95] Les appelantes soutiennent que [TRADUCTION] « même s'il est possible que certains membres ne puissent se reconnaître comme tels, l'appartenance au groupe peut s'établir eu égard à la nature des achats réalisés par chaque personne et à la quantité de SMHTF contenue dans les produits achetés » (mémoire en réponse, par. 71). En fait, selon des recherches sur cette industrie, ce genre de renseignements pourrait s'obtenir plus facilement pour les acheteurs indirects qui sont des commerçants au détail, habitués de ce fait à une tenue de livres rigoureuse, que pour les autres.

B. La détermination de l'appartenance au groupe n'exige pas que chacun des membres soit en mesure d'établir une perte individuelle which is to provide a more efficient means of recovery for plaintiffs who have suffered harm but for whom it would be impractical or unaffordable to bring a claim individually” (para. 67 (emphasis in original)).

[97] This is not the only purpose of class actions. Behaviour modification is an important goal, especially in price-fixing cases. While class proceedings are clearly intended to create a more efficient means of recovery for plaintiffs who have suffered harm, there are strong reasons to conclude that class proceedings are not limited to such actions. As I detail below, the CPA is designed to permit a means of recovery for the benefit of the class as a whole, without proof of individual loss, even where it is difficult to establish class membership. Thus, if no individual seeks an individual remedy, it will not be necessary to prove individual loss. Such class actions permit the disgorgement of unlawful gains and serve not only the purposes of enhanced access to justice and judicial economy, but also the broader purpose of behaviour modification. Therefore, I am not persuaded that it is a prerequisite that individual members of the class can ultimately prove individual harm. See, for example, Steele v. Toyota Canada Inc., 2011 BCCA 98, 14 B.C.L.R. (5th) 271.

[98] An identifiable class serves to give individual members notice so that they can exercise their willingness to be a member and to claim relief. Nonetheless, there will often be circumstances where it is difficult for class members to self-identify based on the class definition.

[99] In Dutton, at para. 38, McLachlin C.J. held: “It is not necessary that every class member be named or known.” In Risorto v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Co. (2007), 38 C.P.C. (6th) 373 (Ont. S.C.J.), Cullity J. held, at para. 31: “The fact that particular persons may have difficulty in proving that they satisfy the conditions for membership is often the case in class proceedings and est d’offrir une voie de recours plus efficace aux demandeurs ayant subi un préjudice mais pour qui il serait irréaliste d’exercer un recours individuel ou qui n’ont pas les moyens de le faire » (par. 67 (en italique dans l’original)).

[97] Il ne s’agit pas là du seul objectif des recours collectifs. La modification des comportements en constitue un objet important, tout particulièrement en matière de fixation des prix. Si ce type d’action vise manifestement à offrir une voie de recours plus efficace aux demandeurs ayant subi un préjudice, il y a des raisons sérieuses de conclure que les recours collectifs ne se limitent pas à de tels effets. Comme nous le verrons en détail, la CPA est conçue de manière à donner un recours au groupe dans son ensemble, sans qu’il soit nécessaire de prouver une perte individuelle, même s’il est difficile d’établir l’appartenance au groupe. En conséquence, si personne ne cherche à obtenir une réparation individuelle, il ne sera pas nécessaire de prouver une perte individuelle. De tels recours collectifs permettent la restitution de gains provenant d’activités illégales et répondent non seulement aux objectifs d’accès à la justice et d’économie des ressources judiciaires, mais aussi à l’objectif général de modification des comportements. Je ne suis donc pas convaincue qu’il faut que chaque membre du groupe puisse, à terme, prouver un préjudice individuel. Voir, par exemple, Steele c. Toyota Canada Inc., 2011 BCCA 98, 14 B.C.L.R. (5th) 271.

is not, by itself, a reason for a finding that the class is not identifiable.” See also Sauer v. Canada (Agriculture), 2008 CanLII 43774 (Ont. S.C.J.), at para. 28.

[100] As already noted, the statute provides for aggregate damages and cy-près awards that permit recovery and disgorgement of ill-gotten gains, without proof of individual loss and even where individual members cannot be identified. Section 29 of the CPA permits “an order for an aggregate monetary award in respect of all or any part of a defendant’s liability to class members”, upon certain conditions, including when:

- (c) the aggregate or a part of the defendant’s liability to some or all class members can reasonably be determined without proof by individual class members.

Section 31(1) of the CPA provides:

31(1) If the court makes an order under section 29 [for an aggregate monetary award], the court may further order that all or a part of the aggregate money award be applied so that some or all individual class or subclass members share in the award on an average or proportional basis if

- (a) it would be impractical or inefficient to
 - (i) identify the class or subclass members entitled to share in the award . . .

certaines personnes aient du mal à prouver qu’elles satisfont aux conditions d’appartenance et cela ne permet pas en soi de conclure que le groupe n’est pas identifiable. » Voir aussi Sauer c. Canada (Agriculture), 2008 CanLII 43774 (C.S.J. Ont.), par. 28.

[100] Comme nous l’avons vu, la Loi prévoit la possibilité d’accorder des dommages-intérêts globaux et de verser une indemnité suivant le principe de l’aussi-près (cy-près doctrine), qui permettent le recouvrement et la restitution de gains mal acquis, sans qu’il soit nécessaire de prouver une perte individuelle et même lorsque l’identité de certains membres ne peut être connue. En effet, suivant l’art. 29 de la CPA, [TRADUCTION] « [1]e tribunal peut fixer par ordonnance le montant global des dommages-intérêts quant à la totalité ou à une partie de la responsabilité pécuniaire d’un défendeur envers les membres du groupe, et rendre jugement en conséquence » si certaines conditions sont remplies, et notamment si :

- (c) la totalité ou une partie de la responsabilité du défendeur envers tous les membres du groupe ou certains d’entre eux peut raisonnablement être établie sans que des membres n’aient à en faire la preuve individuellement.

Le paragraphe 31(1) de la CPA prévoit :

[TRADUCTION]

31(1) S’il rend une ordonnance en vertu de l’article 29 [ordonnance fixant le montant global des dommages-intérêts], le tribunal peut également ordonner que la totalité ou une partie du montant global des dommages-intérêts soit affectée de façon que tous les membres du groupe ou du sous-groupe ou certains d’entre eux se partagent les dommages-intérêts selon la règle de la moyenne ou selon celle de la proportionnalité s’il estime à la fois

- (a) qu’il serait irréaliste ou inefficace
 - (i) soit d’identifier les membres du groupe ou du sous-groupe qui ont droit à une part du montant global des dommages-intérêts adjugés . . .

34 . . .

- (3) The court may make an order under subsection (1) whether or not all the class or subclass members can be identified or all their shares can be exactly determined.
- (4) The court may make an order under subsection (1) even if the order would benefit
 - (a) persons who are not class or subclass members . . .

[101] Section 34 has been interpreted to authorize cy-près awards — awards made to charities in situations where some class members cannot be identified. Interpreting the equivalent Ontario provision, s. 26 of the Ontario Class Proceedings Act, 1992, S.O. 1992, c. 6, Winkler J. remarked that this vision of the class determination permitted “a settlement that is entirely Cy pres” (Gilbert v. Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce (2004), 3 C.P.C. (6th) 35 (Ont. S.C.J.), at para. 15 (emphasis added)). See also Cassano v. Toronto-Dominion Bank (2009), 98 O.R. (3d) 543 (S.C.J.), at paras. 15 and 17.

[102] And, while aggregate damages provisions are tools which are intended to be resorted to only upon an antecedent finding of liability (see Pro-Sys, at para. 131), they nonetheless permit access to justice and behaviour modification in cases where liability to the class has been proven but individual membership in the class is difficult or impossible to determine. The aggregate assessment of damages is an important common issue at the heart of the behaviour modification goal of class actions. It is a powerful tool for class actions.

Et l’art. 34 de la CPA prévoit :

34 . . .

- (3) Le tribunal peut rendre une ordonnance en vertu du paragraphe (1), que tous les membres du groupe ou du sous-groupe soient identifiables ou non, ou que la part de chacun d’eux puisse être ou non établie exactement.
- (4) Le tribunal peut rendre une ordonnance en vertu du paragraphe (1), même si cette ordonnance profiterait
 - (a) à des personnes qui ne sont pas membres du groupe ou du sous-groupe . . .

[103] Thus, the legislation explicitly contemplates difficulties or, in some cases, impossibility in self-identification in the class procedural vehicle. Such difficulties have not been considered fatal to authorization under the CPA (in B.C. and in its equivalent in Ontario) provided that there is “some basis in fact” that the class exists and there is a rational connection between the class and the common issues. See, for example, Lau, at paras. 21-22, and Steele.

[104] This Court noted in Dutton that “any particular person’s claim to membership in the class [should] be determinable by stated, objective criteria” (para. 38). This requirement speaks to the need to clearly define the criteria for membership — not to the ability of a given individual to prove that they meet the criteria. Whether the claimants can prove their claim for an individual remedy is a separate issue that need not be resolved at the certification stage.

[105] Here, the record contains a sufficient evidentiary basis to establish the existence of the class (Lau, at para. 23). Direct purchasers of HFCS used it extensively in products that were sold widely to retailers and to consumers. Given the nature of a price-fixing case, loss flows directly from the purchase of HFCS, or, in the case of indirect purchasers, products containing HFCS. An individual who purchased such a product during the relevant time period would have the foundation for an individual suit. All indirect purchasers share the same basis for establishing harm. There is a rational connection between the class as defined and the asserted common issues. See Ford v. F. Hoffmann-La Roche Ltd. (2005), 74 O.R. (3d) 758 (S.C.J.), at paras. 22-23; Alfresh Beverages Canada Corp. v. Hoechst AG (2002), 16 C.P.C. (5th) 301 (Ont. S.C.J.), at para. 11.

[106] Nor is it seriously disputed that there is some basis in fact to show that indirect purchasers as a class were harmed by the alleged price fixing

[106] Il n’est pas non plus contesté sérieusement qu’un certain fondement factuel permet de conclure que la fixation des prix reprochée a porté préjudice and thus the members of the class suffered harm. The methodology proposed to establish the harm to the class members purports to ascertain an aggregate amount by which the class members were overcharged. Indeed, as Justice Rothstein finds, it has some basis in fact and there is a high probability that any award stemming from these proceedings would be distributed on a cy-près basis. This means that it may never be necessary or legally required to identify individual members of the class.

[107] For these reasons, I am not persuaded that the issue of whether an individual can prove individual loss is a necessary enquiry at certification. In sum, while class actions are a procedural vehicle, they are not merely procedural. They make possible claims that are very complex or could not be prosecuted individually, not only because it would be inefficient or unaffordable, but also because it may be extremely difficult to prove individual claims. The CPA does have substantive implications: it creates a remedy that recognizes that damages to the class as a whole can be proven, even when proof of individual members' damages is impractical, and that is available even if those who are not members of the class can benefit.

[108] I agree with Justice Rothstein that the aggregate damages provisions relate to the assessment of damages and cannot be used to establish liability. However, where proof of loss or detriment is essential to a finding of liability, for example in a cause of action under s. 36 of the Competition Act, or in tort, expert evidence may provide a credible and plausible method offering a realistic prospect of establishing loss on a class-wide basis. See Pro-Sys, at paras. 120 and 140. While these provisions do not create new causes of action, they permit individual members of the class to obtain remedies that may not be available to them on an individual suit because of difficulties of proving the extent of their individual loss. The aggregate damage aux acheteurs indirects collectivement et donc que les membres du groupe ont subi un dommage. La méthode proposée pour démontrer le préjudice causé aux membres du groupe vise à établir le montant global du surcoût. En fait, comme le conclut le juge Rothstein, cette méthode repose sur un certain fondement factuel, et il est fort probable que le versement de toute indemnité ordonnée à l'issue de la présente instance sera effectué suivant le principe de l'aussi-près. Ainsi, il ne sera peut-être jamais nécessaire ni impératif en droit que les membres individuels du groupe soient connus.

[108] Je suis d'accord avec le juge Rothstein pour dire que les dispositions autorisant l'octroi de dommages-intérêts globaux se rapportent à l'évaluation de la réparation et ne peuvent servir à établir la responsabilité. Cependant, lorsque celle-ci est subordonnée à la preuve de la perte ou des dommages, par exemple dans une action fondée sur l'art. 36 de la Loi sur la concurrence ou une action en responsabilité délictuelle, la preuve d'expert peut présenter une méthode valable et acceptable offrant une possibilité réaliste d'établir la perte pour l'ensemble du groupe. Voir Pro-Sys, par. 120 et 140. Bien qu'elles ne créent pas de nouvelles causes d'action, ces dispositions permettent à chaque membre du groupe d'obtenir des provision and cy-près awards promote behaviour modification and provide access to justice where it otherwise may be difficult to achieve.

[109] This Court cautioned in Hollick that class proceedings legislation should be construed generously and not narrowly to give life to the statute's purpose, namely to encourage judicial economy and access to justice, and to modify the behaviour of wrongdoers (paras. 14-15).¹

C. Some Basis in Fact to Show That Individuals Could Prove Personal Loss/Class Members Are Identifiable

[110] Justice Rothstein accepts the respondents' position and concludes that the appellants fail to provide evidence that would overcome the identification problem created by the fact that HFCS and liquid sugar were used interchangeably during the class period and that labeling at the time did not differentiate between them. He concludes that it appears impossible to show that an indirect purchaser had, in fact, bought a particular product that contained HFCS (para. 66). He found this failure fatal to the certification application.

[111] In my view, the record does not lead to the conclusion that it will be impossible to prove an individual is a member of the class — or that individual members of the group could not stand alone as plaintiffs. As I have explained, I do not agree that this is a necessary inquiry at the certification stage. Even so, I agree with the judge of réparations qui lui seraient éventuellement refusées à l'issue d'une poursuite individuelle en raison des difficultés qu'il aurait à prouver l'étendue de sa propre perte. Les dispositions autorisant l'octroi de dommages-intérêts globaux et les versements suivant le principe de l'aussi-près favorisent la modification des comportements et l'accès à la justice dans les cas où ces objectifs pourraient par ailleurs se révéler difficiles à atteindre.

C. Un certain fondement factuel permet d'établir que chacun des membres pourrait prouver une perte individuelle et donc que l'appartenance au groupe est déterminable

first instance that there is “some basis in fact” to show that individual loss is capable of being proven.

[112] In effect, Justice Rothstein focuses on the difficulties that individual claimants will have to prove personal loss. Here, he accepts that expert evidence meets the standard of “some basis in fact” and consists of a credible and plausible model capable of proving harm on a class-wide basis. However, he is not satisfied that the evidence provides “some basis in fact” that there will be evidence capable of proving individual loss.

[113] Justice Rothstein’s conclusion sets the evidentiary standard too high. In this price-fixing case, personal loss will follow if indirect purchasers can prove that they purchased a product containing HFCS. Even at the merits stage, however, claimants will not have to prove definitively that they purchased a particular product that contained HFCS. Labeling — if indeed generic labeling was used throughout — is not the only way to prove an individual loss. It will be sufficient if the trial judge is satisfied, upon expert or other evidence, that an individual claimant probably purchased a product containing it.

[114] The requirement that there be an evidentiary foundation — or some basis in fact — to support the certification criteria does not include a preliminary merits test and does not require the plaintiffs to indicate the evidence upon which they will rely to prove these claims. “The question at the certification stage is not whether the claim is likely to succeed, but whether the suit is appropriately prosecuted as a class action” (see Hollick, at paras. 16 and 25).

[115] A claim under s. 36 of the Competition Act requires that the fact of loss — rather than the amount of loss — be proven in order to establish liability. As Justice Rothstein accepts, the expert suis d’accord avec le juge de première instance pour dire qu’[TRADUCTION] « un certain fondement factuel » permet d’établir qu’une perte individuelle peut être prouvée.

[115] Une demande fondée sur l’art. 36 de la Loi sur la concurrence exige la preuve de la perte — et non celle du montant de la perte — pour l’établissement de la responsabilité. Le juge Rothstein evidence in this case is capable of proving the fact of loss to the class. Here, the appellants have provided evidence and a framework capable of proving — on a balance of probabilities — that products containing HFCS were purchased. While it may prove challenging, there is “some basis in fact” to conclude that some indirect purchasers could prove that they probably purchased products that contained price-fixed HFCS during the relevant period. Evidence of market practices, the prevalence of the product, and the nature of the purchases may provide a sufficient basis for a trial judge to make the necessary findings.

[117] To take a simple example, since a significant proportion of soft drinks contain HFCS, a trial judge may have no difficulty in finding that wholesalers of soft drinks, grocery stores or even individual persons — all possible indirect purchasers of HFCS — probably purchased some products convient que la preuve d’expert en l’espèce permet d’établir que le groupe a effectivement subi une perte. Les appelantes ont produit des éléments de preuve et un cadre permettant de démontrer — selon la prépondérance des probabilités — l’achat de produits contenant du SMHTF. Bien qu’une telle preuve puisse être difficile à faire, « un certain fondement factuel » permet de conclure que des acheteurs indirects pourraient établir qu’ils ont probablement acheté durant la période pertinente des produits contenant du SMHTF dont le prix a été fixé. La preuve des pratiques commerciales, de la forte présence de cet ingrédient et de la nature des achats pourrait suffire au juge de première instance pour tirer les conclusions nécessaires.

[116] À titre d’exemple, le rapport d’expert produit par les appelantes et établi par M. Leitzinger renfermait les renseignements suivants. Les intimées contrôlaient conjointement la [TRADUCTION] « majeure partie de la production » de SMHTF et détenaient donc vraisemblablement un monopole (d.a., vol. II, p. 81; rapport de M. Leitzinger, par. 6). Les fabricants de boissons gazeuses représentent les premiers acheteurs de SMHTF, et les restaurants, grossistes en denrées alimentaires, supermarchés et dépanneurs, cinémas et autres établissements achètent les produits contenant cet édulcorant (par. 10-11). L’industrie canadienne des boissons gazeuses « utilise environ 20 fois plus de SMHTF que de sucre » (par. 27), et la valeur de la majoration du prix du SMHTF transférée aux acheteurs indirects pourrait être évaluée suivant les techniques actuelles de modélisation économique (par. 56-57). Selon M. Leitzinger, au moins une partie de la majoration aura été refilée aux acheteurs indirects, et sa valeur pourrait être calculée à l’aide de données tombées dans le domaine public de même que de celles divulguées à l’enquête préalable (par. 58-64 et 75-77).

[117] Par exemple, puisqu’une proportion appréciable de boissons gazeuses contient du SMHTF, un juge de première instance n’aurait éventuellement aucune difficulté à conclure que des grossistes, des épiceries ou même des particuliers — qui sont tous des acheteurs indirects éventuels de SMHTF — ont containing HFCS, and in determining the loss based upon the percentage of the products purchased that contained the substance.

[118] There was debate between the appellants' and the respondents' expert witnesses regarding the existence, extent and determinability of HFCS overcharges and pass-through to indirect consumers. However, the weighing of expert evidence is a matter for the trial on the merits. The point is simply that the appellants have tendered evidence which establishes some basis in fact to show that the proposed class is identifiable and that individual class members may be able to establish individual loss on a balance of probabilities, overcoming the identification problem to which Justice Rothstein refers (para. 65).

[119] And although the representative plaintiff, Wendy Bredin (formerly Weberg), could not state with certainty that she had purchased products containing HFCS, she and other individuals would be able to self-identify as potential plaintiffs based on knowledge of the products in which HFCS is known to have been commonly used. For indirect purchasers, such as wholesalers and grocery stores, the inquiry would likely be simplified, given the likelihood of more extensive record-keeping systems regarding purchases of products that likely contained HFCS.

[120] Thus, in my view, the evidentiary difficulties relied upon by my colleague and the respondents are not fatal to this certification application.

IV. Conclusion

[121] For these reasons, I agree with the application judge, Rice J., that the appellants have established that there is some basis in fact that there is an identifiable class in accordance with s. 4(1)(b) of the CPA. As for the other elements of certification discussed by Rothstein J., I agree with the reasons of my colleague.

probablement acheté certains produits contenant du SMHTF et à déterminer la perte subie, compte tenu du pourcentage des produits achetés contenant l'édulcorant en question.

IV. Conclusion

[121] Pour ces motifs, je conviens avec le juge Rice, saisi de la demande, que les appelantes ont établi que l'existence d'un groupe identifiable, au sens où il faut entendre ce terme pour l'application de l'al. 4(1)(b) de la CPA, repose sur un certain fondement factuel. Quant aux autres critères de certification analysés par le juge Rothstein, je souscris aux motifs de ce dernier.

[122] I would allow the appeal with costs and remit the matter to the British Columbia Supreme Court for trial. I agree with Justice Rothstein's disposition of the cross-appeal.

APPENDIX: Common Issues Certified by Rice J.

Breach of the Competition Act

- (a) Did the defendants, or any of them, engage in conduct which is contrary to s. 45 of the Competition Act? If yes, what was the duration of such conduct?
- (b) What damages, if any, are payable by the non-settling defendants to the Class Members pursuant to s. 36 of the Competition Act?
- (c) Should the non-settling defendants, or any of them, pay the full costs, or any, of the investigation into this matter pursuant to s. 36 of the Competition Act?

Conspiracy

- (d) Did the defendants, or any of them, conspire to harm the Class Members?
- (e) Did the defendants, or any of them, act in furtherance of the conspiracy?
- (f) Was the predominant purpose of the conspiracy to harm the Class Members?
- (g) Did the conspiracy involve unlawful acts?
- (h) Did the defendants, or any of them, know that the conspiracy would likely cause injury to the Class Members?
- (i) Did the Class Members suffer economic loss? If yes, what was the duration of such economic loss?
- (j) What damages, if any, are payable by the non-settling defendants, or any of them, to the Class Members?

[122] Je suis d'avis d'accueillir le pourvoi avec dépens et de renvoyer l'affaire à la Cour suprême de la Colombie-Britannique pour instruction. Je souscris au dispositif proposé par le juge Rothstein dans l'appel incident.

ANNEXE : Questions communes certifiées par le juge Rice

Violation de la Loi sur la concurrence

- a) Les défenderesses, ou l'une d'elles, se sont-elles livrées à un comportement allant à l'encontre de l'art. 45 de la Loi sur la concurrence? Dans l'affirmative, pendant combien de temps?
- b) À combien s'établit le montant des dommages-intérêts que les défenderesses non parties aux règlements doivent verser, s'il y a lieu, aux membres du groupe en vertu de l'art. 36 de la Loi sur la concurrence?
- c) Les défenderesses non parties aux règlements, ou l'une d'elles, sont-elles tenues d'assumer le coût en totalité ou en partie de l'enquête relativement à l'affaire aux termes de l'art. 36 de la Loi sur la concurrence?

Complot

- d) Les défenderesses, ou l'une d'elles, ont-elles participé à un complot visant à causer un préjudice aux membres du groupe?
- e) Les défenderesses, ou l'une d'elles, ont-elles agi en vue de la réalisation du complot?
- f) Le complot visait-il principalement à causer un préjudice aux membres du groupe?
- g) Les auteurs du complot ont-ils eu recours à des actes illégaux?
- h) Les défenderesses, ou l'une d'elles, savaient-elles que le complot causerait vraisemblablement un préjudice aux membres du groupe?
- i) Les membres du groupe ont-ils subi une perte financière? Dans l'affirmative, pendant combien de temps?
- j) Quel est le montant des dommages-intérêts, s'il en est, payables par les défenderesses non parties aux règlements, ou l'une d'elles, aux membres du groupe?

- (k) Can the amount of damages be determined on an aggregate basis and if so, in what amount?

- k) Le montant des dommages-intérêts peut-il être établi globalement et, dans l'affirmative, quel est-il?

Tortious Interference with Economic Interests

- (l) Did the defendants, or any of them, intend to injure the Class Members?
- (m) Did the defendants, or any of them, interfere with the economic interests of the Class Members by unlawful or illegal means?
- (n) Did the Class Members suffer economic loss as a result of the defendants' interference? If yes, what was the duration of such economic loss?
- (o) What damages, if any, are payable by the non-settling defendants, or any of them, to the Class Members?
- (p) Can the amount of damages be determined on an aggregate basis and if so, in what amount?

Atteinte délictuelle à des intérêts financiers

- l) Les défenderesses, ou l'une d'elles, ont-elles eu l'intention de nuire aux membres du groupe?
- m) Les défenderesses, ou l'une d'elles, ont-elles porté atteinte aux intérêts financiers des membres du groupe par des moyens illégaux?
- n) Les membres du groupe ont-ils subi une perte financière par suite de cette atteinte? Dans l'affirmative, pendant combien de temps?
- o) Quel est le montant des dommages-intérêts, s'il en est, payables par les défenderesses non parties aux règlements, ou l'une d'elles, aux membres du groupe?
- p) Le montant des dommages-intérêts peut-il être établi globalement et, dans l'affirmative, quel est-il?

Unjust Enrichment, Waiver of Tort and Constructive Trust

- (q) Have the non-settling defendants, or any of them, been unjustly enriched by the receipt of overcharges on the sale of HFCS?
- (r) Have the Class Members suffered a corresponding deprivation in the amount of the overcharges on the sale of HFCS?
- (s) Is there a juridical reason why the non-settling defendants, or any of them, should be entitled to retain the overcharges on the sale of HFCS?
- (t) What restitution, if any, is payable by the non-settling defendants, or any of them, to the Class Members based on unjust enrichment?
- (u) Should the non-settling defendants, or any of them, be constituted as constructive trustees in favour of the Class Members for all of the overcharges from the sale of HFCS?
- (v) What is the quantum of overcharges, if any, that the non-settling defendants, or any of them, hold in trust for the Class Members?

Enrichissement sans cause, renonciation au recours délictuel et fiducie par interprétation

- q) Les défenderesses non parties aux règlements, ou l'une d'elles, se sont-elles enrichies sans cause par suite de la majoration du prix du SMHTF?
- r) Les membres du groupe se sont-ils appauvris d'un montant égal à celui de la majoration du prix du SMHTF?
- s) Une cause juridique justifie-t-elle les défenderesses non parties aux règlements, ou l'une d'elles, de conserver le fruit de la majoration du prix du SMHTF?
- t) Quelle somme les défenderesses non parties au règlement, ou l'une d'elles, doivent-elles restituer aux membres du groupe, le cas échéant, sur le fondement de l'enrichissement sans cause?
- u) Les défenderesses non parties aux règlements, ou l'une d'elles, doivent-elles être constituées fiduciaires par interprétation au bénéfice des membres du groupe quant à la totalité de la majoration du prix du SMHTF?
- v) À combien se monte la majoration, s'il en est, que les défenderesses non parties aux règlements, ou l'une d'elles, détiennent en fiducie pour les membres du groupe?

- (w) What restitution, if any, is payable by the non-settling defendants to the Class Members based on the doctrine of waiver of tort?
- (x) Are the non-settling defendants, or any of them, liable to account to the Class Members for the wrongful profits that they obtained on the sale of HFCS to the Class Members based on the doctrine of waiver of tort?
- (y) Can the amount of restitution be determined on an aggregate basis and if so, in what amount?

Punitive Damages

- (z) Are the non-settling defendants, or any of them, liable to pay punitive or exemplary damages having regard to the nature of their conduct and if so, what amount and to whom?

Interest

- (aa) What is the liability, if any, of the non-settling defendants, or any of them, for court order interest?

Availability of Pass-Through Defence

- (bb) To what extent, if at all, are the non-settling defendants entitled to assert a pass-through defence to any or all of the Class Members' causes of action?

Distribution of Damages and/or Trust Funds

- (cc) What is the appropriate distribution of damages and/or trust funds and interest to the Class Members and who should pay for the cost of that distribution?
- (dd) Are the non-settling defendants, or any of them, liable to account to the Class Members for the wrongful profits that they obtained on the sale of HFCS to the Class Members based on the doctrine of waiver of tort?
- (ee) Can the amount of restitution be determined on an aggregate basis and if so, in what amount? [A.R., vol. I, at pp. 69-71]

- w) Quelle somme, s'il en est, les défenderesses non parties aux règlements doivent-elles restituer aux membres du groupe sur le fondement de la renonciation au recours délictuel?
- x) Les défenderesses non parties aux règlements, ou l'une d'elles, sont-elles tenues de comptabiliser à l'intention des membres du groupe les profits illégitimes réalisés par la vente du SMHTF aux membres du groupe sur le fondement de la renonciation au recours délictuel?
- y) Le montant de la restitution peut-il être établi globalement et, dans l'affirmative, quel est-il?

Dommages-intérêts punitifs

- z) Les défenderesses non parties aux règlements, ou l'une d'elles, sont-elles tenues de verser des dommages-intérêts punitifs ou exemplaires eu égard à la nature de leur comportement et, dans l'affirmative, quel est ce montant et qui en sont les bénéficiaires?

Intérêts

- aa) Quelle obligation, s'il en est, les défenderesses non parties aux règlements, ou l'une d'elles, ont-elles de verser l'intérêt dont le paiement est ordonné par le tribunal?

Possibilité d'invoquer le transfert de la perte en défense

- bb) Dans quelle mesure, le cas échéant, les défenderesses non parties aux règlements peuvent-elles opposer le transfert de la perte aux causes d'action des membres du groupe?

Distribution des dommages-intérêts ou des fonds détenus en fiducie

- cc) Quel est le bon mode de distribution aux membres du groupe des dommages-intérêts ou des fonds détenus en fiducie et de l'intérêt, et qui doit assumer le coût de cette distribution?
- dd) Les défenderesses non parties aux règlements, ou l'une d'elles, sont-elles tenues de comptabiliser pour les membres du groupe les profits illégitimes réalisés par la vente du SMHTF aux membres du groupe sur le fondement de la renonciation au recours délictuel?
- ee) Le montant de la restitution peut-il être établi globalement et, dans l'affirmative, quel est-il? [d.a., vol. I, p. 69-71]

ORDER AND REASONS

P. FAVEL J.

I. Introduction

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

1 This is a motion to approve the First Nations Drinking Water Settlement Agreement [Settlement Agreement or Settlement] pursuant to Rule 334.29(1) of the Federal Courts Rules, SOR/98-106 [Rules] and section 35(1) of The Class Proceedings Act, CCSM, c C130 [The Class Proceedings Act]. The underlying actions are class proceedings. The Settlement Agreement compensates First Nation individuals who have lived under a drinking water advisory for a year or more. It also provides First Nations with compensation and assistance in securing safe drinking water through future infrastructure funding.

2 Both the Federal Court and the Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench [Courts] have jurisdiction over this proceeding. On October 11, 2019, Curve Lake First Nation [Curve Lake], Chief Emily Whetung, Neskantaga First Nation [Neskantaga], and Former Chief Christopher Moonias filed a statement of claim in the Federal Court [Federal Action]. On November 20, 2019, Tataskweyak Cree Nation [Tataskweyak] and Chief Doreen Spence filed a Statement of Claim in the Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench [Manitoba Action, and together with the Federal Action, the Actions]. After the Actions were certified, the Courts appointed these individuals and First Nations as the Representative Plaintiffs. The current Chief of Neskantaga, Wayne Moonias, represents the collective interests of Neskantaga. The defendant in both Actions was the Attorney General of Canada [Defendant or Canada]. McCarthy Tétrault LLP [McCarthy Tétrault] and Olthuis Kleer Townshend [OKT] are class counsel [Class Counsel]. The parties finalized the Settlement on September 15, 2021.

3 The Representative Plaintiffs now bring a motion for an Order:

- a. that the proposed Settlement Agreement be approved and its terms given effect;
- b. that the Defendant pay the funds contemplated in the proposed Settlement Agreement, and that said funds be distributed in accordance with the proposed Settlement Agreement;
- c. that Class Members (defined below) be notified of the approval of the proposed Settlement Agreement as set out in Schedule M and N of the Settlement Agreement; and
- d. that the Actions be discontinued on a without costs basis.

4 The Courts jointly case managed and heard the motion for settlement approval, as contemplated by the Canadian Bar Association's "Canadian Judicial Protocol for the Management of Multi-jurisdictional Class Actions and the Provision of Class Action Notice" (2018), online: The Canadian Bar Association <www.cba.org>. The Courts exercised their jurisdiction to hear this motion jointly pursuant to Rules 3 and 4 of the Rules and section 12 of The Class Proceedings Act.

5 The two Courts exercised their respective jurisdiction to jointly hear the motion for the approval of the Settlement Agreement. However, as required, each Court separately and independently addressed the governing legal test as it relates to the issue before the Courts and the Actions that were certified in their respective jurisdictions.

6 The reasons for Settlement and Fee Approval have been released separately but concurrently by each Court. After a full analysis, the two Courts are in complete agreement with the result and the reasons therefore. Accordingly, the reasons released by each Court to a large extent replicate the reasons of the other. This represents what the Courts wish to underscore as complete concurrence.

7 The Settlement Agreement is historic. It is the first Settlement to tackle the problem of drinking water advisories on First Nation reserves. Additionally, this proceeding marks the first time the Federal Court and another Superior Court have sat together. Most importantly, however, the record before the Courts demonstrates that the Settlement Agreement we are being asked to approve represents what many hope will be a turning point for Canada and First Nations. Both parties acknowledge that an agreement of this nature is long overdue. Although the parties reached the Settlement in just under two years, the Courts acknowledge that Indigenous communities have been advocating for decades to ensure future generations' access to safe water. Those tireless efforts, the willingness of the government, and the expertise and focus of legal counsel have now brought the parties to this promising and hopeful turning point.

8 For all the reasons outlined below, the Courts approve the proposed Settlement Agreement.

II. Background

A. Drinking water advisories on First Nation reserves in Canada

9 Authorities issue drinking water advisories when testing indicates that the water supply is or may be unsafe. There are three types of drinking water advisories: boil before use, do not consume, and do not use. Long-term drinking water advisories are those that have been in place for more than one year. The Settlement Agreement only applies to individuals residing on First Nations that have been subject to a long-term drinking water advisory and to those First Nation communities.

10 The affidavit of Peter Gorham, an expert actuary jointly retained by both parties, states that from 1995-2007, there were 713 recorded long-term drinking water advisories that affected some 257 First Nations. Class Counsel submitted a January 28, 2021 report by Dr. Melanie O'Gorman, a professor of economics and scholar in water infrastructure and long-term drinking water advisories in First Nations. That report states that in comparison to municipal and private water systems, First Nations disproportionately experience long-term drinking water advisories.

11 As discussed in more detail below, the Actions alleged that Canada is responsible for the establishment of drinking water systems on reserves and that Canada has chronically underfunded First Nations' water needs. As a result, Canada has failed to ensure that Class Members have access to potable water of adequate quality and quantity. Class Counsel pointed out that in a press conference on November 24, 2021, Minister of Indigenous Services, the Honourable Marc Miller, stated that the deficits pertaining to drinking water infrastructure on reserve are a result of systemic racism.

B. Experiences of Representative Plaintiffs & Class Members

12 The Representative Plaintiffs and other Class Members filed affidavits in support of settlement approval, which outlined the status of drinking water on their respective First Nations. All of those affidavits explained the importance of safe water for the physical, spiritual, emotional, psychological, cultural, or economic health of individuals and communities. In particular, many of the affidavits, including the affidavits of Elder Richard Allen Keeper and Anne Taylor, emphasized the role water plays in ceremony and how contaminated water results in the breakdown of knowledge transmission. Class Members also discussed the tragic relationship between poor drinking water, mental health, and youth suicide. Likewise, they noted that contaminated water has forced members to relocate, which perpetuates the history of displacement of Indigenous peoples from their lands and the separation of families. Class Member Roderick Richard Spence explains:

Now that I live in Winnipeg, I can drink the water that comes out of my tap, just like other Canadians. But I have lost a piece of who I am. It seems like an awful trade to have to make. I certainly hope that my grandchildren get better treatment. I dream for this, pray for this, and cry for this.

13 The frustration, stress, and loss of dignity that Class Members have experienced is palpable. As detailed in their affidavits discussed below, members of the Representative First Nations have and continue to suffer unacceptable hardships.

(a) Curve Lake

14 Curve Lake is an Ojibway First Nation located 15 kilometers outside of Peterborough, Ontario. Chief Whetung was elected Chief on June 18, 2019. She is Michi Saagiig of the Anishnaabe nation. She is a 36-year old lawyer and a mother of two. Chief Whetung's affidavit explains that Curve Lake experiences 10 to 15 boil-water advisories every year, some of which have lasted for more than one year. Her affidavit and the affidavit of Shawn Williams, a member of Curve Lake, state that the water treatment plant on Curve Lake inadequately disinfects water and only services 56 of the 550 homes in the community. Canada constructed it in the early 1980s and intended it to be temporary. The remaining homes on the First Nation are not connected to a public water system and rely on private wells. Members of the community, including Chief Whetung's entire family, have contracted E.coli due to the contaminants in their drinking water. Others have become gravely sick, suffered rashes, and more.

15 Mr. William's affidavit explains that for decades Curve Lake has been negotiating with Indigenous Services Canada [ISC] to get a new water treatment plant. He describes the process as a "hamster wheel": "the First Nation is constantly running, working to provide proposals, obtain necessary studies, seek funding, only to be in the exact same position decades later." He explains that since Canada provides the funding, the federal government's sign off is needed at every stage of development. He attributes the delay to ISC's habit of providing "funding for studies, small projects, and other lower cost items as a means to appease First Nations while they wait for the big ticket funding to actually address their needs, if that day ever arrives."

16 The affidavit of Katie Young-Haddlesey, the Economic Development Coordinator of Curve Lake, states that the water crisis has "strangled Curve Lake's economic development." She explains that for every business proposal, Curve Lake must consider whether "there will be enough water and whether the quality will impact the business." Proposals for businesses like laundromats, car washes, restaurants, and hotels are not feasible because there is simply not enough water in the community.

17 Chief Whetung spoke passionately before both Courts on December 8, 2021. She explained that Curve Lake has been fighting for clean drinking water since before she was born. For her, the Settlement not only means that the First Nation will have clean water in the near future, but that her children will be able to stay and grow up in their community.

(b) Neskantaga

18 Neskantaga is an Oji-Cree remote fly-in community in northern Ontario and is situated along Lake Attawapiskat. Neskantaga is subject to the longest drinking water advisory in Canada - the First Nation has not had safe drinking water for over 26 years. Members of Neskantaga have had to evacuate their community twice in the past three years because of their water.

19 Christopher Moonias was the Chief of Neskantaga from 2019 to 2021. He now acts as special advisor to Neskantaga and remains a Representative Plaintiff. Chief Wayne Moonias is the current Chief of Neskantaga. He took office on April 1, 2021 and continues the work of Former Chief Christopher Moonias with respect to these Actions.

20 The affidavit of Chief Wayne Moonias describes the traumatic effect the drinking water advisory has had on both individuals and the community and emphasizes its adverse effect on community members' mental health. As explained by the Community of Neskantaga in the Joint Press Release dated July 20, 2021, "[o]ur symptoms are real, and result in kids committing suicide, getting rashes, and suffering severe eczema. The skin conditions are particularly awful. They make our people feel like they have to hide themselves, and furthers their loss of dignity, on top of already feeling like maybe they don't deserve clean water."

21 Class Members from Neskantaga also submitted affidavits supporting the Settlement and detailing their stories. Those Class Members included Former Chief Peter Moonias, Dorothy Sakanee, Maggie Sakanee, Marcus Moonias, and Amy Moonias. Maggie Sakanee's affidavit details the skin rashes and sores that her grandchildren developed due to the water, which only cleared up after being evacuated to Thunder Bay. Amy Moonias' affidavit tells a very similar story. Due to the expense of bottled water (a 4-litre bottle of water in Neskantaga costs 16 dollars), Amy Moonias often had to choose between feeding and bathing her baby. Likewise, Dorothy Sakanee sometimes had to choose between buying bottled water and essentials like food or diapers. When she had to boil water, it came at the expense of spending time with her children. Former Chief Peter Moonias' affidavit states that he declared a State of Emergency in the early 2000s because a cancer-causing chemical was found in the water.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

Dorothy Sakanee's affidavit explains that her youngest daughter died in 1988 from brain cancer. She states that she suspects that the cancer was caused from the water in Neskantaga.

(c) Tataskweyak

22 Tataskweyak is located in northern Manitoba and has 4000 members, 2300 of whom live on the reserve. Chief Spence is Split Lake Cree and is the Chief of Tataskweyak, where she has lived most of her life. She was elected on November 6, 2016 and is the first female Chief. She is a mother of three and a grandmother of one. In her affidavit, Chief Spence states that Tataskweyak has been under a boil water advisory for three years. She explains that the community sources its tap water from Split Lake, which has been contaminated by upstream development and recurring flooding. The affidavit of Tataskweyak member, Robert Spence, further explains that sewage is periodically released into Split Lake. Split Lake is contaminated with E.coli and large-scale blue-green algae blooms known to cause serious illness in humans.

23 Accordingly, in 2006 and 2019, Tataskweyak sent Canada feasibility studies for a new water intake system, which would draw from Assean Lake. Instead, Canada upgraded the filtration and UV system in the existing water plant, which left the water tasting and smelling like chemicals. Chief Spence explained that occasionally, when the water line breaks, the tap water runs brown. The affidavit of Roderick Richard Spence, another member of Tataskweyak, similarly describes the tap water as smelling like chlorine and looking like "lemonade." Even after Canada's upgrades, the water remains unsafe to drink without boiling. In May 2020, Chief Spence obtained Canada's commitment to pay for bottled water delivery and enhanced water testing. Prior to this, however, community members who could not afford bottled water had to drink tap water or haul buckets of water from Assean Lake. In comparison, residents of the City of Thompson, which is upriver from Tataskweyak, enjoy virtually unlimited potable water.

24 Similar to Curve Lake and Neskantaga, skin rashes are the norm for members of Tataskweyak. Class Members Lydia Garson and Clara Flett detailed their children's rashes that resulted from bathing in the contaminated water. Lydia Garson's son was covered in scrapes, sores, and scabs. At one point, despite his mother's dedication, his condition got so bad that his face would bleed. Likewise, although she took special care, Clara Flett's son had to be hospitalized due to his rashes. Class Member Elizabeth Keeper similarly contracted H. pylori infection (a stomach infection) from the contaminated water in Tataskweyak. Chief Spence explains that illnesses related to contaminated drinking water have been exacerbated by inadequate access to healthcare, overcrowded housing, and the COVID-19 pandemic.

C. Nature of the Claims & Defences

25 In the Statements of Claim filed in both Actions, the Representative Plaintiffs submitted that Canada failed to provide Class Members with potable drinking water. Accordingly, they sought orders and declarations that Canada has: breached its duty of care and acted negligently; contravened the honour of the Crown; breached its fiduciary duties; violated section 36 of the Constitution Act, 1982; and committed violations of sections 2(1), 7, and 15 of the Charter, which are not saved by section 1. They submitted that as a result, Class Members are denied adequate access to clean drinking water; unable to adequately wash and care for themselves and their families; and prevented from performing traditional ceremonies and spiritual practices.

26 The Representative Plaintiffs submitted that Canada has always taken responsibility for water systems on reserves but has never provided adequate funding. Furthermore, Canada knew that its funding was inadequate. The Representative Plaintiffs maintain that for most First Nations, federal funding is the only means of constructing and maintaining water infrastructure on reserve but Canada has tied funding to compliance with a complex system of specifications. Accordingly, Canada controls what infrastructure is built, where, how, when, and by whom.

27 The Representative Plaintiffs in the Federal Action requested damages in the amount of 2.1 billion dollars, plus costs. Of particular note, they also sought an interim or interlocutory injunction and a permanent injunction requiring Canada to construct or approve and fund construction of appropriate water systems to ensure Class Members have adequate access to potable water.

28 The Defendant did not file Statements of Defence because the Settlement was reached relatively early in the proceeding. Initially, Canada opposed the relief sought by the Class stating that it had no liability to the Class. The affidavit of John P. Brown, a lawyer for Class Counsel, explains that Canada's public position "was that it funded water systems on reserves rather than manage[ing] them, and that it could not be liable for funding decisions that reflected a core policy." On December 7, 2021, during the Motion for Settlement Approval, Class Counsel explained that their team anticipated that Canada's defence would be similar to that in Okanagan Indian Band v Attorney General of Canada, Vancouver T-1328-19 (FC) [Okanagan]. Okanagan is an ongoing Federal Court case dealing with similar claims.

D. Procedural History of the Action

29 The Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench certified the Manitoba Action on July 14, 2020. On September 16, 2020, with the consent of the Defendant, the Representative Plaintiffs in the Federal Action brought a motion for certification. The Federal Court certified the Federal Action on October 8, 2020 pursuant to Rules 334.16 and 334.17.

30 The Courts certified the following common issues:

- (a) From November 20, 1995 to the present, did the Defendant owe a duty or an obligation to Class Members to take reasonable measures to provide them with, or ensure they were provided with, or refrain from barring, adequate access to water that is safe for human use?
- (b) If the answer to the First Stage common issue is "yes", did Canada breach its duties or obligations to members of the sub- group?
- (c) If the answer to common issue (a) is yes, is any breach of the Charter saved by s. 1 of the Charter?
- (d) If the answer to common issue (a) is yes, did the Defendant's breach cause a substantial and unreasonable interference with Class Members' or their First Nations' use and enjoyment of their lands?
- (e) If the answer to common issue (a) is "yes" and the answer to common issue (b) is "no", are damages available to members of the sub-group under s. 24(1) of the Charter?
- (f) Can the causation of any damages suffered by members of the sub-group be determined as a common issue?
- (g) Can the Court make an aggregate assessment of all or part of any damages suffered by members of the sub-group?
- (h) Does the Defendant's conduct justify an award of punitive damages, and if so, in what amount?
- (i) Should the Court order that the Defendant take measures to provide or ensure that members of the sub-group are provided with, or refrain from barring, adequate access to clean tap water?
- (j) If so, what measures should be ordered?

31 The Courts appointed McCarthy Tétrault and OKT as Class Counsel. CA2 Inc. was appointed as administrator for the purpose of giving notice of certification. CA2 Inc. gave notice in accordance with the certification orders. Individuals were included in the Class unless they opted out. There were no opt-outs within the opt-out period, which ended on March 29, 2021. First Nations were included in the Class if they opted in.

32 On December 30, 2020, the Representative Plaintiffs brought a motion for summary judgment on behalf of the Class. Summary judgment was set to be heard before both Courts, sitting together, on October 4 to 7, 2021. In advance of the summary judgment motion, more than 120 First Nations opted in to the Actions. The Representative Plaintiffs summonsed witnesses and were prepared to proceed with cross-examinations. However, on June 20,

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

2021, the Parties reached an Agreement in Principle. The Agreement in Principle was executed on July 29, 2021 and the Settlement was finalized on September 15, 2021.

33 On October 5, 2021, Class Counsel brought a motion to approve the Short and Long Form Notices of the Settlement Approval Hearing, as well as a plan for the distribution of these notices. By way of Order dated October 8, 2021, the notices and the plan for distribution were approved. CA2 Inc. was appointed as administrator to give notice and it did so in accordance with the Courts' orders. CA2 Inc. gave Notice of the Settlement Approval Hearing on October 16, 2021. That Notice of Settlement contemplated a 45-day late opt-out period for First Nations that first experienced long-term drinking water advisories after the Actions were certified. There were no late opt-outs.

34 On November 17 and 18, 2021, respectively, the Courts provisionally appointed Deloitte LLP as the Administrator for the Settlement Agreement [Administrator].

E. Settlement Agreement: Key Provisions

(1) Basics

35 Importantly, the Settlement Agreement contemplates and ensures both retrospective and prospective compensation. The Settlement Agreement provides First Nations and individuals resident on those First Nations with compensation for lack of regular access to safe drinking water. The Settlement also commits Canada to work with First Nations to provide access to clean water and requires Canada to construct and fund appropriate water systems for First Nation communities. The key terms and provisions are set out below.

(a) Class & Class Period

36 The Class Period runs from November 20, 1995 to present. The Class includes (a) Individual Class Members and (b) First Nation Class Members [collectively, Class Members]. Mr. Gorham's affidavit states there are approximately 142,300 Individual Class Members, of which more than 60,000 are minors, and 258 eligible First Nation Class Members.

37 Individual Class Members include individuals, other than Excluded Persons, who are members of a band [First Nation] as defined by the Indian Act, RSC 1985, c. I-5 [Indian Act], whose lands are subject to the Indian Act or the First Nations Land Management Act, SC 1999, c 24, and whose lands were subject to a drinking water advisory (whether a boil water, do not consume, or do not use advisory, or the like) that lasted at least one year from November 20, 1995 to present [Impacted First Nation]. Those individuals must not have died before November 20, 2017 and must have ordinarily resided in an Impacted First Nation while it was subject to a drinking water advisory that lasted at least one year.

38 First Nation Class Members include Tataskweyak, Curve Lake, Neskantaga, and any other Impacted First Nation that elects to join this action in a representative capacity.

39 "Excluded Persons" are members of Tsuu T'ina Nation, Sucker Creek First Nation, Ermineskin Cree Nation, the Blood Tribe, the Okanagan Indian Band, and Michael Darryl Isnardy. These persons are excluded from the Settlement because they have ongoing actions related to drinking water on reserves. When the Actions were initiated, these persons requested that they be excluded so that their ongoing litigation would not be affected.

(b) Retrospective Compensation

40 Under the Settlement Agreement, Canada has agreed to pay individual Class Members a total of 1.438 billion dollars into a trust fund to be distributed to the Class Members, including by paying individual damages in accordance with Article 8, section 8.01(2)(a). Individual Class Members will be paid:

- a. 2000 dollars per year for people in remote First Nations under long-term drinking advisories;
- b. 2000 dollars per year for people in non-remote First Nations under do not use advisories;

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- c. 1650 dollars per year for people in non-remote First Nations under do not consume advisories; and
- d. 1300 dollars per year for people in non-remote First Nations under boil water advisories.

41 Damages for Individual Class Members will be subject to how many individuals make a claim and how many First Nations join the class action. Prorated amounts will be paid for any partial years after the first full year. Furthermore, damages for Individual Class Members are subject to a synthetic federal limitation period. This means that individuals born after 1995 can claim for all the years and portions of the years between November 20, 1995 and June 20, 2021 while they were ordinarily resident on reserve during a drinking water advisory that lasted a year or more. Individuals born before November 20, 1995 can claim for all years and portions of years between November 20, 2013 and June 20, 2021 where they were ordinarily resident on reserve during a drinking water advisory that lasted a year or more.

42 Individuals who have suffered specified injuries because of drinking water advisories can claim additional compensation from a specified injuries compensation fund totalling 50 million dollars (Article 5). To claim damages for a specified injury a person must have been ordinarily resident on a reserve under a drinking water advisory for at least a year while the advisory was in place. Furthermore, the injury must have occurred during that time. Individuals suffering specified injuries will only be able to claim for injuries that happened or continued during drinking water advisories after November 2013. Individuals born after November 20, 1995 will be able to claim for injuries going back to that date. The person making the claim must show that they suffered the injury and that the injury was caused by using the water in accordance with the drinking water advisory or by restricted access to safe water caused by the advisory.

43 Finally, 400 million dollars will be used to establish a First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund. From that fund, First Nation Class Members will receive a base payment of 500,000 dollars and an amount equal to 50% of the damages, not including specified injuries, paid to individual Class Members living on that First Nation's reserve. The retrospective compensation received by First Nation Class Members reflects the harms to the community, which are different from the harms to its individual members. First Nations are free to use that money for any purpose.

(c) Prospective Relief

44 In addition to compensating First Nations and their members, Canada has also agreed to provide funding to fix the problem moving forward. The stated intention of the parties is that the future never again resembles the past. Concretely, Canada has committed to taking all reasonable steps to remove long-term drinking water advisories affecting Class Members, including doing everything set out in their Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory Action Plan [Action Plan], which will be updated on an ongoing basis. Formerly a political promise, Class Counsel submits that the Action Plan becomes a legally enforceable obligation under the Settlement.

45 Additionally, the Settlement requires Canada to take "all reasonable efforts" to ensure that Class Members have regular access to safe drinking water in their homes [the Commitment]. This water must meet either federal or provincial water quality standards, whichever is stricter. The amount of water must be enough that it allows people to use water for all the usual things people in Canada use water for, like drinking, bathing and showering, making food, washing dishes, and cleaning their home and clothes. In support of the Commitment, Canada is required to spend at least 6 billion dollars through March 31, 2030 at a rate of at least 400 million per year on water and wastewater on First Nation reserves. Class Counsel described this 6 billion as the "floor" rather than the "ceiling." Under the Settlement, Canada must use this money to fund the actual cost of construction, upgrading, operation and maintenance of water infrastructure on First Nation reserves.

46 Further, Canada has committed to take reasonable efforts to repeal the Safe Drinking Water for First Nations Act, SC 2013, c 21 and replace it with legislation that is developed through consultation with First Nations. The Settlement also requires Canada to spend 20 million dollars in funding through 2025 for a First Nations Advisory Committee on Safe Drinking Water. That Committee will work with ISC to support forward-looking policy initiatives and provide strategic advice. Additionally, Canada will provide 9 million dollars in funding through 2025 for Class Members' water governance initiatives and 50 million for the cost of administering the Settlement Agreement.

(2) Alternative dispute resolution process for Commitment disputes

47 The Settlement Agreement and Schedule K contemplate different stages of dispute resolution. Any disputes related to the Commitment (i.e., where Canada and a First Nation cannot agree on whether Canada is meeting its Commitment under the Settlement Agreement and about proposed plans for meeting its Commitment) proceed through a specific alternative dispute resolution process [ADR Process]. Class Counsel submitted that the ADR Process integrates Indigenous Legal Traditions. It should be noted that the ADR Process promotes the use of Indigenous languages and where necessary, will occur on the First Nations' respective reserves while utilizing certain protocols such as gift giving, Elder participation, and traditional teachings. Engagement with the ADR Process entails the following steps:

1. If a First Nation determines that Canada is not meeting or has ceased meeting the Commitment, the First Nation must let Canada know (section 9.06 (1)).
2. Canada then has an obligation to consult with the First Nation to try to meet the Commitment as soon as possible. Canada must also pay the costs of any technical advice the First Nation needs to determine what Canada must do to meet the Commitment (sections 9.06(2), (3)).
3. Canada must make all reasonable efforts to reach an agreement with the First Nation that identifies the steps Canada will take to fix the issues (section 9.06(4)).
4. If Canada does not comply with the agreement or if the parties do not reach an agreement within three months, the First Nation can start the ADR Process. The ADR Process proceeds through negotiations, mediation, and, if no agreement can be reached, arbitration (section 9.07).

48 In short, on a matter of such great and fundamental importance -- the provision of safe drinking water -- Canada will not be the final arbiter respecting its own efforts in relation to the Commitment outlined in the Settlement Agreement. Further, all of the phases outlined above must be completed within strict timelines.

49 Under the Settlement, Canada will pay the reasonable costs of convening the ADR Process, together with the reasonable fees and disbursements of any mediator or arbitrator. Canada will also pay half of the reasonable costs and disbursements of a First Nation's participation in the ADR Process.

(3) Supervisory Role of the Courts

50 Under Article 1, section 1.16 of the Settlement, the Courts maintain jurisdiction to supervise the implementation of the Agreement in accordance with its terms, including the adoption of protocols and statements of procedure and may give any directions or make any orders that are necessary for those purposes.

(4) Claims Process

(a) First Nation Class Member Damages

51 To participate in the Settlement, First Nation Class Members must give notice of acceptance to the Administrator. The Parties have provided the Administrator with a list [List] identifying, to the best of the Parties' knowledge, the First Nations eligible to become First Nations Class Members. Inclusion on the List is conclusive proof that the First Nation is eligible to be a First Nation Class Member. If the First Nation is not on the List, the Administrator shall consult with the Settlement Implementation Committee before determining whether the First Nation is eligible to be a First Nation Class Member. The Administrator may request additional information or evidence before making the determination as to whether a First Nation is eligible to be a First Nation Class Member.

(b) Individual Class Member Damages

52 Individual Class Members wishing to make a claim for retrospective compensation (including a claim for a specified injury) must submit a claims form. The claims form is simple and requires the following: identifying and contact information; what First Nations the claimant is a part of; dates of residence on reserves experiencing long-term drinking water advisories; representative information; declaration and consent; and details about a specified claim, if applicable.

53 Section 17 of Schedule F of the Settlement outlines the Claim Process. Schedule F states that for those making a specified injuries claim, a claimant may submit some or all of the following to the Administrator in support of their claim:

- a. Medical records of the injury and its cause;
- b. Other records, including written records, photographs, and videos, of the injury and its cause;
- c. A written statement; and
- d. Oral testimony.

54 Section 18 of Schedule F states, "the process of claiming compensation for Specified Injuries is intended to be non-traumatizing and section 17 of this Schedule F does not prevent a Claimant from establishing their eligibility for Specified Injuries Compensation on the basis of their Claims Form alone." The burden of proof for establishing a specified injury is on the balance of probabilities.

55 The claims process will commence within 60 days of settlement approval. The Administrator will promptly review each claims form, band council confirmation, and other relevant information to determine if the claimant is eligible and calculate the claimant's entitlement. When the Administrator pays compensation to the claimant, the Administrator must also explain how the amount was calculated and that the claimant may appeal the Administrator's decision to the Third-Party Assessor.

(c) Third Party Assessor

56 When an individual or First Nation claimant wants to appeal a decision of the Administrator, the claimant must provide a written statement to the Administrator within sixty days of receiving the Administrator's decision. That written statement must explain how the Administrator erred. The Administrator will forward the materials to the Third Party Assessor. When considering an appeal, the Third-Party Assessor may consult the claimant, the Administrator, and the Settlement Implementation Committee. The Third-Party Assessor may also request further evidence to support the claim. The Third Party Assessor's decision is final and not subject to appeal or review.

(5) Counsel Fees

57 Class Counsel's fees are severable from the rest of the Settlement and subject to a different Order and Reasons issued separately but concurrently by both Courts. In other words, the Courts can approve the Settlement separate from the approval of Class Counsel's fees. The Courts' refusal to approve Class Counsel's fees would have no effect on the implementation of the Settlement Agreement. Additionally, Class Counsel's fees were negotiated after the Settlement was reached and do not take money away from Class Members.

(6) Appeal Period

58 Following the approval of the Settlement, a Class Member may appeal the Orders of the Courts within thirty days. Under Rule 334.31(2) of the Rules there is an additional thirty days for a Class Member to apply for leave to appeal to exercise the right of a Representative Plaintiff's right of appeal if no Representative Plaintiff commences an appeal within the first thirty days. This means that the earliest Implementation Date, as defined in the Settlement, is sixty days from the Courts' Orders. Thereafter, the Proposed Settlement Agreement will become binding on all Individual Class Members. The Proposed Settlement Agreement will become binding on First Nations as they formally accept its terms.

(7) Release

59 Importantly, in exchange for everything discussed above and as set forth in the Settlement, Class Members agree to release Canada in respect of any liability for failing to provide, or fund the provision of safe drinking water on their reserves through the end of the Class Period.

III. Issue

60 The sole issue on this motion is whether the Courts should approve the Settlement Agreement. Mindful of the governing law and legal test, that issue reduces to the following question: is the Settlement Agreement fair and reasonable and in the best interests of the Class?

61 It should be noted that a separate set of reasons, also concurrently released by each Court, assesses the question of whether the Court should approve Class Counsel fees.

IV. Analysis

A. Legal Framework

62 Rule 334.29 of the Rules and section 35(1) of The Class Proceedings Act state that class proceedings may only be settled with the approval of a judge. The relevant test for approving a settlement is whether the Settlement is "fair and reasonable and in the best interests of the class as a whole" (Merlo v Canada, 2017 FC 533 at para 16; Toth v Canada, 2019 FC 125 at para 37; McLean v Canada, 2019 FC 1075 at para 65 [McLean]; Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc First Nation v Canada, 2021 FC 988 at para 36 [Tk'emlúps]; Gray v Great-West Lifeco Inc, 2011 MBQB 13 at para 58). Recently, in Tk'emlúps, Justice McDonald summarized the appropriate approach that should inform a court's application of the governing legal test:

[37] The Court considers whether the settlement is reasonable, not whether it is perfect (Châteauneuf v Canada, 2006 FC 286 at para 7; Merlo, at para 18). Likewise, the Court only has the power to approve or to reject the settlement; it cannot modify or alter the settlement (Merlo, at para 17; Manuge v Canada, 2013 FC 341 at para 5).

[39] ...as noted in McLean (para 68), the proposed settlement must be considered as a whole and it is not open to the Court to rewrite the substantive terms of the settlement or assess the interests of individual class members in isolation from the whole class.

63 To reject a settlement, the Courts must conclude that the settlement does not fall within a zone or range of reasonable outcomes (Dabbs v Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada (1998), 40 OR \(3d\) 429 (Gen Div) at 440-44; Haney Iron Works v Manufacturers Life Insurance Co (1998), 169 DLR \(4th\) 565 (SC) at para 44). A zone of reasonable outcomes reflects the fact that "settlements rarely give all parties exactly what they want" and are a result of compromise (Nunes v Air Transat AT Inc, 2005 CanLII 21681 (ON SC) at para 7 [Nunes]; McLean at para 9).

64 The Court should consider the following non-exhaustive factors when assessing if a settlement is fair and reasonable and in the best interests of the class (Condon v Canada, 2018 FC 522 at para 19; McLean at para 66; Tk'emlúps at para 38):

- a. The likelihood of recovery or likelihood of success;
- b. The amount and nature of discovery, evidence or investigation;
- c. The terms and conditions of the Settlement;
- d. The number of objectors and nature of objections;
- e. The presence of arm's length bargaining and the absence of collusion;
- f. The information conveying to the Court the dynamics of, and the positions taken, by the parties during the negotiations;

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- g. Communications with Class Members during litigation; and
- h. The recommendation and experience of counsel.

65 These factors are to be given varying weight depending on the circumstances (McLean at para 67). The respective factors are addressed below.

B. Factors

(1) Likelihood of recovery or likelihood of success

66 The risks associated with litigating the Actions created a high degree of uncertainty, particularly at the beginning of the proceeding. Those risks included but were not limited to the novelty of the claims; delays due to appeals; possible defences raised by Canada; limitation periods; evidentiary issues associated with proving semi-historical wrongs; and the 2021 federal election. As a result, it is fair to say that the likelihood of success was uncertain. Additionally and always, there are significant and ongoing human costs associated with litigation. Separate from the inevitable frustrations and stresses attached to any Court process, the Courts cannot ignore that, as noted by Class Counsel, "every day without water compounds the harms Class Members experience."

67 If Class Counsel successfully established the first common issue, there would be significant evidentiary hurdles to establish that Canada breached their duties. Doing so would require proceeding on a First Nation by First Nation basis, incurring further delay and expense. Furthermore, Class Members would have to testify, which may be re-traumatizing.

68 Novel claims pose a significant challenge for litigants (Tk'emlúps at para 41). At the time of filing, there was uncertainty in the law regarding the ability of collective entities to assert Charter claims. Furthermore, there remains uncertainty about the Courts' ability to compel the type of prospective relief contemplated in the Settlement. For example, the Representative Plaintiffs asked the Courts to compel government spending on a go-forward basis to ensure access to safe drinking water.

69 As time went on, the Representative Plaintiffs' case became stronger and there were some assurances of success. For example, the first class-wide award of aggregate Charter damages was confirmed by the Court of Appeal for Ontario after the Actions were commenced (Reddock v Canada (Attorney General), 2019 ONSC 3196; aff'd in Brazeau v Canada (Attorney General), 2020 ONCA 184). However, the delays and scope of available remedies still loomed large. In that same Ontario Court of Appeal case, the Court reversed an order directing Canada to spend money on inmate mental health to correct ongoing Charter violations in its prisons. While this ruling may have posed significant challenges for the plaintiffs, it is well to note Justice Phelan's words in McLean. In the McLean settlement, there was prospective relief in the form of a 'Legacy Fund' to promote healing for Indian Day School survivors. Justice Phelan wrote, "[t]here is uncertainty that a court could order such a creation but, no doubt for another day, if Aboriginal issues and litigation are sui generis, remedies available might likewise be sui generis" (McLean at para 103).

70 Ultimately, in the present case, the Class did not shoulder the risk alone. The outcome was also uncertain for Canada. Canada was required to contemplate an outcome in which the Courts may have settled the law in favour of the Plaintiffs (McLean at paras 94-95). Put simply, uncertainty in the law meant that both parties faced a real and present risk of failure.

71 In the end, we are of the view that like McLean, this too is a "case which cries out for settlement" (McLean at para 79). The Settlement reduces risk and delay. It simplifies the compensation process, enhances access to justice, and most importantly, provides funding to fix the problem. It creates a degree of certainty that First Nations will be able to lift water advisories in the near future. That is an assurance that litigation could not promise.

(2) The amount and nature of discovery, evidence, or investigation

72 Over the entire course of the Actions, Class Counsel consulted with fourteen experts including First Nation

Elders and knowledge keepers, hydrologists, infectious disease experts, aquatic toxicologists, history professors, and more. The parties also jointly retained and instructed an actuary to determine the size and distribution of the Class. In addition to consulting with experts, the affidavit of John P. Brown explains that Class Counsel reviewed thousands of pages of publically available documentation from Canada and extensively researched relevant legal and factual issues, including causes of action and theories of damages.

73 As stated above, prior to reaching the Settlement, the parties completed the record for a summary judgment motion. Class Counsel did not file their record but it apparently consisted of 2800 pages, 8 experts, and 24 witnesses. The parties exchanged the evidentiary records for summary judgment and were ready to begin cross-examinations. It was at this point, after both sides put in a high degree of investigation and the strength of the case became apparent, that negotiations began to intensify. The parties reached the Settlement less than a month before the summary judgment motion was scheduled. The Courts agree with Class Counsel that by that time, a great deal of work had been undertaken to prepare this matter for judgment on the merits.

74 The Courts are satisfied that Class Counsel put in great effort to gather relevant facts, assess liability and damages, and had a clear understanding of the strengths and weaknesses of the Actions.

(3) Terms and conditions of the Settlement

75 These reasons have already provided an overview of the Settlement's important terms and provisions at paragraphs 35-59, above. In considering the governing test, it is the view of both Courts that some of the more significant features of the Settlement that "underpin its fairness" include:

- * The relief contemplated is not just compensatory in nature - it looks forward to actually solving the root causes of drinking water advisories on reserves and is legally enforceable;
- * The 6 billion dollars in prospective relief must adhere to a nine-year timeline, thus ensuring expedient resolution of those root causes;
- * Compensation for Individual Class Members is relative to the duration of the advisory, type of advisory, and the remoteness of a First Nation. Factoring in remoteness acknowledges the increased cost of living in remote areas, including the price of bottled water, and that remote communities like Neskantaga have had to evacuate;
- * With respect to Class Members claiming specified injuries:
 - * The paper based claims process is simple;
 - * The burden of proof is low;
 - * Claims are assessed through a harms grid;
 - * There is a presumption of truthfulness and good faith;
 - * All reasonable inferences must be drawn in favour of claimants; and
 - * There is a low likelihood of re-traumatization.

(See McLean at para 107; Tk'emlúps at para 49; Riddle v Canada, 2018 FC 641 at para 36).

- * Specified injuries include mental health injuries;
- * If the specified claims exceed 50 million dollars, the Settlement is structured in such a way that any trust surplus will go toward supplementing specified injuries;
- * First Nation Class Members receiving an amount equal to 50% of the total damages paid to individual Class Members living on that reserve can use that money for any purpose;
- * The ADR Process draws on the Indigenous legal traditions specific to and defined by the relevant First Nation;
- * Canada is responsible for paying 100% of the reasonable costs of convening the ADR process and 50% of the reasonable costs of a First Nation's participation in that process;

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- * The Administrator is "experienced and renowned" (McLean at para 107);
- * Legal fees are not payable from the settlement funds, meaning that Class Counsel is not taking money away from Class Members (Tk'emlúps at para 51);
- * Legal fees were negotiated after the Settlement was reached, ensuring that "the issue of legal fees did not inform or influence" the terms of the Settlement (Tk'emlúps at para 51)
- * The release is proportionate to the claims being resolved in this action. Class members retain their rights for several liability of third parties and claims arising after June 20, 2021.

76 On balance, the benefits of the Settlement outweigh the concessions that the Class had to make. In their affidavits, the Representative Plaintiffs voiced disappointment that the base rate of compensation for Individual Class Members (ranging between 1300-2000 dollars for every year living under a water advisory) was too low. Additionally, the application of a limitations period significantly curtails the retrospective compensation that community members - particularly elders - will receive. In their Factum, Class Counsel noted that the application of the limitations period was particularly difficult in light of the Truth and Reconciliation Call to Action #26. However, those same affidavits recognized that the primary objective of the litigation was to ensure future generations' access to safe drinking water. They also state that no amount of money can compensate for the harms experienced while living under drinking water advisories. The Courts agree with the Representative Plaintiffs that these concessions are tough compromises. However, overall, the Settlement offers significant benefits for the Class and certainly falls within the zone of reasonableness.

(4) Future expense and likely duration of litigation

77 Due to the novel claims advanced in the Actions, it is reasonable to expect that if this litigation did not settle, it would be long, involved, and expensive. The issues presented in this case are likely questions of significant and general public importance to the country as a whole. It is not outside the realm of possibility that certain issues could be appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada, protracting litigation. Furthermore, if litigation ensued, evidence of individual communities would have to be collected and presented.

78 Class Counsel pointed to the Okanagan action to support their position that if the Crown aggressively defended the Actions, litigation would be drawn out. That case advances similar claims but did not reach settlement. It has been ongoing for over 6 years. Likewise, the trial in Tk'emlúps, another recent mega-settlement involving Indigenous class members, was set down for 74 days (Tk'emlúps at para 52).

79 The expected future expenses and likely duration of the litigation weigh in favour of approving the Settlement.

(5) Recommendations of neutral third parties

80 For the purposes of settlement approval, the following experts submitted affidavits and reports:

- a. Kerry Black, Assistant Professor and Canada Research Chair in the Department of Civil Engineering and the Centre of Environmental Research and Education at the University of Calgary;
- b. Ian Halket, President of Halket Environmental Consultants Inc.;
- c. Peter Gorham, President and Actuary of JDM Actuarial Expert Services Inc. and Fellow of Canadian Institute of Actuaries and the Society of Actuaries;
- d. Jillian Campbell, toxicologist and senior project manager with over 15 years of experience in human health and ecological risk assessment, toxicology, and contaminated site investigation;
- e. Gary Chaimowitz, Head of Service at the Forensic Psychiatry Program at St. Joseph's Healthcare Hamilton, a Professor of Psychiatry at McMaster University, and the President of the Canadian Academy of Psychiatry and the Law;

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- f. James Reynolds, historian and author on the relationship between the Crown and Indigenous Peoples in Canada;
- g. Adele Perry, Distinguished Professor of History and the Director of the Centre for Human Rights Research at the University of Manitoba; and
- h. Brittany Luby, Assistant Professor of History in the College of Arts at the University of Guelph.

81 Some of these reports did not offer opinions about the Settlement Agreement itself. Rather, they provided valuable information describing the history, causes, and current state of drinking water advisories on First Nation reserves.

82 Jillian Campbell's affidavit, however, confirmed that Article 8, section 8.02 and Schedule H of the Settlement Agreement adequately incorporates the types of injuries that result from drinking contaminated or untreated water, the symptoms of those injuries, and the likely effect on Class Members if they suffered those injuries. Gary Chaimowitz similarly confirmed in his affidavit that the 'Mental Health' row in Schedule H and Appendix H-1 to the Settlement accurately identifies the types of mental health injuries Class Members may have suffered and the primary symptoms of those injuries.

83 Further, Kerry Black submitted an affidavit dated November 21, 2021 expressing her support for settlement approval. For over a decade, Dr. Black has worked with Indigenous groups to understand their water infrastructure needs. In her opinion, the Settlement adequately addresses the objectives of First Nations.

84 After canvassing some of the key provisions of the Settlement, Dr. Black stated that in her opinion, the Settlement will "address the water crisis in Canada in an historic, comprehensive and meaningful way." Further, it will "have an immeasurable and in many cases life-changing impact on the lives of First Nations members and their communities across Canada." In particular, Dr. Black confirmed that the minimum spend of 6 billion dollars over the next nine years in prospective relief is a reasonable amount to remedy water systems on First Nations. Furthermore, she noted the significance of including private water systems in the Commitment because Canada has historically excluded the cost of that type of infrastructure when providing funding to First Nations. Finally, she notes that it is significant that Canada has committed to funding the actual cost of construction, upgrading, operation, and maintenance of water infrastructure on reserves for First Nations because Canada has chronically underfunded these aspects of water infrastructure for decades.

85 In our opinion, these objective third-party opinions reinforce the fairness of the Settlement.

(6) Number of objectors and nature of objections

86 Eric Khan, the Director of CA2 Inc., swore an affidavit on December 6, 2021 that CA2 Inc. had not received any opt-out coupons or notices of objections. At the Settlement Approval Hearing, throughout the day, potential Class Members had the opportunity voice their objections but no one came forward.

87 While there were no formal objections raised, Class Counsel submitted correspondence and newspaper articles to alert the Courts to potential criticisms of the Settlement. In that regard, Class Counsel submitted a letter dated November 23, 2021 from counsel of a First Nation that intended to object to the Settlement. That letter expressed two concerns: (a) the Settlement relies on Canada's list of drinking water advisories and (b) the Settlement excludes First Nations with short-term drinking water advisories. After speaking with Class Counsel about these concerns, the First Nation withdrew their objection. Similarly, another lawyer voiced his concerns to the media. Those concerns related to (a) uncertainty about who is included in the Class; (b) the exclusion of First Nations with short-term drinking water advisories; and (c) ambiguity about what advisories are counted and what authorities get to declare those advisories.

88 At the Settlement Approval hearing on December 7, 2021, Class Counsel addressed each of these criticisms.

89 First, it is untrue that the Settlement only relies on Canada's records to determine what First Nations have been subject to a drinking water advisory. Sections 10-12 of Schedule F of the Settlement state that if a Class Member makes a claim and their First Nation is not included on the existing List of Eligible First Nations, the Settlement Implementation Committee shall determine if that First Nation should be added to the List and may request further information or evidence before making their decision. Class Counsel explained that the intent of this provision to ensure inclusivity and that the List is, in fact, subject to change.

90 Second, Class Counsel acknowledged that there is a prevalence of short-term drinking water advisories on First Nations, some of which have occurred on and off for long periods of time. With that said, however, it need also be acknowledged that in class proceedings, class members must suffer a common harm. When determining that commonality, Class Counsel's opinion was that long-term advisories were more clearly linked to government underfunding that resulted in an infrastructure gap. This class proceeding does not affect the ability of First Nations experiencing short-term drinking water advisories to commence their own actions.

91 Finally, with respect to the criticisms voiced in the media, Article 1, Section 1.01 of the Settlement Agreement clearly defines who is included in the Class (see also paragraph 37, above) and who constitutes "Excluded Persons." These definitions were also included in the Short and Long Form Notices. Additionally, the same section defines an "Advisory Body" as "provincial, territorial, regional, municipal, or First Nation government or governmental authority, chief, band council, health authority, or any executive, judicial, regulatory or administrative body or similar body or its delegate, in each case that issues Drinking Water Advisories." Any of these bodies may issue any one of the three types of drinking water advisories that may bring a First Nation or Individual Class Member into the Settlement Agreement. Again, this definition is intended to foster inclusion and ensure that First Nations are not dependent on government definitions or data in order to benefit from the Settlement.

92 It should also be noted that the law firm representing the "Excluded Persons" in the Settlement inquired with Class Counsel about how the Settlement will affect their clients and whether the 6 billion dollars in prospective relief will apply to all First Nations or only those who opt in to the Settlement. Class Counsel replied indicating that the Settlement does not apply to the "Excluded Persons" and that as a result, they are free to continue pursuing their own actions related to drinking water.

93 In airing all of the concerns noted above, Class Counsel fulfilled its obligation to provide the Courts with full and frank disclosure relevant to the settlement approval. In our view, in the absence of any formal objections, the support of the Representative Plaintiffs and other Class Members need be seen as unchallenged. Numerous affidavits included in the Motion Record expressed support for the Settlement, including community members of Curve Lake, Neskantaga, and Tataskweyak. The Representative Plaintiffs all expressed their support for the Settlement and unanimously voiced their opinion that the Settlement Agreement achieves their litigation objectives.

(7) Presence of arm's length bargaining, absence of collusion, and the positions taken by the parties during negotiation

94 It is appropriate to address these factors together because in this case, the positions taken by the parties during the negotiation demonstrate the presence of arm's length bargaining and absence of collusion.

95 Class Counsel's strategy in this proceeding was to pursue a "two track approach" where they aggressively pursued litigation and negotiation simultaneously. In our opinion, this approach demonstrates that the proceeding was always adversarial in nature and that Class Counsel's primary goal was to advance the Class' interests. Clearly, such a historic Settlement would be impossible without cooperation on both sides. Although the parties cooperated wherever possible, both parties were prepared to proceed to litigation. The parties consented to an expedited litigation timeline and the Representative Plaintiffs aggressively advanced motions for summary judgment.

96 It is also significant to note that negotiations lasted for just under a year. In our view, this timeline evidences what John P. Brown referred to as "hard bargaining sessions" where counsel advanced their respective clients' positions. Indeed, the affidavit of Chief Whetung stated that at times, negotiations broke down and she felt ready to "walk away" and push forward with litigation.

97 We have no concerns that the Settlement Agreement was anything other than the result of good strategy, dedication, and compromise. We are satisfied that the parties always engaged in good faith negotiations and that there has been no collusion in reaching the Settlement. We note that there is a strong presumption of fairness when a proposed settlement was negotiated at arm's-length by Class Counsel (Nunes at para 7).

(8) Communication with Class Members

98 In advance of the summary judgment motions, Class Counsel reached out to various First Nations to have them opt-in in support of the Actions. Clearly, these efforts were effective as more than 120 First Nations joined the Representative Plaintiffs in seeking judgment. Furthermore, Class Counsel created a dedicated webpage to provide Class Members with access to information and documents related to the Actions. The webpages included a case description, new developments, news releases and reports, case documents, FAQs, and contact details. They also promoted the Actions to the media as a way of communicating with Class Members.

99 Similarly, throughout settlement negotiations, Class Counsel stayed in close contact with the Representative Plaintiffs and Class Members. The affidavit of Christopher Moonias confirms that Class Counsel worked closely with the Representative Plaintiffs, who, in turn, consulted with their respective band councils and/or community members regarding the Agreement in Principle and the Settlement Agreement. Likewise, Class Counsel engaged directly with Class Members by visiting communities, answering Class Members' questions, listening to their stories, and "socializing" the Agreement.

100 The Courts approved the Settlement Notice Plan on October 8, 2021. CA2 Inc. published the Short Form Notice in fifteen daily newspapers and The First Nation Drum. Similarly, on or about October 16, 2021 CA2 Inc. distributed legal notices of settlement approval to Curve Lake, Neskantaga, Tataskweyak, the Assembly of First Nations, and 713 Chiefs and Band Offices that have been affected by drinking water advisories. Finally, the October 8, 2021 Order required CA2 Inc. to set up a toll-free support line to answer Class Members' questions and to provide the Short and Long Form Notice to any member that requested it. These materials were provided in both English and French.

101 Statements of support and objection can indicate that Class Counsel sufficiently communicated with the Class (McLean at para 116). While no objections were made at the Settlement Approval Hearing, the Motion Record demonstrates that various First Nations and/or their legal counsel reached out to Class Counsel to ask questions about the Settlement. Additionally, it is clear that Representative Plaintiffs and Class Counsel spoke with other First Nations and Indigenous governance organizations. We are satisfied that in this circumstance the absence of objections indicates that potential Class Members understand and support the Agreement. It is also telling that 18 Class Members submitted affidavits indicating their support for the Agreement.

102 Overall, we are satisfied that Class Counsel provided a "robust, clear and accessible" notice of the Settlement to potential Class Members (Tk'emlúps at para 72).

(9) Recommendations and experience of counsel

103 Both Class Counsel and counsel for the Defendant recommend settling. In Class Counsel's view, continued negotiation would not have led to a better result for the Class, particularly with respect to retrospective compensation. Further, Class Counsel stated that compensation was within the range expected on judgment, without the uncertainty of outcome or delay. Class Counsel similarly felt that litigation would not have achieved a better result for the Class. As already discussed, it is uncertain whether courts would be able to order the same type of prospective relief reached in the Settlement Agreement.

104 Overall, Class Counsel felt that the Settlement addressed the Representative Plaintiffs' litigation objectives

(Tk'emlúps at para 73). Indeed, the affidavits of the Representative Plaintiffs confirmed as much, placing particular emphasis on the prospective relief guaranteed in the Settlement.

105 Class Counsel states that its recommendation is based on its experience in class actions, Indigenous rights, and Aboriginal law. McCarthy Tétrault is recognized nationally as having one of Canada's leading and largest class actions team. McCarthy Tétrault also enlisted the assistance of lawyers at their firm who specialize in contract drafting, tax, trusts, and estate law matters. OKT is Canada's largest law firm specializing in Aboriginal law and Indigenous rights. It serves northern and Indigenous clients in every territory and most provinces in Canada. Class Counsel also collaborated with First Peoples Law and Erickson's LLP. Both firms have close connections with various First Nation communities.

106 Notably, members of Class Counsel at both firms included Indigenous lawyers and students at law. In our view, these team members, in addition to their professional expertise, provide valuable lived experience that uniquely enables them to understand the needs and objectives of Class Members.

107 For all the reasons already discussed, the record demonstrates that Class Counsel has been alert and alive to the needs of the Class and the risk reward-balance unique to this proceeding. The simplified claims process, which has a low burden of proof in an effort to avoid re-traumatization, demonstrates that Class Counsel has applied the lessons from past class actions involving Indigenous Class Members. Overall, the large, diverse, and competent team constructed by Class Counsel demonstrates a commitment to carry out the Settlement in a good way using the necessary infrastructure and personnel to do so (McLean at para 113).

V. Conclusion

108 For decades, members of First Nations have endured harm while living under drinking water advisories. Canada's failure to provide safe drinking water has resulted in deep frustration and relationships being tainted by mistrust. We share Chief Whetung's hope that the Settlement will result in Indigenous communities being able "to turn their taps on just like non-Indigenous communities in Canada and drink and bathe in the water without fear for our health." It is also our hope that this Settlement symbolizes a step down the long trail towards healing the relationship between Canada and First Nations.

109 The Courts agree that the Settlement is fair and reasonable and in the best interests of the Class as a whole. In the form of the attached Order, the Courts approve the Settlement Agreement and order that the Actions against the Defendant be discontinued.

110 The Courts retain jurisdiction over this case and specifically, over the Order and Settlement. The Order specifies the retention of jurisdiction and it may be amended as circumstances dictate.

ORDER in T-1673-19

Without any admission of wrongdoing or liability by the Defendant, which denies any wrongdoing and disclaims any liability to the Class, this Court orders:

1. That the Parties' settlement agreement dated September 15, 2021, including the first addendum dated October 8, 2021 (together, the "Proposed Settlement Agreement"), is fair, reasonable, and in the best interests of the Class.
2. That the Proposed Settlement Agreement, attached hereto as Appendix "1" in English and Appendix "2" in French, is approved and its terms shall be given effect.
3. That the Defendant shall pay the funds set out in the Proposed Settlement Agreement, and that said funds be distributed in accordance with the Proposed Settlement Agreement.
4. That Class Members, as defined in the Proposed Settlement Agreement, be notified of the approval of the Proposed Settlement Agreement substantially as set out in Schedule M and N of the Proposed Settlement Agreement, and in accordance with the Notice Plan attached hereto as Appendix "3", with such modifications as the Parties may agree, and with the Defendant to pay the cost.

- 5. That, without affecting the finality of this Order or the dismissal of these Actions, the Court retains continuing jurisdiction as set out in the Proposed Settlement Agreement to interpret, supervise, construe, and enforce the Proposed Settlement Agreement, as applicable, for the mutual benefit of the Parties.
- 6. That the within Action be discontinued on a without costs basis.

(together, the "Neskantaga First Nation Plaintiffs", and collectively with the Curve Lake First Nation Plaintiffs, the "Federal Action Plaintiffs")

AND:

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN IN RIGHT OF CANADA ("Canada")

WHEREAS:

- A. The Federal Action Plaintiffs commenced the action styled as Curve Lake First Nation and Chief Emily Whetung on her own behalf and on behalf of all members of Curve Lake First Nation and Neskantaga First Nation and Chief Christopher Moonias on his own behalf and on behalf of all members of Neskantaga First Nation v Attorney General of Canada, Court File No. T-1673-19 in the Federal Court on October 11, 2019 (the "Federal Action");
- B. The Manitoba Action Plaintiffs commenced the action styled Tataskweyak Cree Nation and Chief Doreen Spence on her own behalf and on behalf of all members of Tataskweyak Cree Nation v Attorney General of Canada, Court File No. CI-19-01-24661 in the Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench on November 20, 2019 (the "Manitoba Action", and together with the Federal Action, the "Actions");
- C. The Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench certified the Manitoba Action as a class proceeding on July 14, 2020, and the Federal Court certified the Federal Action as a class proceeding on October 8, 2020;

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- D. The "Class" in each of the Actions is as follows:
- (a) all persons, other than Excluded Persons, who:
 - (i) are members of a First Nation;
 - (ii) had not died before November 20, 2017; and
 - (iii) during the Class Period ordinarily resided in an Impacted First Nation for at least one year while it was subject to a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory; and
 - (b) Tataskweyak Cree Nation, Curve Lake First Nation, Neskantaga First Nation, and any other First Nation that gives notice of Acceptance in accordance with the terms of this Agreement;
- E. Notice of the certification of the Actions was given in the form approved by the Courts and in the manner directed by the Courts. Individual Class Members were given the opportunity to Opt Out of the Class for a period of one hundred and twenty (120) days following the first publication of notice of certification (the "Opt-Out Period");
- F. The Opt-Out Period expired March 29, 2021. None of the Individual Class Members Opted Out of the Actions;
- G. The Class has suffered considerable hardships as a result of being deprived of safe drinking water and such hardships have seriously harmed both individuals and their communities;
- H. Canada acknowledges the hardships faced by Class Members and wishes to support Class Members in securing regular access to safe drinking water;
- I. Class Counsel and Canada concluded an agreement in principle dated June 20, 2021, which set out in principle the terms on which Canada was prepared to settle the Actions, and which Class Counsel would recommend to the Manitoba Action Plaintiffs and the Federal Action Plaintiffs (together, the "Representative Plaintiffs");
- J. Chief Wayne Moonias has succeeded Christopher Moonias as Chief of Neskantaga First Nation and will seek leave of the Federal Court to replace him as a Representative Plaintiff;
- K. The Representative Plaintiffs and Canada concluded an agreement in principle dated July 29, 2021 which set out the principal terms of their agreement to settle the Actions, and which forms the basis for this Agreement;
- L. In drafting this Agreement, the Parties:
- (a) intend there to be a fair, comprehensive and lasting settlement of claims related to Class Members' deprivation of safe drinking water and their hardships resulting therefrom;
 - (b) desire the implementation of concrete measures to prevent a recurrence of the harms suffered by Class Members;
 - (c) acknowledge the importance of providing First Nations with funding for projects related to water and wastewater, economic development, and cultural activities, and respect the autonomy of First Nations to choose the use to which such funds are directed;
 - (d) desire to promote healing, education, commemoration, and reconciliation; and
 - (e) intend to include Modern Treaty First Nations, as applicable, but recognize the uniqueness of each Modern Treaty First Nation, its lands, peoples, and relationship with Canada, and therefore agree that the specific details of the participation of any Modern Treaty First Nation will be developed in consultation with the Parties and the applicable Modern Treaty First Nation.

NOW THEREFORE, in consideration of the mutual agreements, covenants, and undertakings set out herein, the Parties agree as follows:

ARTICLE 1 - INTERPRETATION

1.01 Definitions

In this Agreement, the following definitions apply:

"Acceptance" means acceptance of this Agreement by a First Nation Class Member:

- (a) pursuant to a Band Council Acceptance Resolution that is provided to the Administrator; or
- (b) otherwise in accordance with the Settlement Approval Orders;

"Acceptance Deadline" means the date two hundred and seventy (270) days after the Implementation Date or such other date as the Parties may agree;

"Action Plan" means Indigenous Services Canada's Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory Action Plan detailing corrective measures to be undertaken by Canada to end Long-Term Drinking Water Advisories, attached as Schedule J, as it may be amended from time to time to reflect the addition of new commitments or the completion of existing commitments;

"Actions" has the meaning set out in the Recitals, and "Action" means either of them;

1.02 Headings

The division of this Agreement into paragraphs and the use of headings are for convenience of reference only and do not affect the construction or interpretation of this Agreement.

1.03 Extended Meanings

In this Agreement, words importing the singular number include the plural and vice versa, words importing any gender or no gender include all genders and words importing persons include First Nations. The term "including" means "including without limiting the generality of the foregoing". Any reference to a government ministry, department or position shall include any successor government ministry, department or position.

1.04 Interpretation

The Parties acknowledge that they have reviewed and participated in settling the terms of this Agreement and they agree that there shall be no presumptive rule of construction to the effect that any ambiguity in this Agreement is to be resolved in favour of any particular Party.

1.05 Statutory References

In this Agreement, unless something in the subject matter or context is inconsistent therewith or unless otherwise herein provided, a reference to any statute is to that statute as enacted on the date of such reference and not as the statute may from time to time be amended, re-enacted, or replaced, and the same applies to any regulations made thereunder.

1.06 Day For Any Action

Where the time on or by which any action required to be taken hereunder expires or falls on a day that is not a Business Day, such action may be done on the next succeeding day that is a Business Day.

1.07 Currency

All references to currency herein are to lawful money of Canada.

1.08 Compensation Inclusive

The amounts payable to Class Members under this Agreement are inclusive of any prejudgment or post-judgment interest

1.10 No Effect on Treaties or Existing Agreements

Nothing in this Agreement shall cancel or supersede any treaty between Canada and any one or more Class Members, or any existing agreement between Canada and any one or more Class Members with respect to First Nation Water and Wastewater Systems, Long-Term Drinking Water Advisories, or similar matters, save and except for the Agreement in Principle, which this Agreement shall supersede.

1.11 No Derogation from Constitutional Rights

This Agreement is to be construed as upholding the rights of Indigenous peoples recognized and affirmed by section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982, and not as abrogating or derogating from them.

1.12 Benefit of the Agreement

This Agreement will inure to the benefit of and be binding upon the Parties, and for Canada and First Nation Class Members, upon their respective successors, and for Individual Class Members, upon their estates, heirs, Estate Executors, Estate Claimants, and Personal Representatives.

1.13 Applicable Law

This Agreement will be governed by the laws of Canada together with the laws of Manitoba, as applicable, or alternatively, at the election of a Class Member, the laws of Canada together with the laws of the province or territory where the Class Member is ordinarily resident, as applicable.

1.14 Counterparts

This Agreement may be executed electronically and in any number of counterparts, each of which will be deemed to be an original and all of which taken together will be deemed to constitute one and the same Agreement.

1.15 Official Languages

Class Counsel shall prepare a French translation of this Agreement for use at the Settlement Approval Hearing. Following the Settlement Approval Orders, such French version shall be of equal weight and force at law.

1.16 Ongoing Supervisory Role of the Courts

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

Notwithstanding any other provision of this Agreement, the Courts shall maintain jurisdiction to supervise the implementation of this Agreement in accordance with its terms, including the adoption of protocols and statements of procedure, and the Parties attorn to the jurisdiction of the Courts for that purpose. The Courts may give any directions or make any orders that are necessary for the purposes of this Section.

ARTICLE 2 - EFFECTIVE DATE OF AGREEMENT2.01 Date when Binding and Effective

On the Implementation Date, this Agreement will become binding on all Individual Class Members. This Agreement will become binding on all First Nation Class Members on the later of (a) the date of their Acceptance and (b) the Implementation Date. If a First Nation Class Member does not give notice of Acceptance by the Acceptance Deadline, this Agreement will not bind the First Nation Class Member and the First Nation Class Member will not be entitled to any benefit hereunder unless the Courts order otherwise.

2.02 Effective Upon Approval

Subject to Section 2.03, none of the provisions of this Agreement will become effective unless and until the Courts approve this Agreement.

2.03 Legal Fees Severable

Class Counsel's fees for prosecuting the Actions have been negotiated separately from this Agreement and remain subject to approval by the Courts. The Courts' refusal to approve Class Counsel's fees will have no effect on the implementation of this Agreement. In the event that the Courts refuse to approve the fees of Class Counsel set out in Section 18.01, (a) the remainder of the provisions of this Agreement shall remain in full force and effect and in no way shall be affected, impaired or invalidated, and (b) Section 18.01 shall be modified to reflect such Class Counsel fees as are approved by the Courts, while otherwise effecting the original intent of the Parties as closely as possible.

ARTICLE 3 - ADMINISTRATION3.01 Designation of Administrator

On the recommendation of the Parties, the Courts shall appoint an Administrator to administer the Claims Process with such powers, rights, duties and responsibilities as are set out in Section 3.02 and such other powers, rights, duties and responsibilities as are determined by the Joint Committee and approved by the Courts. On the recommendation of the Parties, or of their own motion, the Courts may replace the Administrator at any time.

3.02 Duties of the Administrator

The Administrator's duties and responsibilities include the following:

- (a) developing, installing, and implementing systems, forms, information, guidelines and procedures for processing Claims and making decisions on Claims in accordance with this Agreement;
- (b) developing, installing, and implementing systems and procedures for making payments of compensation in accordance with this Agreement;
- (c) receiving funds from the Safe Drinking Water Trust and the Trustee to make payments to Class Members in accordance with this Agreement;
- (d) providing personnel in such reasonable numbers as are required for the performance of its duties under this Agreement, and training and instructing those personnel;
- (e) retaining community liaisons in Impacted First Nations and liaisons at tribal councils to facilitate the implementation of the Notice Plan and the Claims Process;

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- (f) keeping or causing to be kept accurate accounts of its activities and its administration and preparing such financial statements, reports, and records as are required by the Courts;
- (g) reporting to the Settlement Implementation Committee on a monthly basis respecting:
 - (i) Claims received and determined;
 - (ii) Claims deemed ineligible and the reason(s) for that determination; and
 - (iii) appeals from the Administrator's decisions and the outcomes of those appeals;
- (h) responding to inquiries respecting Claims and Claims Forms,
 - (i) reviewing Claims Forms and Band Council Confirmations, and determining, subject to Section 7.02(2) in the case of a Band Council Confirmation:
 - (i) a Claimant's membership in the Class;
 - (ii) the dates and places a Claimant was Ordinarily Resident;
 - (iii) a Claimant's entitlement to Individual Damages, if any; and
 - (iv) a Claimant's entitlement to Specified Injuries Compensation, if any;
 - (j) reviewing Acceptances and determining whether a First Nation submitting an Acceptance is eligible to be a First Nation Class Member and each First Nation Class Member's entitlement to First Nation Damages, if any;
- (k) giving notice of decisions made in accordance with this Agreement;
- (l) communicating with Claimants in either English or French, as the Claimant elects, and if a Claimant expresses the desire to communicate in a language other than English or French, making best efforts to accommodate such Claimant; and
- (m) such other duties and responsibilities as the Courts or the Parties may from time to time direct.

3.03 Appointment of the Third-Party Assessor

On the recommendation of the Parties, the Courts shall appoint one or more Third-Party Assessors. On the recommendation of the Parties, or of their own motion, the Courts may replace a Third-Party Assessor at any time. The Third-Party Assessor shall perform the duties of the Third-Party Assessor set out in this Agreement.

3.04 Responsibility for Costs

Canada shall pay:

- (a) the costs of giving notice in accordance with the Notice Plan and any additional notice ordered by the Courts;
- (b) the costs and reasonable disbursements of the Administrator, the Third-Party Assessor, the Trustee, the Auditors, and the Settlement Implementation Committee (except Joint Committee Members), up to a maximum of fifty million dollars in the aggregate ($50,000,000), and thereafter the Administrator shall pay such costs out of the Trust Fund on approval by the Courts;
- (c) the costs of the First Nations Advisory Committee on Safe Drinking Water in accordance with Section 9.04;
- (d) the costs of the Water Governance Fund in accordance with Section 9.05;
- (e) the costs of technical advice relating to the Commitment in accordance with Section 9.06(3); and
- (f) the costs of the Commitment Dispute Resolution Process in accordance with Section 9.08.

ARTICLE 4 - TRUST FUND

4.01 Establishment of the Trust Fund

- (1) As soon as practicable after its appointment and after the settlement of the Safe Drinking Water Trust in accordance with Section 16.01, the Trustee shall establish an interest-bearing trust account at a Schedule I Canadian Bank for purposes of the Trust Fund (the "Trust Account").
- (2) No later than sixty (60) days following the Implementation Date, and in accordance with the terms of Article 16, Canada shall make a contribution to the Safe Drinking Water Trust by paying one billion four-hundred and thirty-eight million dollars ($1,438,000,000) into the Trust Account, with such payment being a distinct fund (the "Trust Fund") within the Safe Drinking Water Trust.

4.02 Distribution of the Trust Fund

The Trustee shall authorize the Administrator to, and the Administrator shall, distribute the Trust Fund for the benefit of the Class Members in accordance with this Agreement, including by paying Individual Damages in accordance with Section 8.01 (2)(a).

4.03 Trust Fund Surplus

- (1) On the advice of an actuary or a similar advisor, the Joint Committee may determine at any time or from time to time that it is more likely than not that there are unallocated or surplus funds in the Trust Fund (a "Trust Fund Surplus").
- (2) The Joint Committee shall propose a distribution of any Trust Fund Surplus for the direct or indirect benefit of the Class Members in accordance with this Section 4.03.
- (3) A distribution of a Trust Fund Surplus shall include distributions to effect one or more of the following, in descending order of priority, and such other uses as the Joint Committee may determine in consultation with the FNAC:
 - (a) transferring up to four hundred million dollars ($400,000,000) to the First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund, as needed;
 - (b) paying Specified Injuries Compensation if the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund is insufficient to pay the Aggregate Specified Injuries Compensation Amount;
 - (c) paying Individual Damages or First Nation Damages to Claimants who filed valid Claims during a specified period after the Claims Deadline, if any (a "Late Claims Period"), as the Joint Committee considers appropriate;
 - (d) paying increased Individual Damages or First Nation Damages, as the Joint Committee considers appropriate; and
 - (e) funding programming to promote education, cultural or spiritual practices, study, or healing in connection with Long-Term Drinking Water Advisories, as the Joint Committee considers appropriate.
- (4) The Joint Committee shall propose any distribution of Trust Fund Surplus and bring motions in the Courts for approval of the proposed distribution of any Trust Fund Surplus.
- (5) An allocation of a Trust Fund Surplus shall require approval of both Courts, and it shall be effective on the later of:
 - (a) the day following the last day on which a Class Member may appeal or seek leave to appeal either of the approval orders in respect of such allocation; and
 - (b) the date on which the last of any appeals of either of the approval orders in respect of such allocation is finally determined.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- (6) For greater certainty, in no event shall any amount from the Trust Fund, including any Trust Fund Surplus, revert to Canada, and Canada shall not be an eligible recipient of any Trust Fund Surplus.

ARTICLE 5-SPECIFIED INJURIESCOMPENSATION FUND*5.01 Establishment of the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund

- (1) As soon as practicable after its appointment and after the settlement of the Safe Drinking Water Trust in accordance with Section 16.01, the Trustee shall establish an interest- bearing trust account at a Schedule I Canadian Bank for purposes of the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund (the "Specified Injuries Compensation Account").
- (2) No later than sixty (60) days following the Implementation Date; and in accordance with the terms of Article 16 , Canada shall make a contribution to the Safe Drinking Water Trust by paying fifty million dollars ($50,000,000) into the Specified Injuries Compensation Account, with such payment being a distinct fund (the "Specified Injuries Compensation Fund") within the Safe Drinking Water Trust.

5.02 Distribution of the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund

- (1) The Trustee shall authorize the Administrator to, and the Administrator shall, pay Specified Injuries Compensation from the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund in accordance with Section 8.02.
- (2) If, following the Ultimate Claims Deadline and the payment of the Specified Injuries Compensation as set out in Section 8.02, any funds remain in the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund, the Trustee shall transfer such remaining funds into the Trust Fund.
- (3) For greater certainty, in no event shall any amount from the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund revert to Canada, and Canada shall not be an eligible recipient of any amount from the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund.

ARTICLE 6 - FIRST NATIONS ECONOMICAND CULTURAL RESTORATION FUND*6.01 Establishment of the First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund

- (1) As soon as practicable after its appointment and after the settlement of the Safe Drinking Water Trust in accordance with Section 16.01, the Trustee shall establish an interest- bearing trust account at a Schedule I Canadian Bank for purposes of the First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund (the "Restoration Fund Account").
- (2) No later than sixty (60) days following the Implementation Date, and in accordance with the terms of Article 16 , Canada shall make a contribution to the Safe Drinking Water Trust by paying four hundred million dollars ($400,000,000) into the Restoration Fund Account, with such payment being a distinct fund (the "First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund") within the Safe Drinking Water Trust.
- (3) The purpose of the First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund is to provide First Nation Class Members with funds to use on projects related to water and wastewater, economic development, and cultural activities. The Parties respect the autonomy of First Nations to choose the use to which funds distributed from the Restoration Fund Account are directed.

6.02 Distribution of the First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund

- (1) The Trustee shall authorize the Administrator to, and the Administrator shall, pay First Nation Damages from the First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund in accordance with Section 8.03(1).

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- (2) If, following the Ultimate Claims Deadline and the payment of the First Nations Damages set out in Section 8.03(1), any funds remain in the First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund, the Trustee shall transfer such remaining funds into the Trust Fund.
- (3) For greater certainty, in no event shall any amount from the First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund revert to Canada, and Canada shall not be an eligible recipient of any amount from the First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund.

ARTICLE 7 - CLAIMS PROCESS

7.01 Principles Governing Claims Administration

- (1) The Claims Process is intended to be expeditious, cost-effective, user-friendly, culturally sensitive, trauma-informed, and non-traumatizing to participants. The Administrator shall identify and implement service times for the Claims Process no later than sixty (60) days after the Implementation Date.
- (2) The Administrator, the Third-Party Assessor, and the Settlement Implementation Committee and its Members shall, in the absence of reasonable grounds to the contrary, assume that a Claimant is acting honestly and in good faith with respect to any Claim.
- (3) In considering a Claims Form or a Band Council Confirmation, the Administrator, the Third-Party Assessor, and the Settlement Implementation Committee and its Members shall draw all reasonable and favourable inferences that can be drawn in favour of the Claimant.

7.02 Eligibility Decisions and Specified Injuries Decisions

- (1) The Administrator shall review each Claims Form, Band Council Confirmation, and/or such other information as the Administrator considers relevant to determine, subject to Section 7.02(2) in the case of a Band Council Confirmation, whether each Claimant is an Individual Class Member and the period of time that they were Ordinarily Resident on a Reserve during a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory (an "Eligibility Decision") and, if applicable, the validity of a Claim for Specified Injuries Compensation (a "Specified Injuries Decision"). For greater certainty, the Administrator may provide a Claimant with an Eligibility Decision or a Specified Injuries Decision before the Administrator has calculated the Claimant's entitlement, if any, to Individual Damages or Specified Injuries Compensation.

- (2) A Band Council Confirmation is intended to be optional. Where provided, and in the absence of evidence to the contrary, a Band Council Confirmation shall constitute sufficient evidence of the Individual Class Members identified therein being Ordinarily Resident on a Reserve during a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory for the purpose of an Eligibility Decision and shall be sufficient to make Claims for Individual Damages on behalf of such Individual Class Members without such Individual Class Members being required to submit Claims Forms. Notwithstanding the foregoing, an Individual Class Member identified in a Band Council Confirmation, or an Estate Executor, Estate Claimant or Personal Representative on their behalf, shall be entitled to submit a Claims Form, and a Band Council Confirmation is not intended to override any Claims Form submitted by or on behalf of an Individual Class Member, whether or not such Individual Class Member is identified in a Band Council Confirmation. In the event of a conflict between a Band Council Confirmation and a Claims Form, the Claims Form shall prevail. Any Claimant who desires to make a Claim for Specified Injuries Compensation shall be required to submit a Claims Form in respect of their Specified Injuries.
- (3) The Administrator shall give written notice to each Claimant setting out the results of its Eligibility Decision and, if applicable, Specified Injuries Decision. If the Administrator determines that the Claimant is an Individual Class Member, the Eligibility Decision will state the period of time that such Claimant was Ordinarily Resident on an applicable Reserve during a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory, what kind of Drinking Water Advisory applied, and whether the Reserve was in a Remote First Nation.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- (4) The Administrator shall provide written reasons to a Claimant in any case of:
 - (a) an Eligibility Decision that a Claimant is not an Individual Class Member, or that the Claimant was not Ordinarily Resident on an applicable Reserve for the entire period claimed in the Claimant's Claims Form; or
 - (b) a Specified Injuries Decision that a Claimant is not eligible for the Specified Injuries Compensation claimed in the Claimant's Claims Form.
- (5) Only a Claimant confirmed by an Eligibility Decision (including, for greater certainty, by being identified as an Individual Class Member in a Band Council Confirmation) to be an Individual Class Member (a "Confirmed Individual Class Member") may be entitled to compensation pursuant to Section 8.01 and, if applicable, Section 8.02.
- (6) A Claimant shall have sixty (60) days to commence an appeal to the Third-Party Assessor in accordance with the Claims Process after receiving:
 - (a) an Eligibility Decision that a Claimant is not an Individual Class Member or that the Claimant was not Ordinarily Resident on an applicable Reserve for the entire period claimed in the Claimant's Claims Form or a Band Council Confirmation; or
 - (b) a Specified Injuries Decision that a Claimant is not entitled to the Specified Injuries Compensation claimed in the Claimant's Claims Form.
- (7) The Third-Party Assessor's decision on an appeal pursuant to Section 7.02(6) will be final and not subject to appeal or review.
- (8) Class Counsel shall assist Claimants or their representatives, as reasonably requested, in making Claims for Specified Injuries Compensation or in appealing a Specified Injuries Decision at no cost to Canada or the Claimant other than, for certainty, Class Counsel's fees as separately negotiated or as approved by the Courts and payable in accordance with Section 18.02.

7.03 First Nation Damages Decisions

Within thirty (30) days following receipt by a First Nation Class Member of the Administrator's determination of its eligibility for a Base Payment or the Administrator's calculation of its First Nation Damages in accordance with the Claims Process, the First Nation Class Member may appeal such decision(s) in accordance with the Claims Process. The decision of the Third-Party Assessor on such an appeal will be final and not subject to appeal or review

7.04 Referrals to Settlement Implementation Committee

- (1) The Administrator shall refer a Claims Form to the Settlement Implementation Committee where the harms described in the Claims Form are not contemplated in the Specified Injuries Compensation Grid, and where the Settlement Implementation Committee has not already declined to extend Specified Injuries Compensation in substantially similar circumstances.
- (2) The decision of the Settlement Implementation Committee on a Claims Form referred under this Section 7.04 will be final and not subject to appeal or review.

7.05 Finality of Decisions

Except as set out in this Article 7 and in the Claims Process, all decisions of the Administrator are final and binding upon a Claimant and not subject to appeal or review.

ARTICLE 8 - RETROSPECTIVE COMPENSATION8.01 Individual Damages

- (1) In determining where a Claimant was Ordinarily Resident for the purpose of this Agreement, the Administrator shall consider each year during the Class Period that a Reserve was subject to a Long-

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

Term Drinking Water Advisory, beginning on the date that the advisory was imposed (each such year, an "Advisory Year"), and a Claimant shall have been "Ordinarily Resident" on an affected Reserve, for the purposes of this Agreement, if:

- (a) the Claimant lived on the affected Reserve for a greater portion of an Advisory Year (or, after the first Advisory Year, the applicable portion of such subsequent Advisory Year that a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory was in effect if the Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory terminated before the end of the Advisory Year) than the Claimant lived elsewhere; and
 - (b) notwithstanding the foregoing, in the case of any Claimant who was eighteen (18) years of age or younger at the applicable time, such Claimant habitually lived on an affected Reserve but lived elsewhere for a portion of the Advisory Year to attend an educational facility.
- (2) The Administrator shall calculate damages for each Confirmed Individual Class Member ("Individual Damages") in accordance with the following formula (the "Individual Damages Formula"):
- (a) in the case of a Confirmed Individual Class Member who had not yet reached the age of eighteen (18) years on November 20, 2013, for:
 - (i) every Advisory Year; and
 - (ii) after the first Advisory Year, every portion of an Advisory Year in accordance with Section 8.01(4), during the Class Period that such Confirmed Individual Class Member was Ordinarily Resident on a Reserve where a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory was in effect;
 - (b) in the case of a Confirmed Individual Class Member who had reached the age of eighteen (18) years before November 20, 2013, but was incapable of commencing a proceeding in respect of their Claim because of their physical, mental or psychological condition, for:
 - (i) every Advisory Year (and, after the first Advisory Year, every portion of an Advisory Year in accordance with Section 8.01(4)) prior to November 20, 2019, for which the Confirmed Individual Class Member had reached the age of eighteen (18) years and had been capable of commencing a proceeding in respect of that Advisory Year (or portion thereof) for a cumulative period of less than six (6) years as of November 20, 2019; and
 - (ii) every Advisory Year (and, after the first Advisory Year, every portion of an Advisory Year in accordance with Section 8.01(4)) subsequent to November 20, 2019, during the Class Period that such Confirmed Individual Class Member was Ordinarily Resident on a Reserve where a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory was in effect; or
 - (c) in the case of a Confirmed Individual Class Member who had reached the age of eighteen (18) years before November 20, 2013, other than a person described in Section 8.01 (2)(b), for:
 - (i) every Advisory Year; and
 - (ii) after the first Advisory Year, every portion of an Advisory Year in accordance with Section 8.01(4), between November 20, 2013, and the end of the Class Period that such Confirmed Individual Class Member was Ordinarily Resident on a Reserve where a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory was in effect.
- (3) The Joint Committee, acting on the advice of an actuary or a similar advisor, shall determine the rates at which Individual Damages will be paid. Subject to (a) the availability of sufficient funds in the Trust Fund and (b) the availability of sufficient funds in the First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund to pay First Nation Damages in an amount equal to fifty percent (50%) of the Individual Damages, Individual Damages shall be paid at the rates set out in Schedule G, or as close to those rates as the sufficiency of the Trust Fund and the First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund allows.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- (4) Individual Damages for any partial Advisory Years after the first Advisory Year shall be calculated for each Confirmed Individual Class Member by multiplying:
 - (a) the Individual Damages such Confirmed Individual Class Member would have been entitled to for a full Advisory Year, calculated in accordance with Section 8.01(2); by
 - (b) a fraction, the numerator of which is the number of days in the applicable partial Advisory Year after the first Advisory Year during which a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory remained in effect on a Reserve where the Class Member was Ordinarily Resident and the denominator of which is three hundred and sixty-five (365).
- (5) Except as otherwise provided in this Agreement, within one hundred and twenty (120) days following the Claims Deadline, the Administrator shall pay Individual Damages in Accordance with this Agreement. The Administrator shall request such funds from the Trustee, the Trustee shall provide such funds to the Administrator, and the Administrator shall pay such funds in accordance with this Agreement.

8.02 Specified Injuries Compensation

- (1) In addition to Individual Damages, an Individual Class Member may indicate on their Claims Form that they claim damages for one or more of the specified medical conditions listed on Schedule H that were caused by using treated or tap water in accordance with a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory on a Reserve where such Individual Class Member was Ordinarily Resident, or by restricted access to treated or tap water caused by a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory on a Reserve where such Individual Class Member was Ordinarily Resident ("Specified Injuries"). For greater certainty, medical conditions caused by using water in a manner that is contrary to an applicable Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory or using Source Water will not constitute Specified Injuries.
- (2) Confirmed Individual Class Members will be entitled to compensation for Specified Injuries in the amount set out in Schedule H (the "Specified Injuries Compensation"), provided that the Claimant establishes that the injury was caused by using treated or tap water in accordance with a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory, or by restricted access to treated or tap water caused by a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory, in accordance with the Claims Process and Schedule H.
- (3) Confirmed Individual Class Members must establish a Specified Injury by the means set out in Schedule H and the Claims Process, unless the Settlement Implementation Committee directs otherwise. Each amount set out in in Schedule H will be paid only once to a particular Claimant, even if the Claimant suffered multiple Specified Injuries of the same nature or kind.
- (4) Within one hundred and twenty (120) days following the Claims Deadline, the Administrator shall determine whether there are sufficient funds in the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund to pay the aggregate Specified Injuries Compensation for each valid and established Claim for Specified Injuries Compensation (the "Aggregate Specified Injuries Compensation Amount") established in accordance with the Claims Process, and:
 - (a) if there are sufficient funds in the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund to pay the Aggregate Specified Injuries Compensation Amount, the Administrator shall pay Specified Injuries Compensation in accordance with this Agreement; or
 - (b) if there are insufficient funds in the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund to pay the Aggregate Specified Injuries Compensation Amount, the Administrator shall pay each Confirmed Individual Class Member in accordance with this Agreement their pro rata share of the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund in proportion to the Specified Injuries Compensation to which such Confirmed Individual Class Member would be entitled if the Aggregate Specified Injuries Compensation Amount was equal to the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund; and

- (c) in either case, the Administrator shall request such funds from the Trustee, the Trustee shall provide such funds to the Administrator, and the Administrator shall pay such funds in accordance with this Agreement.

8.03 First Nation Class Member Damages

- (1) The Administrator shall calculate First Nation Class Members' damages in accordance with the following entitlement of each First Nation Class Member:
 - (a) a base payment of five hundred thousand dollars ($500,000) (the "Base Payment"); and
 - (b) an amount equal to fifty percent (50%) of the Individual Damages paid to Confirmed Individual Class Members who were Ordinarily Resident on such First Nation Class Member's Reserve or Reserves during a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory on such First Nation Class Member's Reserve or Reserves ("First Nation Damages").
- (2) The Administrator shall pay the Base Payment to each First Nation Class Member from the First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund within ninety (90) days following the later of (a) the Implementation Date, and (b) the date on which such First Nation Class Member gives written notice of Acceptance to Class Counsel. The Administrator shall request such funds from the Trustee, the Trustee shall provide such funds to the Administrator, and the Administrator shall pay such funds in accordance with this Agreement.
- (3) Every six (6) months after the Base Payment is made pursuant to Section 8.03(2), the Administrator shall pay each First Nation Class Member from the First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund, without duplication, any accrued but unpaid First Nation Damages to date for such First Nation Class Member. The Administrator shall request such funds from the Trustee, the Trustee shall provide such funds to the Administrator, and the Administrator shall pay such funds in accordance with this Agreement.

ARTICLE 9 - PROSPECTIVE RELIEF9.01 Action Plan for First Nation Class Members

- (1) Canada shall make all reasonable efforts to support the removal of Long-Term Drinking Water Advisories that affect Class Members, including by taking the steps set out in the Action Plan within the project timeframes set out therein.
- (2) Canada shall update the Action Plan regularly, and no less than quarterly, so as to reflect progress against the Action Plan.
- (3) The Action Plan shall be amended to reflect additional commitments made by Canada, including commitments in Remediation Plans.
- (4) Within thirty (30) Business Days following any update or amendment to the Action Plan, Canada shall provide the Joint Committee with a copy of the updated or amended Action Plan.
- (5) For greater certainty, nothing in this Agreement limits Canada to taking the measures set out in the Action Plan or prevents Canada from taking additional measures not contemplated in the Action Plan for the benefit of Class Members.

9.02 Commitment to Additional Measures

- (1) In addition to the measures set out in the Action Plan, Canada shall make all reasonable efforts to ensure that Individual Class Members living on Reserves have regular access to drinking water in their homes, whether from a public water system or a private water system approved by a band council resolution substantially in the form set out in Schedule P, or another form acceptable to Canada and Class Counsel, including on-site systems, that meets the stricter of the federal requirements or provincial standards governing residential water quality (the "Commitment1"). For greater certainty:

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- (a) such "regular access" shall be of a nature and quantity sufficient to permit all usual and necessary uses of water in a similarly situated Canadian home, including but not limited to drinking water, bathing and personal hygiene, food preparation and dishwashing, sanitation, and laundry;
 - (b) the Commitment is limited to Canada's reasonable efforts, including the provision of actual cost funding, training, planning, and technical assistance;
 - (c) if, despite Canada making all reasonable efforts, such regular access cannot be achieved, Canada is not required to warranty such regular access in an Individual Class Member's home; and,
 - (d) factors that may be considered in any determination of reasonable efforts include, but are not limited to:
 - (i) the views of the particular First Nation;
 - (ii) any federal requirements or provincial standards and protocols relating to water;
 - (iii) whether monitoring and testing are performed on the water system; and
 - (iv) the physical location of the home, including proximity to centralized water systems and remoteness.
- (2) Canada shall spend at least six billion dollars ($6,000,000,000) between June 20, 2021, and March 31, 2030, to meet the Commitment, at a rate of at least four hundred million dollars ($400,000,000) per fiscal year ending March 31, by funding the actual cost of construction, upgrading, operation, and maintenance of water infrastructure on Reserves for First Nations ("Commitment Expenditures").
 - (3) Canada shall provide the Joint Committee with an annual statement of all Commitment Expenditures actually made each fiscal year through March 31, 2030, which statement shall be provided no later than ninety (90) days after the end of the applicable fiscal year.
 - (4) Upon request, Canada shall promptly provide any First Nation Class Member with a statement of the Commitment Expenditures in respect of such First Nation Class Member's Reserves.

9.03 Repeal and Replacement of Safe Drinking Water for First Nations Act

- (1) Canada shall make all reasonable efforts to:
 - (a) introduce legislation repealing the Safe Drinking Water for First Nations Act, S.C. 2013, c. 21 (the "SDWFNA") on or before March 31, 2022;
 - (b) develop and introduce replacement legislation for the SDWFNA ("Replacement Legislation"), in consultation with First Nations; and
 - (c) introduce the Replacement Legislation by December 31, 2022.
- (2) The objectives of the Replacement Legislation shall be to:
 - (a) ensure sustainable First Nation Water and Wastewater Systems, premised upon:
 - (i) defining minimum standards of water quality for First Nation Water and Wastewater Systems, with reference to standards that are directly applicable to First Nation communities; and
 - (ii) defining minimum capacity standards for the delivery of water to First Nation communities, in terms of volume per individual community member;
 - (b) create a transparent approach to building, improving, and providing drinking water and wastewater services for First Nations;
 - (c) confirm adequate and sustainable funding for First Nation Water and Wastewater Systems; and
 - (d) support the voluntary assumption of water and wastewater infrastructure by First Nations.
- (3) Notwithstanding Canada's commitment to introduce the Replacement Legislation, Canada shall support the development of First Nations governance initiatives as described in Section 9.05, below.

9.04 First Nations Advisory Committee on Safe Drinking Water

- (1) Canada shall provide twenty million dollars ($20,000,000) in funding through the fiscal year ending March 31, 2026, for the creation of the First Nations Advisory Committee on Safe Drinking Water (the 'FNAC').
- (2) The FNAC's membership shall reflect Canada's diversity of First Nation Class Member communities, languages, genders, geographies, skills, expertise, and experience with water insecurity.
- (3) The members of the FNAC shall be appointed by agreement of the Parties, on the recommendation of the Joint Committee, and failing agreement, the members shall be appointed by the Courts. The Parties may agree to remove any member of the FNAC, and such removal will be effective upon approval of the Courts.
- (4) The primary functions of the FNAC shall be to:
 - (a) work with First Nation Class Members to provide oversight, guidance, and recommendations to Indigenous Services Canada to support the development and implementation of forward-looking policy initiatives, including:
 - (i) the development of Indigenous Services Canada's Long Term Strategy for Water and Wastewater on First Nation Class Members' Reserves; and
 - (ii) the development of the Replacement Legislation;
 - (b) contribute strategic advice and perspectives to Indigenous Services Canada in order to advance the long-term sustainability of safe drinking water in First Nation communities; and
 - (c) support the identification and prioritization of funding for water and wastewater in First Nations communities.
- (5) The terms of reference for the FNAC shall be developed jointly by the Parties.

9.05 First Nations Governance Initiatives

- (1) Canada shall provide nine million dollars ($9,000,000) in funding for First Nations to pursue governance initiatives and by-law development through the fiscal year ending March 31, 2026 the 'Water Governance Fund'). Indigenous Services Canada shall administer the Water Governance Fund in accordance with its terms of reference.
- (2) The funding for the Water Governance Fund shall continue through the fiscal year ending March 31, 2026, regardless of whether the Replacement Legislation is enacted within the anticipated time frame or at all.
- (3) The Water Governance Fund shall assist First Nation Class Members that wish to develop their own water-related governance initiatives, including by funding:
 - (a) research;
 - (b) technical advice;
 - (c) by-law drafting; and
 - (d) the implementation of pilot projects on Reserves.
- (4) The terms of reference for the Water Governance Fund shall be developed jointly by the Parties.

9.06 Agreement on Required Measures

- (1) If a First Nation determines that the Commitment is not met or ceases to be met on its Reserve or Reserves or if a First Nation determines that Canada is not complying with a Remediation Plan (each such First Nation is an 'Underserviced First Nation'), it shall give written notice to Canada, directed to the Deputy Minister of Indigenous Services, describing the way in which the Commitment is not met or ceases to be met or the way in which Canada is not complying with a Remediation Plan.

- (2) Canada shall promptly consult with each Underserved First Nation, with a view to meeting the Commitment as soon as possible.
- (3) Canada shall pay the reasonable cost of an Underserved First Nation obtaining technical advice to determine what steps are required to meet the Commitment on the Underserved First Nation's Reserve or Reserves.
- (4) Canada shall make all reasonable efforts to reach an agreement with the Underserved First Nation detailing the steps that are required to meet the Commitment (a "Remediation Plan").
- (5) Canada and the Underserved First Nation shall each comply with the Remediation Plan.

9.07 Dispute Resolution for Required Measures

If Canada does not comply with an existing Remediation Plan or Canada and an Underserved First Nation fail to agree upon a Remediation Plan within three (3) months following the Underserved First Nation delivering notice as set out in Section 9.06 or such other time period as the Parties may agree, the Underserved First Nation may invoke the dispute resolution process set out on Schedule K (the "Commitment Dispute Resolution Process"), in which case Canada and the Underserved First Nation shall submit the existing Remediation Plan or their respective proposed forms of Remediation Plan to the Commitment Dispute Resolution Process.

9.08 Costs of Commitment Dispute Resolution Process

- (1) Canada shall pay fifty percent (50%) of the reasonable costs and disbursements of any Underserved First Nation Class Member's participation in the Commitment Dispute Resolution Process, including reasonable legal fees and disbursements, provided that Canada shall pay one hundred percent (100%) of the reasonable costs of convening collaborative negotiations, mediations, and arbitrations in accordance with the Commitment Dispute Resolution Process, together with the reasonable fees and disbursements of any mediator or arbitrator appointed in accordance with the Commitment Dispute Resolution Process; and
- (2) For greater certainty, the costs and disbursements set out in Section 9.08(1) are separate and distinct from the fees and disbursements payable to Class Counsel and the Joint Committee pursuant to Article 18 .

ARTICLE 10 - EFFECT OF AGREEMENT

10.01 No Provision for Continued Damages

This Agreement makes no provision for any damages that may accrue to Class Members in respect of Long-Term Drinking Water Advisories that begin or continue after June 20, 2021, and Class Members shall not release any claims to any such damages.

10.02 Canada's Liability

The Parties specifically agree that once Canada has complied with the terms of this Agreement, it shall have no further liability to Class Members for damages that they incurred prior to June 20, 2021 in respect of or arising from Canada's failure to provide, or fund the provision of, safe drinking water on the Reserve or Reserves of such First Nation Class Members, or on which such Individual Class Members were Ordinarily Resident during a LongTerm Drinking Water Advisory.

10.03 Releases

- (1) The Settlement Approval Orders issued by the Courts will declare that, except as set forth in Section 10.01 and Section 10.04, and in consideration for Canada's obligations and liabilities under this Agreement, each Individual Class Member or their Estate Executor, Estate Claimant, or Personal

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

Representative on behalf of such Individual Class Member or their estate and each First Nation Class Member (hereinafter collectively the Releasors) has fully, finally and forever released Canada and its servants, agents, officers and employees, predecessors, successors, and assigns (hereinafter collectively the Releasees), from any and all actions, causes of action, claims, and demands of every nature or kind available, whether or not known or anticipated, which the Releasors had, now have or may in the future have against the Releasees in respect of or arising from Canada's failure to provide, or fund the provision of, safe drinking water on the Reserve or Reserves of such First Nation Class Member, or on which such Individual Class Member was Ordinarily Resident during a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory, in each case prior to the conclusion of the Class Period.

- (2) The Releasors are deemed to agree that if they make any claim or demand or take any actions or proceedings against another person or persons in which any claim arises against the Releasees for contribution or indemnity or other relief over, whether by statute, common law, or Quebec civil law, in relation to the claims released in Section 10.03(1), above, the Releasors shall expressly limit their claims so as to exclude any portion of Canada's liability.
- (3) Upon a final determination of a Claim made under and in accordance with the Claims Process, the Releasors are also deemed to fully and finally release:
 - (a) the Parties, Class Counsel, counsel for Canada, the Settlement Implementation Committee and its Members, the FNAC and its members, the Joint Committee and its members, the Administrator, and the Third-Party Assessor with respect to any claims that have arisen, arise, or could arise out of the application of the Claims Process, including any claims relating to the calculation of Individual Damages, Specified Injuries Compensation, and First Nation Damages, the sufficiency of the compensation received, and the allocation and distribution of Trust Fund Surplus;
 - (b) any band council that submitted a Band Council Confirmation in respect of any claims that have arisen, arise, or could arise out of the Band Council Confirmation, including any claims in respect of the completeness or accuracy thereof; and
 - (c) any band council that adopts a band council resolution approving private water systems, substantially in the form set out in Schedule P or in another form acceptable to Canada and Class Counsel, in respect of any claims that have arisen, arise, or could arise out of the band council resolution approving private water systems, including any claims in respect of the completeness or accuracy thereof, and the adoption or failure to adopt a band council resolution approving private water systems shall not have the effect of making a First Nation or its band council responsible or liable for any water system described therein.
- (4) The Parties, Class Counsel, counsel for Canada, the Settlement Implementation Committee and its Members, the FNAC and its members, the Joint Committee and its members, the Administrator, and the Third-Party Assessor shall have no liability to a Missing Eligible Class Member with respect to any claims that have arisen, arise, or could arise in respect of the payment or non-payment of any amount in accordance with this Agreement once the Administrator has complied with the Eligible Class Member Address Search Plan set out in Schedule Q.
- (5) For greater certainty:
 - (a) any living Individual Class Member who does not submit a valid Claims Form to the Administrator, or on whose behalf a valid Claim is not made in the form of a Band Council Confirmation, or, in the case of a Class Member who is a Person Under Disability, on whose behalf a valid Claims Form is not submitted by such Class Member's Personal Representative; and
 - (b) any Deceased Individual Class Member who did not submit a valid Claims Form prior to their death, or whose Estate Executor or Estate Claimant does not submit a valid Claims Form on behalf of such Deceased Individual Class Member, together with any other information required by this Agreement, in each case on or prior to the Ultimate Claims Deadline shall have no right to Individual Damages or Specified Injuries Compensation under this Agreement, and the Administrator shall reject any Claim submitted following the Ultimate Claims Deadline. Each

Individual Class Member shall continue to be bound by the release set out in this Section 10.03 notwithstanding their failure to submit a valid Claims Form on or prior to the Ultimate Claims Deadline.

- (6) For greater certainty any Impacted First Nation that does not give notice of Acceptance by the Acceptance Deadline shall forfeit any right to any benefit under this Agreement, including First Nation Damages, and the Administrator shall reject any notice of Acceptance submitted following the Acceptance Deadline.

10.04 Continuing Remedies

- (1) The Parties acknowledge and agree that, notwithstanding Section 10.03 or any other provision of this Agreement, Class Members do not release, and specifically retain, their claims or causes of action for any breach by Canada of this Agreement.
- (2) The Parties acknowledge and agree that irreparable harm would occur for which money damages would not be an adequate remedy at law in the event Canada failed to perform its obligations under Section 3.04, Article 4 Article 5 Article 6 or Article 9 . It is accordingly agreed that, subject to the Crown Liability and Proceedings Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-50, the Parties shall be entitled to injunctive and other equitable relief to prevent breaches or threatened breaches of this Agreement, and to enforce compliance with the terms of this Agreement, without any requirement for the securing or posting of any bond in connection with the obtaining of any such injunctive or other equitable relief, this being in addition to damages and any other remedy to which the Parties may be entitled at law or in equity.

10.05 Canadian Income Tax and Social Benefits

- (1) Canada shall make best efforts to ensure that any Class Member's entitlement to federal social benefits or social assistance benefits will not be negatively affected by receipt of any payment in accordance with this Agreement, and no such payment will be considered taxable income within the meaning of the Income Tax Act.
- (2) Canada shall make best efforts to obtain agreement with provincial and territorial governments to the effect that the receipt of any payment in accordance with this Agreement will not affect the amount, nature, or duration of any social benefits or social assistance benefits available or payable to any Class Member.

ARTICLE 11 - IMPLEMENTATION OF THIS AGREEMENT

11.01 Settlement Approval Orders

- (1) The Parties agree that the Settlement Approval Orders will be sought from the Courts substantially in the form attached as Schedule O.
- (2) The Parties shall consent to the entry of the Settlement Approval Orders.
- (3) The Parties shall take all reasonable measures to cooperate in requesting that the Courts issue the Settlement Approval Orders.
- (4) The Parties shall schedule the Settlement Approval Hearing as soon as practicable considering the requirements of the Notice Plan and the Courts' availability.

11.02 Notice Plan

- (1) The Parties agree that they shall jointly seek approval from the Courts of the Notice Plan as the means by which Class Members will be provided with notice of settlement and settlement approval, as well as the Late Opt-Out, as applicable.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- (2) Canada agrees to fund the implementation of the Notice Plan and any subsequent notice ordered by the Courts.

ARTICLE 12 - OPTING OUT

12.01 Opting Out

No Individual Class Member may Opt Out of the Actions without leave of the Courts, and each Individual Class Member shall be bound by this Agreement if it is approved by the Courts.

12.02 Late Opt-Out

Notwithstanding Section 12.01, Individual Class Members who are Ordinarily Resident in Mitaanjigaming First Nation, North Caribou Lake, Ministikwan Lake Cree Nation, Oneida of the Thames, and Deer Lake First Nation shall have a right to Opt Out by providing the Administrator with written notice within forty-five (45) days of the date on which notice of settlement is first published. The First Nations named in this Section 12.02 first experienced a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory after the commencement of the Opt-Out Period. Save and except for the Late Opt-Out in this Section 12.02, Individual Class Members shall have no right to Opt Out under this Agreement and may only exclude themselves from the Actions with leave of the Courts in accordance with Section 12.01.

12.03 Automatic Exclusion for Individual Claims

Any Individual Class Member who does not, before the expiry of the time to Opt Out, discontinue a proceeding that raises questions of law or fact that are common to the Actions, is deemed to have Opted Out.

ARTICLE 13- PAYMENTS FOR DECEASED INDIVIDUAL CLASS MEMBERS AND PERSONS UNDER DISABILITY

13.01 Compensation if Deceased: Grant of Authority or the Like

- (1) If an Individual Class Member died or dies on or after November 20, 2017 (any such Individual Class Member, a "Deceased Individual Class Member"), and:
- (a) the Deceased Individual Class Member has been identified in a Band Council Confirmation;
 - (b) a Claims Form has been submitted to the Administrator by such Deceased Individual Class Member or their Personal Representative prior to their death; or
 - (c) a Claims Form has been submitted to the Administrator by their Estate Executor after their death, and the Estate Executor of such Deceased Individual Class Member has submitted the evidence required by Section 13.01(2) to the Administrator, the Administrator shall pay such Deceased Individual Class Member's Estate Executor the compensation to which such Deceased Individual Class Member was entitled under the Claims Process, with such payment made payable to "the estate of" such Deceased Individual Class Member.

- (2) In support of a Claim made pursuant to Section 13.01(1), the Estate Executor for the Deceased Individual Class Member shall submit to the Administrator, in each case in a form acceptable to the Administrator:
- (a) a Claims Form (if a Claims Form was not submitted by such Deceased Individual Class Member or their Personal Representative prior to their death and such Deceased Individual Class Member was not identified in a Band Council Confirmation);
 - (b) evidence that such Deceased Individual Class Member is deceased and of the date on which such Deceased Individual Class Member died; and

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- (c) evidence in the following form identifying such representative as having the legal authority to receive compensation on behalf of the estate of the Deceased Individual Class Member:
 - (i) if the claim is based on a will or other testamentary instrument or on intestacy, a copy of a grant of probate or a grant and letters testamentary or other document of like import or a grant of letters of administration or other document of like import, purporting to be issued by any court or authority in Canada; or
 - (ii) if the claim is based on a Quebec notarial will, an authenticated copy thereof.

13.02 Compensation if Deceased: No Grant of Authority or the Like

- (1) If a Claims Form has been submitted to the Administrator by a Deceased Individual Class Member or by their Personal Representative prior to their death, or by their Estate Executor or another representative of such Deceased Individual Class Member (an "Estate Claimant") after their death, but the estate of such Deceased Individual Class Member has not submitted all of the evidence required by Section 13.01(2) to the Administrator, the Estate Executor or Estate Claimant must submit the evidence required by Section 13.01(2)(a) and Section 13.01 (2)(b) to the Administrator, together with evidence identifying the basis on which the Estate Executor or Estate Claimant represents the estate of such Deceased Individual Class Member in accordance with Section 13.02(3) (in totality, an "Estate Representation Claim"), by the date that is the later of the Claims Deadline and the end of any Late Claims Period (the "Ultimate Claims Deadline") and otherwise in accordance with this Agreement, and:
 - (a) if only one Estate Representation Claim has been submitted in respect of such Deceased Individual Class Member on or prior to the Ultimate Claims Deadline, the Administrator shall pay the compensation to which such Deceased Individual Class Member is entitled to the Estate Executor or Estate Claimant identified in the Estate Representation Claim on behalf of the estate; or
 - (b) if more than one Estate Representation Claim has been submitted in respect of such Deceased Individual Class Member on or prior to the Ultimate Claims Deadline, the Administrator shall:
 - (i) if the Estate Executors or Estate Claimants identified in all such Estate Representation Claims submit to the Administrator a signed agreement directing the payment of the compensation to which such Deceased Individual Class Member is entitled and provide a release in a form acceptable to the Administrator, pay such compensation to the estate in accordance with such agreement; or
 - (ii) if the Estate Executors or Estate Claimants identified in all such Estate Representation Claims do not submit to the Administrator an agreement in accordance with Section 13.02(1)(b)(i), require one of the Estate Executors or Estate Claimants identified in one of the Estate Representation Claims to submit to the Administrator the evidence set out in Section 13.01(2) c) and pay such person on behalf of the estate the compensation to which such Deceased Individual Class Member is entitled, provided that if no person submits to the Administrator the evidence set out in Section 13.01 (2) c) within two (2) years of the Ultimate Claims Deadline, the Claim on behalf of such Deceased Individual Class Member and their estate will be extinguished, the Administrator will have no further obligation to make any payment in respect of such Deceased Individual Class Member or to their estate, and all Claims by or on behalf of such Deceased Individual Class Member and their estate shall be deemed to be released and discharged in accordance with Section 10.03
- (2) If a Claims Form is submitted to the Administrator by, or on behalf of, a Deceased Individual Class Member but no Estate Representation Claim is submitted to the Administrator in respect of such Deceased Individual Class Member in accordance with Section 13.01(1) within ninety (90) days of the Administrator receiving the Claims Form, the Administrator shall make reasonable efforts to send a notice to the last known address of the Deceased Individual Class Member or the Estate Executor or

Estate Claimant of such Deceased Individual Class Member, as applicable, requiring the submission of an Estate Representation Claim. If no person submits to the Administrator an Estate Representation Claim in respect of a given Deceased Individual Class Member within two (2) years of the Ultimate Claims Deadline, the Claim on behalf of such Deceased Individual Class Member and their estate will be extinguished, the Administrator will have no further obligation to make any payment in respect of such Deceased Individual Class Member or to their estate, and any Claim by or on behalf of such Deceased Individual Class Member and their estate shall be deemed to be released and discharged in accordance with Section 10.03.

- (3) In support of an Estate Representation Claim made pursuant to Section 13.02(1), the Estate Executor or Estate Claimant for the Deceased Individual Class Member, as applicable, shall submit to the Administrator the following evidence that they represent the estate of such Deceased Individual Class Member, in each case in a form acceptable to the Administrator:
- (a) if the Deceased Individual Class Member had a will:
 - (i) a copy of the will appointing the Estate Executor or Estate Claimant, as applicable, to represent the estate of such Deceased Individual Class Member; and
 - (ii) an attestation or declaration signed by the Estate Executor or Estate Claimant, together with one other person who knew the Deceased Individual Class Member personally, confirming that they believe the will to be valid, do not know the will to have been revoked, know of no later will of the Deceased Individual Class Member, and know of no executor, administrator, trustee, or liquidator that has been appointed by a court; or
 - (b) if the Deceased Individual Class Member did not have a will:
 - (i) an attestation or declaration signed by the Estate Executor or Estate Claimant, together with one other person who knew the Deceased Individual Class Member personally, confirming that they do not know such Deceased Individual Class Member to have had a will and that no executor, administrator, trustee, or liquidator has been appointed by a court;
 - (ii) proof of the relationship of such Estate Executor or Estate Claimant, as applicable, to the Deceased Individual Class Member in a form reasonably acceptable to the Administrator;
 - (iii) an attestation or declaration signed by the Estate Executor or Estate Claimant, together with one other person who knew the Deceased Individual Class Member personally:
 - A. confirming that they know of no higher priority heir of such Deceased Individual Class Member in accordance with Section 13.02(4); and
 - B. either:
 - (I) confirming that they know of no equal priority heir of such Deceased Individual Class Member in accordance with Section 13.02(4), or
 - (II) if there is any equal priority heir of such Deceased Individual Class Member in accordance with Section 13.02(4), listing the persons at the same priority level; and
 - (iv) if there are heirs of such Deceased Individual Class Member of equal priority to the Estate Executor or Estate Claimant in accordance with Section 13.02(4), all such persons' signed consent for such Estate Executor or Estate Claimant, as applicable, to act for the estate of such Deceased Individual Class Member.
- (4) For purposes of Section 13.02(3)(b), the priority level of heirs shall follow the provisions of the Indian Act in respect of distribution of property on intestacy, and such priority level of heirs from highest to lowest priority is as follows:
- (a) surviving spouse or common-law partner;
 - (b) children;

- (c) grandchildren;
- (d) parents;
- (e) siblings; and
- (f) children of siblings.

All terms in this Section 13.02(4) used but not defined in this Agreement have the definitions set out in the Indian Act.

13.03 Person Under Disability

If an Individual Class Member who submitted a Claims Form to the Administrator prior to the Claims Deadline, or was identified in a Band Council Confirmation, is or becomes a Person Under Disability prior to their receipt of compensation, and the Administrator is advised that such Individual Class Member is a Person Under Disability prior to paying compensation, the Administrator shall pay the Personal Representative of such Individual Class Member the compensation to which the Individual Class Member would have been entitled under the Claims Process, and if the Administrator is not so advised, the Administrator shall make such payment payable to such Individual Class Member. If an Individual Class Member is or becomes a Person Under Disability prior to submitting a Claims Form to the Administrator, the Personal Representative of the Individual Class Member may submit a Claims Form on behalf of such Individual Class Member prior to the Claims Deadline and the Personal Representative of the Individual Class Member shall be paid the compensation to which the Individual Class Member would have been entitled under the Claims Process.

13.04 Canada, Administrator, Class Counsel, Joint Committee, Third-Party Assessor, Settlement Implementation Committee, and FNAC Held Harmless

Canada and its counsel, the Administrator, Class Counsel, the Joint Committee and its members, the Third-Party Assessor, the Settlement Implementation Committee and its Members, and the FNAC shall be held harmless from any and all claims, counterclaims, suits, actions, causes of action, demands, damages, penalties, injuries, setoffs, judgments, debts, costs, expenses (including legal fees and expenses) or other liabilities of every character whatsoever by reason of or resulting from a payment or non-payment to or on behalf of a Deceased Individual Class Member or a Person Under Disability, or to an Estate Executor, Estate Claimant, estate, or Personal Representative pursuant to this Agreement, and this Agreement shall be a complete defence.

ARTICLE 14 - SETTLEMENT IMPLEMENTATION COMMITTEE

14.01 Settlement Implementation Committee

- (1) There shall be a Settlement Implementation Committee appointed by the Courts consisting of two (2) members of the Joint Committee, two (2) representatives of Canada, and two (2) members of the FNAC, each of whom is herein defined as a "Member" for the purposes of this Agreement. One of the members of the Joint Committee will be appointed as President of the Settlement Implementation Committee.
- (2) The Settlement Implementation Committee shall endeavour to reach consensus. If consensus is not possible, the Settlement Implementation Committee shall decide by majority. If majority cannot be reached, the President shall cast the deciding vote.
- (3) Any of the Members of the Settlement Implementation Committee may be substituted by the Courts or by agreement of the Parties so long as the composition of the Settlement Implementation Committee remains as set out in Section 14.01(1) above.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- (4) The Settlement Implementation Committee is a monitoring body established under this Agreement with the following responsibilities:
 - (a) monitoring the work of the Administrator and the Claims Process;
 - (b) receiving and considering reports from the Administrator, including on administrative costs;
 - (c) giving such directions to the Administrator or the Third-Party Assessor as may, from time to time, be necessary in accordance with the mandate of the Settlement Implementation Committee;
 - (d) receiving and deciding requests for an extension to the Claims Deadline, which extension shall require an order of the Courts;
 - (e) proposing for the Courts' approval such protocols as may be necessary for the implementation of this Agreement;
 - (f) considering Claims Forms referred to it by the Administrator; and
 - (g) addressing any other matter referred to the Settlement Implementation Committee by the Courts or any one of them.
- (5) For greater certainty, the Settlement Implementation Committee has no jurisdiction to consider appeals or applications or similar process from a Claimant or Class Member. No Class Member or other person may apply to the Settlement Implementation Committee for relief of any sort and the Settlement Implementation Committee shall not entertain any such applications or similar process.

14.02 Decisions Are Final and Binding

The decisions of the Settlement Implementation Committee shall be final and binding and shall not be subject to appeal or review.

14.03 Costs of Settlement Implementation Committee

In accordance with Section 3.04(b), Canada shall pay the costs of participation in the Settlement Implementation Committee of Members who are not also members of the Joint Committee. The costs of members of the Joint Committee shall be paid in accordance with Section 15.01(8). Canada shall pay the reasonable disbursements that all Members incur to participate in the Settlement Implementation Committee.

ARTICLE 15 - JOINT COMMITTEE15.1 Joint Committee

- (1) There shall be a Joint Committee of three (3) members recommended by Class Counsel and appointed by the Courts, with such powers, rights, duties and responsibilities as are required to perform its obligations under this Agreement. The Joint Committee shall consist of one (1) Class Counsel representative from Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP and two (2) Class Counsel representatives from McCarthy Tetrault LLP.
- (2) Subject to Section 15.01 (1), on the recommendation of the Joint Committee, or of their own motion, the Courts may substitute any member of the Joint Committee in the best interests of the Class
- (3) The Joint Committee shall make reasonable efforts to reach consensus. If consensus is not possible, the Joint Committee shall decide by majority.
- (4) The Joint Committee shall represent the Class Members and act in the best interests of the Class Members as a whole in performing the functions set out in this Agreement.
- (5) The Joint Committee shall consult with the FNAC and Class Members, or a subset of them, as required by this Agreement or as the Joint Committee considers appropriate.
- (6) The Joint Committee may bring or respond to whatever motions or institute whatever proceedings it considers necessary to advance the interests of Class Members.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- (7) The Joint Committee may divide its work among its members and their law firms, or retain other counsel, in which case the fees and disbursements of such other counsel, together with applicable taxes, shall be a disbursement of the Joint Committee.
- (8) The Joint Committee's fees and reasonable disbursements shall be paid in accordance with Section 18.02, unless there are insufficient Funds Held in Trust for Ongoing Fees, in which case the Administrator shall pay the Joint Committee's fees and reasonable disbursements from the Trust Fund on approval by the Courts.
- (9) If any member of the Joint Committee believes that the majority of the Joint Committee has taken a decision that is not in the best interest of the Class, that member may refer the decision to confidential and binding arbitration to determine, on a balance of probabilities, whether the majority's decision is not in the best interest of the Class, with a determination to be rendered expeditiously and summarily, and without a right of appeal. If the members of the Joint Committee cannot agree on an arbitrator, they may ask the Courts to appoint one. The costs of the arbitration shall be a disbursement of the Joint Committee.
- (10) The Joint Committee shall meet quarterly, or more frequently as required.

ARTICLE 16 - TRUSTEE AND TRUST16.01 Trust

No later than thirty (30) days following the appointment by the Courts of the Trustee, Canada will settle a single trust (the "Safe Drinking Water Trust") with ten dollars ($10), to be held by the Trustee in accordance with the terms of this Agreement.

16.02 Trustee

On the recommendation of the Joint Committee, the Courts will appoint the Trustee to act as the trustee of the Safe Drinking Water Trust, with such powers, rights, duties and responsibilities as the Courts direct. Without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the duties and responsibilities of the Trustee will include:

- (a) to hold each of the Trust Fund, the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund and the First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund (each, a "Fund") in the Safe Drinking Water Trust;
- (b) if the Trustee determines that it is in the best interests of Class Members, to invest the funds of each Fund (or any of them) with a view to achieving a maximum rate of return without material risk of loss, having regard to the ability of the Safe Drinking Water Trust and each Fund to meet its financial obligations;
- (c) to provide such amounts from the Safe Drinking Water Trust to the Administrator and any other person described in Section 3.04 and Section 15.01(8), as required from time to time in order to give effect to any provision of this Agreement, including the payment of Individual Damages, Specified Injuries Compensation, and First Nation Damages;
- (d) to engage the services of professionals to assist in fulfilling the Trustee's duties;
- (e) to exercise the care, diligence and skill that a reasonably prudent person would exercise in comparable circumstances;
- (f) to keep such books, records and accounts as are necessary or appropriate to document the assets held in the Safe Drinking Water Trust and each Fund, and each transaction of the Safe Drinking Water Trust and each Fund;
- (g) to take all reasonable steps and actions required under the Income Tax Act as set out in the Agreement;
- (h) to report to the Administrator and Canada and the Joint Committee on a quarterly basis the assets held in the Safe Drinking Water Trust and each Fund at the end of each such quarter, or on an interim basis if so requested; and

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- (i) to do such other acts and things as are incidental to the foregoing, and to exercise all powers that are necessary or useful to carry on the activities of the Safe Drinking Water Trust or to carry out the provisions of this Agreement.

16.03 Trustee Fees

Canada shall pay the fees, disbursements and other costs of the Trustee in accordance with Section 3.04(b).

16.04 Nature of the Safe Drinking Water Trust

The Safe Drinking Water Trust will be established for the following purposes:

- (a) to acquire the applicable funds payable by Canada;
- (b) to hold the Trust Fund, the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund and the First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund, as separate funds in the Safe Drinking Water Trust;
- (c) to make any necessary disbursements;
- (d) to invest cash in investments in the best interests of Class Members, as provided in this Agreement; and
- (e) to do such other acts and things as are incidental to the foregoing, and to exercise all powers that are necessary or useful to carry out the provisions of this Agreement.

16.05 Legal Entitlements

The legal ownership of the assets of the Safe Drinking Water Trust, including each Fund, and the right to conduct the activities of the Safe Drinking Water Trust, including the activities with respect to each Fund, will be, subject to the specific limitations and other terms contained herein, vested exclusively in the Trustee, and the Class Members and other beneficiaries of the Safe Drinking Water Trust have no right to compel or call for any partition, division or distribution of any of the assets of the Safe Drinking Water Trust except in an action to enforce the provisions of this Agreement. No Class Member or any other beneficiary of the Safe Drinking Water Trust will have or is deemed to have any right of ownership in any of the assets of the Safe Drinking Water Trust.

16.06 Records

The Trustee shall keep such books, records and accounts as are necessary or appropriate to document the assets of the Safe Drinking Water Trust and each transaction of the Safe Drinking Water Trust. Without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the Trustee shall keep, at its principal office, records of all transactions of the Safe Drinking Water Trust and a list of the assets held in trust, including each Fund, and a record of each Fund's account balance from time to time.

16.07 Quarterly Reporting

The Trustee shall deliver to the Administrator, Canada and the Joint Committee, within thirty (30) days after the end of each calendar quarter, a quarterly report setting forth the assets held as at the end of such quarter in the Safe Drinking Water Trust and each Fund (including the term, interest rate or yield and maturity date thereof) and a record of the Safe Drinking Water Trust's account balance during such quarter.

16.08 Annual Reporting

The Auditors shall deliver to the Administrator, the Trustee, Canada, the Joint Committee, and the Courts, within sixty (60) days after the end of each anniversary of the date that the Safe Drinking Water Trust was funded, which date shall be the fiscal year-end for the Safe Drinking Water Trust:

- (a) the audited financial statements of the Safe Drinking Water Trust, segmented by each Fund, for the most recently completed fiscal year, together with the report of the Auditors thereon; and

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- (b) a report setting forth a summary of the assets held in trust as at the end of the fiscal year for each Fund and the disbursements made by the Safe Drinking Water Trust during the preceding fiscal year.

16.09 Method of Payment

The Trustee shall have sole discretion to determine whether any amount paid or payable out of the Safe Drinking Water Trust is paid or payable out of the income of the Safe Drinking Water Trust or the capital of the Safe Drinking Water Trust.

16.10 Additions to Capital

Any income of the Safe Drinking Water Trust not paid out in a fiscal year will at the end of such fiscal year be added to the capital of the Safe Drinking Water Trust.

16.11 Tax Elections

For each taxation year of the Safe Drinking Water Trust, the Trustee shall file any available elections and designations under the Income Tax Act and equivalent provisions of the income tax act of any province or territory and take any other reasonable steps such that the Safe Drinking Water Trust and no other person is liable to taxation on the income of the Safe Drinking Water Trust, including the filing of an election under subsection 104(13.1) of the Income Tax Act and equivalent provisions of the Income tax act of any province or territory for each taxation year of the Safe Drinking Water Trust and the amount to be specified under such election will be the maximum allowable under the Income Tax Act or the income tax act of any province or territory, as the case may be.

16.12 Canadian Income Tax

- (1) Canada shall make best efforts to exempt any income earned by the Safe Drinking Water Trust from federal taxation, and Canada shall have regard to the measures that it took in similar circumstances for the class action settlements addressed in section 81 (g.3) of the Income Tax Act.
- (2) The Parties agree that the payments to Class Members are in the nature of personal injury damages and are not taxable income and Canada shall make best efforts to obtain an advance ruling to this effect, or failing that a technical interpretation to the same effect, in either case from the Income Tax Rulings Directorate of the Canada Revenue Agency.

16.13 Investment Advisors

On request of the Trustee, the Joint Committee may ask the Courts to appoint investment advisors to provide the Trustee with advice on the investment of the funds held in each Fund of the Safe Drinking Water Trust. The Trustee shall pay the reasonable fees of any investment advisors out of the applicable Fund of the Safe Drinking Water Trust.

ARTICLE 17 - AUDITORS17.01 Appointment of Auditors

On the recommendation of the Joint Committee, the Courts shall appoint Auditors with such powers, rights, duties and responsibilities as the Courts direct. On the recommendation of the Parties, or of their own motion, the Courts may replace the Auditors at any time. Without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the duties and responsibilities of the Auditors will include:

- (a) to audit the accounts for the Safe Drinking Water Trust in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards on an annual basis;
- (b) to provide the reporting set out in Section 16.08; and
- (c) to file the financial statements of the Safe Drinking Water Trust together with the Auditors' report thereon with the Courts and deliver a copy thereof to Canada, the Joint Committee, the

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

Administrator, and the Trustee within sixty (60) days after the end of each financial year of the Safe Drinking Water Trust.

17.02 Payment of Auditors

Canada shall pay the reasonable fees, disbursements and other costs of the Auditors in accordance with Section 3.04(b).

ARTICLE 18 - LEGAL FEES18.01 Class Counsel Fees

Subject to approval by the Courts, and within sixty (60) days of the Implementation Date, Canada shall pay Class Counsel the amount of fifty-three million dollars ($53,000,000), plus applicable taxes, in respect of their legal fees and disbursements for the prosecution of the Actions to the date of the Settlement Approval Hearing, together with advice to Class Members regarding the Agreement and Acceptance.

18.02 Ongoing Fees

- (1) Subject to approval by the Courts, within sixty (60) days after the Implementation Date, Canada shall pay to Class Counsel the additional sum of five million dollars ($5 million), plus applicable taxes, in trust ("Funds Held in Trust for Ongoing Fees ") for fees and disbursements for services to be rendered by Class Counsel and the Joint Committee in accordance with this Agreement, including the implementation and administration of this Agreement, for a period of four (4) years after the Settlement Approval Hearing ("Ongoing Fees").
- (2) Class Counsel shall maintain appropriate records and seek Court approval for payment of the Ongoing Fees from the Funds Held in Trust for Ongoing Fees.
- (3) Class Counsel shall report the balance of the Funds Held in Trust for Ongoing Fees to the Courts and Canada on a semi-annual basis.
- (4) Class Counsel shall apply to the Courts for orders directing the payment of any Funds Held in Trust for Ongoing Fees that remain in trust four (4) years after the Settlement Approval Hearing.

18.03 Ongoing Legal Services

- (1) Class Counsel shall divide the work of providing ongoing legal services to Class Members among themselves, or otherwise as directed by the Joint Committee.
- (2) To the extent that Class Counsel's fees, disbursements, and applicable taxes are paid pursuant to Section 18.01 or Section 18.02, they shall not charge Class Members any additional amounts for legal services rendered in accordance with this Agreement.
- (3) Following the Implementation Date, responsibility for representing the interests of the Class as a whole (as distinct from assisting a particular Class Member or Class Members, as reasonably requested) will pass from Class Counsel to the Joint Committee, and Class Counsel shall have no further obligations in that regard.
- (4) For greater certainty, the Joint Committee and its members, and counsel appointed by the Joint Committee, shall be paid their fees, applicable taxes, and disbursements in accordance with Section 15.01(8).
- (5) Neither Class Counsel nor the Joint Committee will be responsible for representing First Nation Class Members in the Commitment Dispute Resolution Process unless they are separately retained for that purpose, in which case they may represent First Nation Class Members in the Commitment Dispute Resolution Process, but their fees will not be paid pursuant to Section 18.01 or Section 18.02.

18.04 Choice of Counsel

Nothing in this Agreement prevents a Class Member from retaining separate counsel, other than Class Counsel, at their own cost. However, no such separate counsel shall be entitled to any payment under this Article 18 . Furthermore, no such separate counsel shall be entitled to receive any payment of any kind from any Class Member in connection with this Agreement, whether direct or indirect, unless the payment is approved by the Courts.

ARTICLE 19 - GENERAL DISPUTE RESOLUTION

19.01 Initial Referral to Third-Party Assessor

- (1) Subject to Section 19.03, where a dispute arises regarding any right or obligation under this Agreement except a dispute regarding the Claims Process or a dispute to which Section 9.07 applies (each such dispute other than a dispute regarding the Claims Process or a dispute to which Section 9.07 applies, a "Dispute"), the parties to the Dispute shall meet and make reasonable, good-faith efforts to resolve the Dispute within thirty (30) days.
- (2) If a Dispute cannot be resolved within thirty (30) days, Canada, the Joint Committee, or any Class Member may refer the Dispute to the Third-Party Assessor.
- (3) The Third-Party Assessor shall decide the referred Dispute summarily and issue written reasons.

19.02 Subsequent Referral to the Courts

- (1) Canada and the Joint Committee may appeal a decision rendered under Section 19.01(3) to the Courts, and the Courts shall review the decision of the Third-Party Assessor on a standard of reasonableness.
- (2) A decision of the Courts may be appealed in accordance with the rules of each Court.

19.03 Claims Process Decisions and Remediation Plans Excluded

For greater certainty, Article 19 shall not apply to disputes regarding the Claims Process, including eligibility for membership in the Class and the compensation due to any Class Member, or in respect of a Remediation Plan, including its content or Canada's compliance, and any such disputes shall be resolved in accordance with this Agreement.

ARTICLE 20 - TERMINATION AND OTHER CONDITIONS

20.01 Termination of Agreement

- (1) Except as set forth in Section 20.01(2), this Agreement shall continue in full force and effect until all obligations under this Agreement are fulfilled.
- (2) Notwithstanding any other provision in the Agreement:
 - (a) the Commitment shall survive the termination of this Agreement and shall continue in force, together with Section 9.06, Section 9.07, and Section 9.08 and the Commitment Dispute Resolution Process; and
 - (b) Section 10.02 and Section 10.03 shall survive the termination of this Agreement; and
 - (c) Article 21 shall survive the termination of this Agreement.

20.02 Amendments

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

Except as expressly provided in this Agreement, no amendment may be made to this Agreement unless agreed to by the Parties in writing, and if the Courts have issued the Settlement Approval Orders, then any amendment shall only be effective once approved by the Courts.

20.03 No Assignment

- (1) No amount payable under this Agreement can be assigned and any such assignment is null and void except as expressly provided for in this Agreement.
- (2) Subject to Section 20.03(3) and Section 18.04, any payment to which a Claimant is entitled will be made to such Claimant in accordance with the direction that such Claimant provides to the Administrator unless a court of competent jurisdiction has ordered otherwise.
- (3) Any payments in respect of a Deceased Individual Class Member or a Person Under Disability will be made in accordance with Article 13 .

ARTICLE 21 - CONFIDENTIALITY21.01 Confidentiality

Any information provided, created or obtained in the course of implementing this Agreement will be kept confidential and will not be used for any purpose other than this Agreement unless otherwise agreed by the Parties.

21.02 Destruction of Class Member Information and Records

Two (2) years after completing the payment of Individual Damages, Specified Injuries Compensation, and First Nation Damages, the Administrator shall destroy all Class Member information and documentation in its possession, unless a Class Member or their Estate Executor or Estate Claimant specifically requests the return of such information within the two (2)-year period. Upon receipt of such request, the Administrator shall forward the Class Member information as directed. Before destroying any information or documentation in accordance with this Section, the Administrator shall prepare an anonymized statistical analysis of the Class in accordance with Section 39 of the Claims Process.

21.03 Confidentiality of Negotiations

Save as may otherwise be agreed between the Parties, the undertaking of confidentiality as to the discussions and all communications, whether written or oral, made in and surrounding the negotiations leading to the Agreement in Principle and this Agreement continues in force.

ARTICLE 22 - COOPERATION22.01 Cooperation on Settlement Approval and Implementation

Upon execution of this Agreement, the Representative Plaintiffs in the Actions, Class Counsel and Canada shall make best efforts to obtain approval of this Agreement by the Courts and to support and facilitate participation of Class Members in all aspects of this Agreement. If this Agreement is not approved by the Courts, the Parties shall negotiate in good faith to cure any defects identified by the Courts.

22.02 Public Announcements

Upon the issuance of the Settlement Approval Orders, the Parties shall release a joint public statement announcing the settlement in a form to be agreed by the Parties and, at a mutually agreed time, will make public announcements in support of this Agreement. The Parties will continue to speak publicly in favour of the Agreement as reasonably requested by any Party.

1.03 Trust Fund

- (1) As soon as practicable after its appointment, the Administrator shall establish an interest-bearing trust account at a Schedule I Canadian Bank (the "Trust Account"),
- (2) Canada shall settle the Trust Fund by paying one billion four-hundred and thirty- eight million dollars ($1,438,000,000) into the Trust Account within sixty (60) days of the date on which the orders approving the Settlement Agreement become final, including any appeals.
- (3) If Class Counsel, on the advice of an expert actuary, determine that there are unallocated funds in the Trust Fund (the "Surplus"), those funds shall be distributed for the direct or indirect benefit of the Class.
- (4) Class Counsel, with the guidance of Class Members or a representative committee thereof, shall propose an allocation of the Surplus, which may include the following:
 - (i) Transfer of up to four hundred million dollars ($400,000,000) to the First Nation Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund;

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- (ii) Increased Individual Damages or First Nation Damages;
 - (iii) Individual Damages or First Nation Damages for late claimants who filed valid claims after the Claims Deadline;
 - (iv) Specified Injuries Compensation if the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund was insufficient to pay the Specified Injuries Compensation for all valid claims; or
 - (v) Programming to promote education, cultural or spiritual practices, study, or healing in connection with Long-Term Drinking Water Advisories.
- (b) Class Counsel shall bring motions for directions in the Courts for approval of the proposed distribution of the Surplus.
- (5) For greater certainty, there shall be no reversion to Canada from the Trust Fund and Canada shall not be an eligible recipient of the Surplus.

1.04 First Nation Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund

- (1) The Parties acknowledge the importance of providing First Nations with funds for use on projects related to water and wastewater, economic development, and cultural activities. The Parties respect the autonomy of First Nations to choose the use to which funds are directed.
- (2) As soon as practicable after its appointment, the Administrator shall establish an interest-bearing trust account at a Schedule I Canadian Bank (the "Restoration Fund Account").
- (3) Canada shall fund the First Nation Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund by paying four-hundred million dollars ($400,000,000) into the Restoration Fund Account within sixty (60) days of the date on which the orders approving the Settlement Agreement become final, including any appeals.
- (4) If funds remain in the Restoration Fund Account after the Claims Deadline has passed and the Administrator has paid all of the First Nation Damages (the "Excess Funds"), those funds shall be distributed for the direct or indirect benefit of the Class.
- (5) Class Counsel, with the guidance of Class Members, shall propose an allocation of the Excess Funds, which may include the following:
 - (i) Enhanced Individual Damages or First Nation Damages;
 - (ii) Individual Damages or First Nation Damages for late claimants who filed valid claims after the Claims Deadline;
 - (iii) Specified Injuries Compensation if the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund was insufficient to pay the Specified Injuries Compensation for all valid claims; or
 - (iv) Programming to promote education, cultural or spiritual practices, study, or healing in connection with Long-Term Drinking Water Advisories.
- (b) Class Counsel shall bring motions for directions in the Courts for approval of the proposed distribution of the Excess Funds.
- (6) There shall be no reversion to Canada from the First Nation Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund and Canada shall not be an eligible recipient of the Excess Funds.

1.05 Eligibility

- (1) The Administrator shall review each Claim Form, Band Council Confirmation, or such other information as the Administrator considers relevant, to identify eligible Individual Class Members (the "Eligibility Decision"). The Administrator shall issue written reasons when it determines that a claimant is not a Class Member,
- (2) Within thirty (30) days of the receipt of an Eligibility Decision denying membership in the Class, the claimant and any Party may appeal the Eligibility Decision.

- (3) The procedure for an appeal from an Eligibility Decision shall be decided by the Parties.

ARTICLE 2 RETROSPECTIVE

COMPENSATION

2.01 Calculation of Individual Class Member damages

- (1) The Administrator shall calculate Individual Class Members' damages in accordance with the information set out in a valid Claim Form, Band Council Confirmation, or such other information as the Administrator considers relevant, pursuant to the formula set out below (the "individual Damages Formula").
- (2) Individual Class Members shall be paid damages ("Individual Damages") for:
 - (a) If the Individual Class Member had not yet reached the age of 18 on November 20, 2013, every year during the Class Period that they were ordinarily resident on a Reserve while a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory was in effect; or
 - (b) If the Individual Class Member had reached the age of 18 before November 20, 2013, every year from November 20, 2013 to the end of the Class Period that they were ordinarily resident on a Reserve while a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory was in effect. .
- (3) Individual Damages shall be paid at approximately the following rates, with the actual rates to be determined by Class Counsel on the advice of an expert actuary:
 - (a) One-thousand three-hundred dollars ($1,300) per year for a Boil Water Advisory that is not in a Remote First Nation;
 - (b) One-thousand six-hundred and fifty ($1,650) per year for a Do Not Consume Advisory that is not in a Remote First Nation;
 - (c) Two-thousand dollars ($2,000) per year for a Do Not Use Advisory that is not in a Remote First Nation; and
 - (d) Two-thousand dollars ($2,000) per year for any Drinking Water Advisory in a Remote First Nation.
- (4) individual Damages shall be paid pro rata for any portion of a year for which they are due.

2.02 Payment of individual Class Member Damages

- (1) Within a reasonable period to be determined by the Parties in consultation with the Administrator, the Administrator shall pay each individual Class Member the Individual Damages from the Trust Fund in accordance with the Individual Damages Formula.

2.03 Specified Injuries Compensation Fund

- (1) In addition to Individual Damages, Individual Class Members may indicate on their Claim Form that they claims damages for specified medical conditions that were caused by a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory on a Reserve where they were ordinarily resident ("Specified Injuries"). For greater certainty, the claimant must establish that the injury was caused by using water, other than source water, in accordance with a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory or by a lack of clean water during a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory.
- (2) The Parties shall determine the list of Specified Injuries, together with the compensation for each Specified Injury (the "Specified Injuries Compensation").
- (3) The Administrator shall establish an interest-bearing trust account at a Schedule Canadian Bank (the "Specified Injuries Compensation Account").

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- (4) Canada shall settle the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund by paying fifty million dollars ($50,000,000) into the Specified Injuries Compensation Account within sixty (60) days of the date on which the orders approving the Settlement Agreement become final, including any appeals.
- (5) The Parties shall agree upon:
 - (a) The means of proving a Specified injury in a non-adversarial, culturally sensitive manner that is designed so as not to re-traumatize claimants;
 - (b) Appropriate timelines for the Administrator to determine the validity of a Specified Injuries Compensation claim (a "Specified Injuries Decision"); and
 - (c) An appropriate appeal mechanism and timeline;
- (6) Class Counsel shall assist Individual Class Members or their representatives, as requested, in making a claim for Specified Injuries Compensation or in appealing a Specified Injuries Decision at no cost to Canada or the Individual Class Member,
- (7) Within ninety (90) days following the Claims Deadline, the Administrator shall determine whether there are sufficient funds in the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund to pay the Specified Injuries Compensation for each valid claim.
 - (a) If there are sufficient funds in the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund, the Administrator shall pay Individual Class Members their Specified Injuries Compensation; or
 - (b) If there are insufficient funds in the Specified injuries Compensation Fund, the Administrator shall pay Individual Class Members their pro rata share of the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund, in proportion to the Specified Injuries Compensation that they would be due,
- (8) There shall be no reversion to Canada from the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund.
- (9) If any funds remain in the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund after paying all of the claims for Specified Injuries Compensation, the Administrator shall pay such funds into the Trust Fund.

2.4 Calculation of First Nation Class Member Damages

- (1) The Administrator shall calculate First Nation Class Members' damages pursuant to the formula set out below (the "First Nation Damages Formula").
- (2) Each First Nation Class Member shall be paid a base payment of five-hundred thousand dollars ($500,000) (the "Base Payment"),
- (3) In addition to the Base Payment, First Nations shall be paid an amount equal to fifty percent (50%) of the Individual Damages paid to Individual Class Members in respect of Drinking Water Advisories on the First Nation Class Member's Reserve or Reserves ("First Nation Damages"),

2.05 Payment of First Nation Class Member Damages

- (1) The Administrator shall pay the Base Payment and the First Nation Damages from the First Nation Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund,
- (2) The Administrator shall pay the Base Payment to every First Nation Class Member within ninety (90) days of the later of the approval of the Settlement Agreement by the Courts, including all appeals, and a First Nation Class Member giving notice of Acceptance to Class Counsel.
- (3) Every six (6) months after the Base Payment is made pursuant to Section 2.05(2) the Administrator shall pay the First Nation Class Member the First Nation Damages that have accrued to date.

2.06 No provision for continued damages

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- (1) The Agreement makes no provision for any damages that may accrue to Class Members in respect of Long-Term Drinking Water Advisories that begin or continue after June 20, 2021, and Class Members shall not release any claims to any such future damages.

2.07 Canada's Liability

- (1) The Parties specifically agree that upon making the payments contemplated in the Settlement Agreement, Canada's liability to Individual Class Members and First Nation Class Members that have accepted the Settlement Agreement for damages to June 20, 2021, arising from Canada's failure to provide clean drinking water is at an end.
- (2) The Parties shall agree on specific release language for the Settlement Agreement.

ARTICLE 3 PROSPECTIVE RELIEF

3.01 Action Plan for First Nation Class Members to be implemented

- (1) Canada shall make all reasonable efforts to support the removal of Long-Term Drinking Water Advisories that affect Class Members, including by taking the steps set out in the Action Plan, within the Project timeframes set out therein.
- (2) The Action Plan may be amended on consent of the Parties, in addition to being regularly updated by Canada as progress is made.
- (3) Nothing in the Agreement bars Canada from taking additional measures to benefit Class Members, which measures are not contemplated in the Action Plan.

3.02 Commitment to additional measures

- (1) In addition to the Action Plan, the Defendant shall make all reasonable efforts to ensure that Individual Class Members living on Reserves have regular access to drinking water in their homes, whether from a public water system or a private water system approved by a Band Council Resolution, including on-site systems, that meets the stricter of the federal requirements or provincial standards governing residential water quality (the "Commitment"). For the sake of greater certainty:
 - (a) regular access shall permit all usual and necessary uses of water in a similarly situated Canadian home, including but not limited to drinking water, bathing and personal hygiene, food preparation and dish washing, sanitation, and laundry;
 - (b) the Commitment is limited to Canada's reasonable efforts, including the provision of actual cost funding, training, planning, and technical assistance;
 - (c) if, despite Canada's reasonable efforts, regular access cannot be achieved, Canada is not required to warranty regular access in an Individual Class Member's home; and,
 - (d) Factors that may be considered in any determination of reasonable efforts include, but are not limited to:
 - (i) the views of the First Nation;
 - (ii) any federal requirements or provincial standards and protocols relating to water;
 - (iii) whether monitoring and testing are performed on the water system; and
 - (iv) the physical location of the home, including proximity to centralized water systems and remoteness.
- (2) Canada shall spend at least six billion dollars ($6,000,000,000) through 2030 as contemplated by Indigenous Services Canada's Main Estimates, at a rate of at least four hundred million dollars ($400,000,000) per year, to meet the Commitment by funding the actual cost of construction, upgrading, operation, and maintenance of water infrastructure on reserve for First Nations ("Commitment Expenditures").

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- (a) Canada shall provide Class Counsel with an annual statement of all Commitment Expenditures through 2030.
- (b) Upon request, Canada shall provide any First Nation Class Member with a statement of the Commitment Expenditures that it has received.

3.03 Repeal and replacement of Safe Drinking Water for First Nations Act

- (1) Canada shall make all reasonable efforts to introduce legislation repealing the Safe Drinking Water for First Nations Act, S.C. 2013, c. 21 (the "SDWFNA") on or before March 31, 2022.
- (2) Canada shall make all reasonable efforts to develop and introduce replacement legislation for the SDWFNA ("Replacement Legislation"), in consultation with First Nations, and to introduce this legislation by December 31, 2022.
- (3) The objectives of the Replacement Legislation shall be;
 - (a) Ensure sustainable First Nation Water Systems, premised upon:
 - (i) Defining minimum standards of water quality for First Nation Water Systems, with reference to standards that are directly applicable to First Nation communities, and;
 - (ii) Defining minimum capacity standards for the delivery of water to First Nation communities, in terms of volume per individual community member;
 - (b) Create a transparent approach to building, improving, and providing drinking water and wastewater services for First Nations;
 - (c) Confirm adequate and sustainable funding for First Nation Water and Wastewater Systems; and,
 - (d) Support the voluntary assumption of water and wastewater infrastructure by First Nations.
- (4) Notwithstanding Canada's commitment to introduce the Replacement Legislation, Canada shall support the development of First Nations governance initiatives as described in Article 3.04, below.

3.04 First Nations Advisory Committee

- (1) Canada shall provide twenty million dollars ($20,000,000) in funding through the 2025/2026 Fiscal Year for the creation of the First Nations Advisory Committee on Safe Drinking Water ("FNAC").
- (2) The FNAC's membership shall reflect Canada's diversity of First Nation Class Member communities, languages, genders, geographies, skills, expertise, and experience with water insecurity.
- (3) The primary functions of the FNAC shall be to:
 - (a) Work with First Nation Class Members to provide oversight, guidance, and recommendations to Indigenous Services Canada to support the development and implementation of forward-looking policy initiatives, including, without limitation:
 - (i) The development of Indigenous Services Canada's Long Term Strategy for Water and Wastewater on First Nation Class Member's Reserves;
 - (ii) The development of the Replacement Legislation.
 - (b) Contribute strategic advice and perspectives to Indigenous Services Canada in order to advance the long-term sustainability of safe drinking water in First Nation communities; and,
 - (c) Support the identification and prioritization of funding for water and wastewater in First Nations communities.
- (4) The terms of reference for the FNAC shall be developed jointly by the Parties.

3.05 First Nations governance initiatives

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- (1) Canada shall make available nine million dollars ($9,000,000) in funding for First Nations to pursue governance initiatives and by-law development through the 2025/2026 Fiscal Year (the "Water Governance Fund").
- (2) The funding for the Water Governance Fund shall continue through the stated period, regardless of whether the Replacement Legislation is enacted within the anticipated time frame or at all.
- (3) The Water Governance Fund shall assist First Nation Class Members that wish to develop their own water-related governance initiatives, including for research, technical advice, by-law drafting, and the implementation of pilot projects in First Nation communities.
- (4) The terms of reference for the Water Governance Fund shall be developed jointly by the Parties.

3.06 Agreement on required measures

- (1) Canada shall promptly consult with each First Nation Class Member that gives notice to Canada that the Commitment is not met or ceases to be met (each an "Underserviced First Nation") with a view to meeting the Commitment.
- (2) Canada shall make all reasonable efforts to reach an agreement with the Underserviced First Nation detailing the steps that are required to meet the Commitment (a "Remediation Agreement"),
- (3) Canada and the Underserviced First Nation shall comply with the Remediation Agreement.

3.07 Dispute resolution for required measures

- (1) If Canada fails to reach a Remediation Agreement with an Underserviced First Nation after six (6) months, Canada and the Underserviced First Nation shall each submit their proposed form of Remediation Agreement to a dispute resolution process (the "Commitment Dispute Resolution Process").
- (2) The Commitment Dispute Resolution Process shall be developed jointly by the Parties, and it shall incorporate Indigenous dispute resolution practices.

HIS OWN BEHALF AND ON BEHALF OF ALL MEMBERS OF NESKANTAGA FIRST NATION

Plaintiffs

and

ATTORNEY GENERAL OF CANADA

Defendant

ORDER

THIS MOTION for certification, brought by the Plaintiffs, was heard on September 16, 2020.

ON READING the motion record of the Plaintiffs and the consent of the Defendant.

1. THIS COURT ORDERS that this action be and is hereby certified as a class proceeding pursuant to the Federal Courts Rules, 334.16 and 334.17.

2. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that the Class is defined as:

(a) All persons other than Excluded Persons who:

(i) are members of a band, as defined in subsection 2(1) of the Indian Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 1-5 ("First Nation"), the disposition of whose lands is subject to that Act or the First Nations Land Management Act, S.C. 1999, c. 24 ("First Nations Lands"), and whose First Nations Lands were subject to a drinking water advisory (whether a boil water, do not consume, or do not use advisory, or the like) that lasted at least one year from November 20, 1995 to present ("Impacted First Nations");

(ii) had not died before November 20, 2017; and

(iii) ordinarily resided in an Impacted First Nation while it was subject to a drinking water advisory that lasted at least one year; and

(b) Curve Lake First Nation, Neskantaga First Nation, and any other Impacted First Nation that elects to join this action in a representative capacity ("Participating Nations").

"Excluded Persons" are members of Tsuu T'ina Nation, Sucker Creek First Nation, Ermineskin Cree Nation, the Blood Tribe, and the Okanagan Indian Band, and Michael Darryl Isnardy.

3. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that until the claims asserted in this class proceeding are fully and finally decided, settled, discontinued, or abandoned, including the exhaustion of all rights of appeal, leave of the Court is required to commence any other proceeding on behalf of any member of the Class in respect of the claims asserted in this action, save and except for proceedings commenced on behalf of those members of the Class who opt out of this class proceeding in the manner prescribed below.

4. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that the following common issues be and are hereby certified for resolution on behalf of the Class as a whole:

(a) From November 20, 1995 to the present, did the Defendant owe a duty or an obligation to Class members to take reasonable measures to provide them with, or ensure they were provided with, or refrain from barring, adequate access to water that is safe for human use?

5. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that a sub-group be and is hereby recognized for the members of each Impacted First Nation, and the First Nation itself, if it is a Participating Nation;

6. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that the following common issues be and are hereby certified for resolution on behalf of each sub-group:

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

(a) If the answer to common issue 4(a) is "yes", did Canada breach its duties or obligations to members of the sub-group?

(b) If the answer to common issue 6(a) is yes, is any breach of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms ("Charter") saved by s. 1 of the Charter?

(c) If the answer to common issue 6(a) is yes, did the Defendant's breach cause a substantial and unreasonable interference with Class members' or their First Nations' use and enjoyment of their lands?

(d) If the answer to common issue 6(a) is "yes" and the answer to common issue 6(b) is "no", are damages available to members of the sub-group under s. 24(1) of the Charter?

(e) Can the causation of any damages suffered by members of the sub-group be determined as a common issue?

(f) Can the Court make an aggregate assessment of all or part of any damages suffered by members of the sub-group?

(g) Does the Defendant's conduct justify an award of punitive damages, and if so, in what amount?

(h) Should the Court order that the Defendant take measures to provide or ensure that members of the sub-group are provided with, or refrain from barring, adequate access to clean tap water?

(i) If so, what measures should be ordered?

7. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that Chief Emily Whetung, Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Christopher Moonias, and Neskantaga First Nation are hereby appointed as Representative Plaintiffs for the Class.
8. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that McCarthy Tetrault LLP and Olthuis Kleer Townshend are hereby appointed as class counsel ("Class Counsel").
9. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that the Plaintiffs and the Defendant shall make reasonable efforts to agree on the appointment of an administrator for the purpose of giving notice of the certification of this class proceeding (the "Administrator"). The Parties shall advise the Court of the appointment of the Administrator within sixty (60) days of the date of this Order, failing which the Court shall appoint an appropriately qualified Administrator.
10. THIS COURT ORDERS that class members shall be notified that this action has been certified as a class proceeding as follows, which shall be and is hereby deemed adequate notice:
 - (a) by posting the Short Form Notice set out in Schedule "A" and Long Form Notice set out in Schedule "B", and the French language translations of these documents, as agreed upon by the parties, on the respective websites of Class Counsel, the Defendant, and the Administrator;
 - (b) by the Administrator publishing the Short Form Notice in the newspapers set out in Schedule "C" attached hereto, in 1/4 of a page size in the weekend edition of each newspaper, if possible;
 - (c) by the Administrator distributing the Short Form Notice to all offices of Curve Lake First Nation, Neskantaga First Nation, and the Assembly of First Nations;
 - (d) by the Administrator forwarding the Short Form Notice and Long Form Notice to any Class member who requests them;
 - (e) by the Administrator forwarding the Short Form Notice and Long Form Notice to the Chiefs of every Impacted First Nation identified in accordance with paragraph 12, below, except for Excluded Persons;
 - (f) by the Administrator forwarding the Short Form Notice and Long Form Notice to the band office or similar office of every Impacted First Nation identified in accordance with paragraph 12, below, except for Excluded Persons, together with a request that they be posted in a prominent place;

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

(g) by the Administrator establishing a national toll-free support line, to provide assistance to Class members, family, guardians, or other persons who make inquiries on their own behalf or on behalf of Class members.

11. THIS COURT ORDERS that the Defendant shall be responsible for the cost of giving notice of the certification of a class proceeding as set out in paragraph 10, above.
12. THIS COURT ORDERS that within 30 days of the date of this Order, the Plaintiffs and the Defendant shall exchange a list setting out their best information on the names of the First Nations that are eligible to opt into the Class, and taken together these lists shall constitute the means of identifying the First Nations that are entitled to direct notice for the purpose of paragraphs 10(e) and 10(f), above.
13. THIS COURT ORDERS that a class member may opt out of this class proceeding by delivering a signed opt-out coupon, a form of which is attached as Schedule "D", or some other legible signed request to opt out, within one-hundred-and-twenty (120) days of the date on which notice is first published in accordance with paragraph 10(b), above (the "Opt Out Deadline"), to the Administrator. The Short Form Notice and Long Form Notice shall state the Opt Out Deadline and the address of the Administrator for the purpose of receiving opt-out coupons.
14. THIS COURT ORDERS that no Class Member may opt out of this class proceeding after the Opt Out Deadline, except with leave of the Court.
15. THIS COURT ORDERS that the Administrator shall serve on the parties and file with the Court, within sixty (60) days of the expiry of the Opt Out Deadline, an affidavit listing all persons who have opted out of the class proceeding, if any.
16. THIS COURT ORDERS that any Impacted First Nation may opt into this class proceeding by retaining Class Counsel no fewer than one-hundred-and-twenty (120) days before the disposition of any of the common issues (the "Opt In Deadline"), to Class Counsel, at the address set out in paragraph 11, above.
17. THIS COURT ORDERS that no Class member may opt into this class proceeding after the Opt In Deadline, except with leave of the Court.
18. THIS COURT ORDERS that Class Counsel shall serve on the parties and file with the Court, within sixty (30) days of the expiry of the Opt In Deadline, a list of all the Impacted First Nations that have opted into the class proceeding.
19. THIS COURT DECLARES that the Litigation Plan attached hereto as Appendix 1 is a workable method of advancing the class proceeding on behalf of the Class.
20. THIS COURT ORDERS that each party shall bear its own costs of the within motion for certification of this class proceeding.

Legal Notice

Are You a Member of a First Nation
That Has Been Subject To A Long-Term
Drinking Water Advisory?

*A Lawsuit May Affect You and Your
First Nation. Please Read this Carefully.*

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

You could be affected by class action litigation regarding the lack of access to clean drinking water on First Nations reserves.

The Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench and the Federal Court of Canada decided that a class action on behalf of a "Class" of both First Nations and band members may proceed. Band members can choose whether to stay in the Class. First Nations can choose whether to join the Class. There is no money available now and no guarantee that the class action will succeed.

The Courts appointed Tataskweyak Cree Nation, Chief Doreen Spence, Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Neskantaga First Nation, and Chief Christopher Moonias to act as representative Plaintiffs for the Class.

What is this case about?

This class action asserts that Canada breached its obligations by failing to ensure that First Nations communities had adequate access to clean drinking water. The class action asserts that members of these communities and the communities themselves were harmed emotionally, physically, financially, and spiritually. The class action asserts that Canada has breached its fiduciary duties, its duty of care, and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The Court has not decided whether any of these assertions are true. If there is no settlement, the Plaintiffs will have to prove their claims in Court.

If you have questions about this class action, you can contact Eric Khan 1(800) 538-0009 or info@classaction2.com.

Who represents the class?

The Court has appointed McCarthy Tétrault LLP and Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP to represent the Class as "Class Counsel". You do not have to pay Class Counsel, or anyone else, to participate. If Class Counsel obtains money or benefits for the Class they may ask for lawyers' fees and costs, which would be deducted from any money or benefits recovered for Class members.

Individuals Class Members: Who is included and who is excluded?

Band Members Included: The Class includes band members (as defined by the Indian Act): (a) whose reserve was subject to a drinking water advisory (such as a boil water advisory, etc.) that lasted at least one year at any time from November 20, 1995 to the present; (b) had not died before November 20, 2017; and (c) ordinarily lived on their reserve.

Individuals: What are your options?

Stay in the Class: To stay in the Class, you do not have to do anything. If the Class obtains money or benefits, Class Counsel will give notice about how to ask for your share. You will be legally bound by all orders and judgments, and you will not be able to sue Canada about the legal claims in this case.

Staying in the Class will not impact the supports received from community based agencies that are funded by any government.

Schedule B

Are You a Member of a First Nation
That Has Been Subject To A Long-Term
Drinking Water Advisory?

If YES, A Class Action May Affect Your Rights and the Rights of First Nations A court authorized this notice

- * You could be affected by a class action involving access to clean drinking water in your First Nation Communities.
- * The Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench and the Federal Court of Canada has decided that class actions on behalf of a "Class" of both First Nations and band members may proceed. Band members can choose whether to stay in the Class. First Nations can choose whether to join the Class. The Courts appointed Tataskweyak Cree Nation, Chief Doreen Spence, Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Neskantaga First Nation, and Chief Christopher Moonias to act as representative Plaintiffs for the Class.
- * The Courts have not decided whether Canada did anything wrong, and there still has to be a Court case about whether Canada did anything wrong. There is no money available now and no guarantee there will ever be any money. However, your rights are affected, and you have a choice to make now. This notice is to help you and your First Nation make that choice.

INDIVIDUAL BAND MEMBERS: YOUR LEGAL RIGHTS AND OPTIONS AT THIS STAGE
DO NOTHING: KEEP YOUR RIGHTS UNDER THE CLASS ACTION	Stay in these lawsuits and wait for the outcome. Share in possible benefits from the outcome but give up certain individual rights. By doing nothing, you keep the possibility of receiving money or other benefits that may come from a trial or settlement. But, you give up any rights to sue Canada on your own about the same legal claims in this lawsuit.
REMOVE YOURSELF (OPT OUT)	Get out of these lawsuits and get no benefits from it. Keep rights. If you ask to opt out and money or benefits are later awarded to Class members, you won't get a share. But, you keep any rights to sue Canada on your own about the same legal claims in this lawsuit.
FIRST NATIONS: YOUR LEGAL RIGHTS AND OPTIONS AT THIS STAGE
CHOOSE TO JOIN THE CLASS (OPT IN)	Join the Class. If you join, your First Nations might share in money and benefits from the outcome. By joining the Class (opting in), First Nations might receive money or other benefits, including water infrastructure, that may come from a trial or settlement in the Class Action. Opting in is an easy process, and there is no cost to opt in.
DO NOTHING: LOSE YOUR FIRST NATION'S RIGHTS UNDER THE CLASS ACTION	By doing nothing, your First Nation will lose the possibility of receiving money and other benefits if the Class Action succeeds. If First Nations do not join the Class (opt in) and money or benefits are later awarded, your First Nation won't share in those. By not opting-in, your First Nation may keep any rights to sue Canada about the same legal claims in this litigation.

- * Lawyers must prove the claims against Canada at a trial or a settlement must be reached. If money or benefits are obtained you will be notified about how to ask for your share.
- * Your options are explained in this notice. To be removed from the litigation, individual band members must ask to be removed by [NTD: 90 days from the first publication of notice.]. To join the Class Action, First Nations must send their opt in notice no later than 120 days before Class members' claims are to be determined.

BASIC INFORMATION1. Why is there a notice?

The Courts have "certified" Class Actions. This means that the lawsuits meets the requirements for class actions and may proceed to trial. If you are included, you may have legal rights and options before the Courts decide whether the claims being made against Canada on your behalf are correct. This notice attempts to explain all of these things.

Chief Justice Joyal of the Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench is currently overseeing the case known as Tataskweyak Cree Nation and Chief Doreen Spence v. Canada. Justice Favel of the Federal Court of Canada is currently overseeing the case known as Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Nesktanaga First Nation, and Chief Christopher Moonias v. Canada. The persons who sued are called the Plaintiffs. Canada is the Defendant. A link to the latest version of the Statement of Claim (the legal document that makes the allegations against Canada) can be found here: <https://www.mccarthy.ca/en/class-action-litigation-drinking-water-advisori-es-first-nations-0>

2. What is this litigation about?

These Class Actions assert that Canada breached its obligations by failing to ensure that First Nations communities had adequate access to clean drinking water. The Class Actions also assert that members of these communities and the communities themselves were harmed emotionally, physically, financially, and spiritually. The Class Actions assert that Canada has breached its fiduciary duties, its duty of care, and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The Courts have not decided (and Canada has not admitted) that any of these assertions are true. If there is no settlement with Canada, the Plaintiffs will have to prove their claims in Court.

If you are having a difficult time dealing with these issues, or have questions about the Class Action, you can call 1 (800) 538 0009 for assistance.

3. Why is this a class action?

In a class action, the "representative plaintiffs" (in this case, Tataskweyak Cree Nation, Chief Doreen Spence, Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Nesktanaga First Nation, and Chief Christopher Moonias) sued on behalf of individual band members and First Nations who have similar claims. All of these individual band members are part of the "Class" or "Class Members", as are First Nations who choose to join the Class Action. The Court resolves the issues for all Class Members in one case, except (in the case of individual band members) for those who remove themselves from (opt out of) the Class and (in the case of First Nations) for those that do not join (opt into) the Class Action.

4. Who Is a member of the Class?

The Class includes and excludes the following:

All persons, other than "Excluded Persons" who:

- (i) are members of a band, as defined in subsection 2(1) of the Indian Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 1-5 ("First Nation"), the disposition of whose lands is subject to that Act or the First Nations Land Management Act, S.C. 1999, c. 24 ("First Nations Lands"), and whose First Nations Lands were subject to a drinking water advisory (whether a boil water, do not consume, or do not use advisory, or the like) that lasted at least one year from November 20, 1995 to present ("Impacted First Nations");
- (ii) were not dead two years prior to the commencement of this action (that is, by November 20, 2017); and
- (iii) ordinarily resided in an Impacted First Nation while it was subject to a drinking water advisory that lasted at least one year; and
- (iv) Tataskweyak Cree Nation, Curve Lake First Nation, Neskantaga First Nation, and any other Impacted First Nation that elects to join this action in a representative capacity ("Participating Nations").

"Excluded Persons" are members of Tsuu Tina Nation, Sucker Creek First Nation, Emneskin Cree Nation, the Blood Tribe, Okanagan Indian Band, and Okanagan Indian Band and Michael Darryl Isnardy.

5. What are the Plaintiffs asking for?

The Plaintiffs are asking for money and other benefits for the Class, including water infrastructure. The Plaintiffs are also asking for legal fees and costs, plus interest.

6. Is there any money available to Class Members now?

No money or benefits are available now because the Court has not yet decided whether Canada did anything wrong, and the two sides have not settled the case. There is no guarantee that money or benefits will ever be obtained. If money or other benefits become available, notice will be provided about how to ask for your share.

YOUR RIGHTS AND OPTIONS

Individual band members must decide whether to stay in the Class, and you have to decide this by [NTD: 90 days from the first publication of notice]. First Nations must decide whether they want to join the class by no later than 120 days before the Class members' claims are determined.

7. What happens if I do nothing at all? What happens if the First Nation does nothing at all?

Individuals Band Members: if you do nothing, you will automatically remain in the Class Action. You will be bound by all Court orders, good or bad. If any money or other benefits are awarded, you may need to take action after notice to you to receive any benefits. First Nations: First Nations must chose to join the Class Action to receive the potential benefits and to be bound by all Court orders, good or bad.

8. What if I don't want to be in the Lawsuit? What if a First Nation wants to join the Lawsuit?

Individual Band Members: If you do not want to be in the lawsuit, you must remove yourself - this is referred to as "opting out." If you remove yourself, you will not receive any benefit that may be obtained from the Class Action.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

You will not be bound by any Court orders and you keep your right to sue Canada as an individual regarding the issues in this case.

To remove yourself, send a communication that says you want to be removed from the Class in Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Neskantaga First Nation, and Chief Christopher Moonias v. Canada Court File No. CI-19-01-2466. Include your name, address, telephone number, and signature. You can also get an Opt Out Form at [\[insert Administrator web link\]](#). You must deliver your removal request by [NTD: 90 days from the first publication of notice] to: CA2 Inc., 9 Prince Arthur Avenue. Toronto, Ontario M5R 1B2 or info@classaction2.com.

Call 1 (800) 538-0009 if you have any questions about how to get out of the Class Action.

First Nations: First Nations that wish to join the Class Action and assert claims on behalf of their band or community must take action to join - this is referred to as "opting in." To opt in, or to seek more information, please contact the Administrator 1(800)538-0009 or info@classaction2.com. First Nations may also contact Class Counsel and ask for Class Counsel Stephanie Willsey (toll free: 1-877-244-7711 or swillsey@mccarthy.ca) or Kevin Hille at khille@oktlaw.com or (416) 598-3694. Requests by First Nations to opt in must be sent no later than 120 days before Class members' claims are determined.

THE LAWYERS REPRESENTING YOU

10. Do Individual Band Members have a lawyer in the case?

Yes. The Court has appointed McCarthy Tetrault LLP and Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP to represent you and other Class Members as "Class Counsel." You will not be charged legal or other fees or expenses for these lawyers. If you want to be represented by another lawyer, you may hire one to appear in Court for you at your own expense.

11. How will the lawyers be paid?

Class Counsel will only be paid if they win judgement or if there is a settlement. The Court has to also approve their request to be paid. The fees and expenses could be deducted from any money obtained for the Class, or paid separately by the Defendant.

A TRIAL

12. How and when will the Court decide who is right?

If the Class Action is not dismissed or settled, the Plaintiffs must prove their claims at a motion for summary judgement or a trial that will take place in Ottawa, Ontario. During the motion or trial, the Court will hear all of the evidence, so that a decision can be reached about whether the Plaintiffs or Canada is right about the claims in the Class Action. There is no guarantee that the Plaintiffs will win any money or benefits for the Class.

13. Will I get money after the trial?

If the Plaintiffs obtain money or benefits as a result of a trial or settlement, you will be notified about how to ask for a share or what your other options are at that time. These things are not known right now. Important information about the case will be posted on the website [NTD: insert Administrator website] as it becomes available.

GETTING MORE INFORMATION

14. How do I get more information? How to I get information to people who need it?

Proceeding under *Federal Courts Rules, 334.16 and 334.17LITIGATION PLAN*FOR COMMON ISSUES, CERTIFICATION AND SUMMARY JUDGMENT MOTIONS

1. Attached as Schedule "A" is the parties' consent timetable. This Litigation Plan is intended to address the Plaintiffs' motions for certification and summary judgement.
2. If the motion for summary judgement is successful, a further plan will be proposed to address any remaining issues, depending on the outcome.
3. Alternatively, if the motion for summary judgement is not successful, the Plaintiffs will propose a further plan for the trial of the common issues.
4. The Plaintiffs seek certification of the following common issue to be resolved on behalf of the class as a whole ("Stage 1 Common Issue"):
 - (a) From November 20, 1995 to the present, did the Defendant owe a duty or an obligation to Class members to take reasonable measures to provide them with, or ensure they were provided with, or refrain from barring, adequate access to water that is safe for human use?
5. If the Defendant consents to certification of a class proceeding, the Plaintiffs will negotiate with the Defendant to resolve the common issues. If the negotiations fail, the Plaintiffs will require the delivery of a Statement of Defence, following which they will deliver a record in support of a motion for summary judgement on the Stage 1 Common Issue. At a pre-trial conference following delivery of the Plaintiffs' record, they will ask the Court to determine that this matter is appropriate for summary judgement and schedule a hearing of their motion.
6. If the Defendant opposes the certification of a class proceeding, the Plaintiffs will require the Defendant to deliver a Statement of Defence. The Plaintiffs will then deliver a record in support of motions for certification and summary judgement on the Stage 1 Common Issue. At a pre-trial conference following the delivery of the Plaintiffs' record, they will ask the Court to determine that this matter is appropriate for summary judgement and schedule the hearing of their motion for summary judgement together with the hearing of their motion for certification.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

7. At the certification motion, the Plaintiffs will also seek certification of the following common issues to be resolved on behalf of each Impacted First Nation sub-group, being the members of that First Nation and the First Nation itself, if it is a Participating First Nation ("Stage 2 Common Issues"):
- (a) If the answer to common issue 4(a) is "yes", did Canada breach its duties or obligations to members of the sub-group?
 - (b) If the answer to common issue 7(a) is yes, is any breach of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms ("Charter") saved by s. 1 of the Charter?
 - (c) If the answer to common issue 7(a) is yes, did the Defendant's breach cause a substantial and unreasonable interference with Class members' or their First Nations' use and enjoyment of their lands?
 - (d) If the answer to common issue 7(a) is "yes" and the answer to common issue 7(b) is "no", are damages available to members of the sub-group under s. 24(1) of the Charier?
 - (e) Can the causation of any damages suffered by members of the sub-group be determined as a common issue?
 - (f) Can the Court make an aggregate assessment of all or part of any damages suffered by members of the sub-group?
- (b) publishing the notice in designated newspapers;
 - (c) distributing the notice to all offices of Tataskweyak Cree Nation and the Assembly of First Nations.
 - (d) forwarding the notice to any Class member who requests it and the Chiefs of every First Nation that is eligible to opt into the class, as well as each band office;
 - (e) establishing a national toll-free support line, to provide assistance to Class members, family, guardians, or other persons who make inquiries on their own behalf or on behalf of Class members.
- (a) And by such other notice as the Court directs.
14. The Plaintiffs will ask the Court to approve opt-out and opt-in forms to be used by class members wishing to opt out of, or opt into, the class action, which will require the Class member to provide sufficient information to establish their membership in the Class.

LITIGATION STEPS FOLLOWING THE DETERMINATION OF COMMON ISSUES FAVOURABLE TO THE CLASS

Notice of Resolution of Common Issues

15. The Plaintiffs will ask that the Court settle the form and content for notification of the resolution of the Stage 1 and Stage 2 Common Issues ("Resolution Notice Plan") and the means by which Class members will file claims ("Claim Forms") by a fixed date with the Administrator. The Plaintiffs will also ask that the Court settle an appropriate process to determine any remaining individual issues.

Valuation of Damages

16. If the Common Issues are resolved in favour of the Plaintiffs, the Plaintiffs propose two (2) methods for assessing and distributing damages for the class members as follows:
- (a) Aggregate damages that accrue to individual Class members on a pro rata basis or on a pro rata basis within a sub-group;
 - (b) Aggregate damages that accrue to Participating First Nations on a community basis; and

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

17. Following the determination of aggregate damages, including punitive damages, additional damages may be awarded in individual issues proceedings.
 - (g) Does the Defendant's conduct justify an award of punitive damages, and if so, in what amount?
 - (h) Should the Court order that the Defendant take measures to provide or ensure that members of the sub-group are provided with, or refrain from barring, adequate access to clean tap water?
 - (i) If so, what measures should be ordered?
8. If the Stage 1 Common Issue is determined in favour of the Plaintiffs, the parties will conclude a discovery plan to manage the Defendant's timely production of relevant documents in respect of the Stage 2 Common Issues for each Impacted First Nation sub-group.
9. Upon assessing the Defendant's productions, the Plaintiffs will decide whether to bring motions for summary judgement on the Stage 2 Common Issues for some or all of the Impacted First Nation sub-groups, or alternatively, to schedule a trial of these common issues.

NOTIFICATION OF CERTIFICATION AND OPT OUT PROCEDURE

10. On the motion for certification, the Plaintiffs will ask that the Court settle the form and content for notification of the certification of this action (the "Notice of Certification"), the timing and manner of providing Notice of Certification ("Notice Program") and set out an opt-out date as being three (3) months following the date of the Certification Order ("Opt-Out Date"), and an opt-in date as being six (6) months prior to the commencement of the determination of the Stage 2 Common Issues.
11. If a motion for summary judgement is being heard together with a motion for certification, the Plaintiffs will ask the court to render its decision on certification first, direct that notice issue if a class proceeding is certified, and then render its decision on the Stage 1 Common Issue following the Opt-Out Date.
12. The Plaintiffs will ask the Court to order that the defendant pay the costs of the Notice Program, including the cost of the Administrator.
13. The Plaintiffs will seek an order for the distribution of notice of certification as follows:
 - (a) posting the notice on the respective websites of Class Counsel, the Defendant, and the Administrator;
 - (b) publishing the notice in designated newspapers;
 - (c) distributing the notice to all offices of Tataskweyak Cree Nation and the Assembly of First Nations.
 - (d) forwarding the notice to any Class member who requests it and the Chiefs of every First Nation that is eligible to opt into the class, as well as each band office;
 - (e) establishing a national toll-free support line, to provide assistance to Class members, family, guardians, or other persons who make inquiries on their own behalf or on behalf of Class members.
 - (a) And by such other notice as the Court directs.
14. The Plaintiffs will ask the Court to approve opt-out and opt-in forms to be used by class members wishing to opt out of, or opt into, the class action, which will require the Class member to provide sufficient information to establish their membership in the Class.

LITIGATION STEPS FOLLOWING THE DETERMINATION OF COMMON ISSUES FAVOURABLE TO THE CLASSNotice of Resolution of Common Issues

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

15. The Plaintiffs will ask that the Court settle the form and content for notification of the resolution of the Stage 1 and Stage 2 Common Issues ("Resolution Notice Plan") and the means by which Class members will file claims ("Claim Forms") by a fixed date with the Administrator. The Plaintiffs will also ask that the Court settle an appropriate process to determine any remaining individual issues.

Valuation of Damages

16. If the Common Issues are resolved in favour of the Plaintiffs, the Plaintiffs propose two (2) methods for assessing and distributing damages for the class members as follows:

(a) Aggregate damages that accrue to individual Class members on a pro rata basis or on a pro rata basis within a sub-group;

(b) Aggregate damages that accrue to Participating First Nations on a community basis; and

17. Following the determination of aggregate damages, including punitive damages, additional damages may be awarded in individual issues proceedings.

Assessment of Number of Claimants

18. After the deadline for submitting Claim Forms has expired, the Administrator shall calculate the total number of claimants for the purpose of any pro rata distribution of aggregate damages.

19. The Parties may also retain an actuary to assist with the determination of Class size and the demographics of the Class.

Global Punitive Damages Distribution

20. Should the Court award aggregate damages to the Class or a sub-group, the total amount of damages will be apportioned to the class in a manner to be determined by the Court within a fixed period of time set by the Court from the Notice of Resolution.

Funds not Distributed

21. Any monies not distributed will be distributed cy-pres as the Court directs. The Plaintiffs propose that any residual amounts be distributed cy-pres to community organizations that assist with water infrastructure in Impacted First Nations.

Resolution of the Individual Issues

22. Within thirty (30) days of the issuance of the judgment on the common issues, the parties will convene to settle a protocol to resolve any individual issues. If the parties cannot settle such a protocol, the Plaintiffs will move for directions from the Court within sixty (60) days.

MISCELLANEOUS REQUIREMENTS OF THE LITIGATION PLANFunding

23. Class Counsel have entered into an agreement with the Representative Plaintiffs with respect to legal fees and disbursements. This agreement provides that counsel will not receive payment for their work unless and until the class proceeding is successful or costs are recovered from the Defendant.

24. Class Counsel's legal fees are subject to court approval.

Claims Administration

25. The Administrator will provide the claims administration for any settlement or judgement achieved. The Administrator will distribute notice in accordance with the Resolution Notice Plan. If a settlement is achieved and a settlement fund is provided, or if judgement results in an award in favour of Class members, the Administrator will administer payments out of the fund to claimants based on the procedures set out above, after approval and/or modification by the Court.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

Class Action Website

26. From time to time, Class Counsel will post relevant pleadings and court filings, the latest documents and summaries of the latest developments, anticipated timelines, frequently asked questions and answers, and contact information for class counsel for the information of class members.

Conflict Management

27. Class Counsel and the Plaintiffs have taken appropriate measures to determine that no conflict of interest exists among the members of the Class, and no such conflict is anticipated. Should a conflict arise, McCarthy Tetrault LLP will represent one sub-group, and Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP will represent the other. Should any conflict arise as between First Nations and their members, which is not anticipated given their commonality of interest, McCarthy Tetrault LLP will represent the members and Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP will represent the First Nations.

Applicable Law

28. The applicable law is the Constitution Act, 1982, the Constitution Act, 1867, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the Safe Drinking Water for First Nations Act, S.C. 2013, c. 21, the Indian Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 1-5, the First Nations Land Management Act, S.C. 1999, c. 24, The Federal Courts Act, R.S.C., 1985 c. F-7 as well as applicable regulations, the common law and the law of Canada.

Coordination of proceedings

29. On July 14, 2020 the Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench certified a related class proceeding in the matter styled Tataskueyak Cree Nation v. Canada, Court File No. 19-01 24661 (the "Tataskweyak Action"). The representative plaintiffs in the Tataskweyak Action have pledged to work collaboratively with the Plaintiffs to advance their common interests. Pursuant to the Canadian Judicial Protocol for the Management of Multi-jurisdictional Class Actions and the Provision of Class Action Notice, the Plaintiffs will ask the Federal Court and the Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench to convene joint case management conferences, as appropriate, to ensure coordination between the two proceedings and to promote efficiency. In order to ensure consistent results, the Plaintiffs may ask that the Federal Court and the Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench sit together to hear any motion for summary judgement or any trial of the Tataskweyak Action and this action.

Proceeding under The Class Proceedings

Act, C.C.S.M.c. C. 130

ORDER

THIS MOTION for certification, brought by the Plaintiffs was heard on July 14, 2020 at 408 York Ave in Winnipeg, Manitoba.

ON READING the motion record of the Plaintiffs and the consent of the Defendant. AND ON BEING ADVISED that the parties consent to this order.

1. THIS COURT ORDERS that this action be and is hereby certified as a class proceeding pursuant to The Class Proceedings Act, C.C.S.M.c. C. 130.

2. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that the Class is defined as:

(a) All persons other than Excluded Persons who:

(i) are members of a band, as defined in subsection 2(1) of the Indian Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 1-5 ("First Nation"), the disposition of whose lands is subject to that Act or the First Nations Land Management Act, S.C. 1999, c. 24 ("First Nations Lands"), and whose First Nations Lands were subject to a drinking water advisory (whether a boil water, do not consume, or do not use advisory, or the like) that lasted at least one year from November 20, 1995 to present ("Impacted First Nations");

(ii) had not died before November 20, 2017; and

(iii) ordinarily resided in an Impacted First Nation while it was subject to a drinking water advisory that lasted at least one year; and

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

(b) Tataskweyak Cree Nation and any other Impacted First Nation that elects to join this action in a representative capacity ("Participating Nations").

"Excluded Persons" are members of Tsuu T'ina Nation, Sucker Creek First Nation, Ermineskin Cree Nation, the Blood Tribe, and the Okanagan Indian Band, and Michael Daryl Isnardy.

3. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that until the claims asserted in this class proceeding are fully and finally decided, settled, discontinued, or abandoned, including the exhaustion of all rights of appeal, leave of the Court is required to commence any other proceeding on behalf of any member of the Class in respect of the claims asserted in this action, save and except for proceedings commenced on behalf of those members of the Class who opt out of this class proceeding in the manner prescribed below.

4. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that the following common issues be and are hereby certified for resolution on behalf of the Class as a whole:

(a) From November 20, 1995 to the present, did the Defendant owe a duty or an obligation to Class members to take reasonable measures to provide them with, or ensure they were provided with, or refrain from barring, adequate access to water that is safe for human use?

5. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that a sub-group be and is hereby recognized for the members of each Impacted First Nation, and the First Nation itself, if it is a Participating Nation;

6. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that the following common issues be and are hereby certified for resolution on behalf of each sub-group;

(a) If the answer to common issue 4(a) is "yes", did Canada breach its duties or obligations to members of the sub-group?

(b) If the answer to common issue 6(a) is yes, is any breach of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms ("Charter") saved by s. 1 of the Charter?

(c) If the answer to common issue 6(a) is yes, did the Defendant's breach cause a substantial and unreasonable interference with Class members' or their First Nations' use and enjoyment of their lands?

(d) If the answer to common issue 6(a) is "yes" and the answer to common issue 6(b) is "no", are damages available to members of the sub-group under s. 24(1) of the Charter?

(e) Can the causation of any damages suffered by members of the sub-group be determined as a common issue?

(f) Can the Court make an aggregate assessment of all or part of any damages suffered by members of the sub-group?

(g) Does the Defendant's conduct justify an award of punitive damages, and if so, in what amount?

(h) Should the Court order that the Defendant take measures to provide or ensure that members of the sub-group are provided with, or refrain from barring, adequate access to clean tap water?

(i) If so, what measures should be ordered?

7. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that Chief Doreen Spence and Tataskweyak Cree Nation are hereby appointed as Representative Plaintiffs for the Class,

8. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that McCarthy T& rault LLP and Olthuis Kleer Townshend are hereby appointed as class counsel ("Class Counsel").

9. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that the Plaintiffs and the Defendant shall make reasonable efforts to agree on the appointment of an administrator for the purpose of giving notice of the certification of this class proceeding (the "Administrator"). The Parties shall advise the Court of the appointment of the Administrator within sixty (60) days of the date of this Order, failing which the Court shall appoint an appropriately qualified Administrator.

10. THIS COURT ORDERS that class members shall be notified that this action has been certified as a class proceeding as follows, which shall be and is hereby deemed adequate notice:

(a) by posting the Short Form Notice set out in Schedule "A" and Long Form Notice set out in Schedule "B", and the French language translations of these documents, as agreed upon by the parties, on the respective websites of Class Counsel, the Defendant, and the Administrator;

(b) by the Administrator publishing the Short Form Notice in the newspapers set out in Schedule "C" attached hereto, in 1/4 of a page size in the weekend edition of each newspaper, if possible;

(c) by the Administrator distributing the Short Form Notice to all offices of Tataskweyak Cree Nation and the Assembly of First Nations;

(d) by the Administrator forwarding the Short Form Notice and Long Form Notice to any Class member who requests them;

(e) by the Administrator forwarding the Short Form Notice and Long Form Notice to the Chiefs of every Impacted First Nation identified in accordance with paragraph 12, below, except for Excluded Persons;

(f) by the Administrator forwarding the Short Form Notice and Long Form Notice to the band office or similar office of every Impacted First Nation identified in accordance with paragraph 12, below, except for Excluded Persons, together with a request that they be posted in a prominent place;

(g) by the Administrator establishing a national toll-free support line, to provide assistance to Class members, family, guardians, or other persons who make inquiries on their own behalf or on behalf of Class members.

11. THIS COURT ORDERS that the Defendant shall be responsible for the cost of giving notice of the certification of a class proceeding as set out in paragraph 10, above.

12. THIS COURT ORDERS that within 30 days of the date of this Order, the Plaintiffs and the Defendant shall exchange a list setting out their best information on the names of the First Nations that are eligible to opt into the Class, and taken together these lists shall constitute the means of identifying the First Nations that are entitled to direct notice for the purpose of paragraphs 10(e) and 10(f), above.

13. THIS COURT ORDERS that a class member may opt out of this class proceeding by delivering a signed opt-out coupon, a form of which is attached as Schedule "D", or some other legible signed request to opt out, within one-hundred-and- twenty-days (120) days of the date on which notice is first published in accordance with paragraph 10(b), above (the "Opt Out Deadline"), to the Administrator. The Short Form Notice and Long Form Notice shall state the Opt Out Deadline and the address of the Administrator for the purpose of receiving opt-out coupons.

14. THIS COURT ORDERS that no Class Member may opt out of this class proceeding after the Opt Out Deadline, except with leave of the Court.

15. THIS COURT ORDERS that the Administrator shall serve on the parties and file with the Court, within sixty (60) days of the expiry of the Opt Out Deadline, an affidavit listing all persons who have opted out of the class proceeding, if any.

16. THIS COURT ORDERS that any Impacted First Nation may opt into this class proceeding by retaining Class Counsel no fewer than one-hundred-and-twenty (120) days before the disposition of any of the common issues (the "Opt In Deadline"), to Class Counsel, at the address set out in paragraph 11, above.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

17. THIS COURT ORDERS that no Class member may opt into this class proceeding after the Opt In Deadline, except with leave of the Court.

18. THIS COURT ORDERS that Class Counsel shall serve on the parties and file with the Court, within sixty (60) days of the expiry of the Opt In Deadline, a list of all the Impacted First Nations that have opted into the class proceeding.

19. THIS COURT DECLARES that the Litigation Plan attached hereto as Appendix I is a workable method of advancing the class proceeding on behalf of the Class.

20. THIS COURT ORDERS that each party shall bear its own costs of the within motion for certification of this class proceeding.

Legal Notice

Are You a Member of a First Nation
That Has Been Subject To A Long-Term
Drinking Water Advisory?

A Lawsuit May Affect You and Your

First Nation. Please Read this

Carefully.

You could be affected by class action litigation regarding the lack of access to clean drinking water on First Nations reserves.

The Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench and the Federal Court of Canada decided that a class action on behalf of a "Class" of both First Nations and band members may proceed. Band members can choose whether to stay in the Class. First Nations can choose whether to join the Class. There is no money available now and no guarantee that the class action will succeed.

The Courts appointed Tataskweyak Cree Nation, Chief Doreen Spence, Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetting, Neskantaga First Nation, and Chief Christopher Moonias to act as representative Plaintiffs for the Class.

What is this case about?

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

This class action asserts that Canada breached its obligations by failing to ensure that First Nations communities had adequate access to clean drinking water. The class action asserts that members of these communities and the communities themselves were harmed emotionally, physically, financially, and spiritually. The class action asserts that Canada has breached its fiduciary duties, its duty of care, and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The Court has not decided whether any of these assertions are true. If there is no settlement, the Plaintiffs will have to prove their claims in Court.

If you have questions about this class action, you can contact Eric Khan 1(800) 538-0009 or info@classaction2.com.

Who represents the class?

The Court has appointed McCarthy Tetrault LLP and Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP to represent the Class as "Class Counsel". You do not have to pay Class Counsel, or anyone else, to participate. If Class Counsel obtains money or benefits for the Class they may ask for lawyers' fees and costs, which would be deducted from any money or benefits recovered for Class members.

Individuals Class Members: Who is included and who is excluded?

Band Members Included: The Class includes band members (as defined by the Indian Act): (a) whose reserve was subject to a drinking water advisory (such as a boil water advisory, etc.) that lasted at least one year at any time from November 20, 1995 to the present; (b) had not died before November 20, 2017; and (c) ordinarily lived on their reserve.

Individuals: What are your options?

Stay in the Class: To stay in the Class, you do not have to do anything. If the Class obtains money or benefits, Class Counsel will give notice about how to ask for your share. You will be legally bound by all orders and judgments, and you will not be able to sue Canada about the legal claims in this case.

Staying in the Class will not impact the supports received from community-based agencies that are funded by any government.

Get out of the Class: If you do not want to participate in this class action litigation, you need to remove yourself by opting out. If you opt out, you cannot get money or benefits from this litigation. To opt out, please visit [NTD: Insert Administrator's website for this action] to obtain an opt out coupon, or write to CA2 Inc., 9 Prince Arthur Avenue, Toronto, Ontario M5R 1B2 requesting to be removed from this class action. Please include your name, address, telephone number, and signature. Your request to opt out must be sent by [NTD: 120 days from the date of the first publication of notice].

First Nations: What are your options?

Elect to join the Class: First Nations that wish to join the Class and assert claims on behalf of their community must take action to opt in. To opt in, or to seek more information, please contact the Administrator at 1(800)538-0009 or info@classaction2.com. First Nations may also contact Class Counsel Stephanie Willsey (toll free: 1-877-244-7711; swillsey@mccarthy.ca) or Class Counsel Kevin Hille ((416) 598-3694; khille@oktlaw.com). Your request to opt in must be sent no later than 120 days before Class members' claims are determined.

How Can I Get More Information?

Name of Administrator: CA2Contact Information: 1(800)538-0009 or info@classaction2.com*Getting Information To People Who Need It

The representative Plaintiffs and Class Counsel ask for the help of health care workers, social workers, First Nations community leaders, family members, caregivers and friends of Class members in getting information to Class members who would have trouble reading or understanding this notice. Schedule BAre You a Member of a First Nation
That Has Been Subject To A Long-Term
Drinking Water Advisory?

If YES, A Class Action May Affect Your Rights and the Rights of First Nations

A court authorized this notice

- * You could be affected by a class action involving access to clean drinking water in your First Nation Communities.
- * The Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench and the Federal Court of Canada has decided that class actions on behalf of a "Class" of both First Nations and band members may proceed. Band members can choose whether to stay in the Class. First Nations can choose whether to join the Class. The Courts appointed Tataskweyak Cree Nation, Chief Doreen Spence, Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Neskantaga First Nation, and Chief Christopher Moonias to act as representative Plaintiffs for the Class.
- * The Courts have not decided whether Canada did anything wrong, and there still has to be a Court case about whether Canada did anything wrong. There is no money available now and no guarantee there will ever be any money. However, your rights are affected, and you have a choice to make now. This notice is to help you and your First Nation make that choice.

INDIVIDUAL BAND MEMBERS: YOUR LEGAL RIGHTS AND OPTIONS AT THIS STAGE
DO NOTHING: KEEP YOUR RIGHTS UNDER THE CLASS ACTION	Stay in these lawsuits and wait for the outcome. Share in possible benefits from the outcome but give up certain individual rights. By doing nothing, you keep the possibility of receiving money or other benefits that may come from a trial or settlement. But, you give up any rights to sue Canada on your own about the same legal claims in this lawsuit.
REMOVE YOURSELF (OPT OUT)	Get out of these lawsuits and get no benefits from it. Keep rights. If you ask to opt out and money or benefits are later awarded to Class members, you won't get a share. But, you keep any rights to sue Canada on your own about the same legal claims in this lawsuit.
FIRST NATIONS: YOUR LEGAL RIGHTS AND OPTIONS AT THIS STAGE
CHOOSE TO JOIN THE CLASS (OPT IN)	Join the Class. If you join, your First Nations might share in money and benefits from the outcome. By joining the Class (opting in), First Nations might receive money or other benefits, including water infrastructure, that may come from a trial or settlement in the Class Action. Opting in is an easy process, and there is no cost to opt in.

* Lawyers must prove the claims against Canada at a trial or a settlement must be reached. If money or benefits are obtained you will be notified about how to ask for your share.

* Your options are explained in this notice. To be removed from the litigation, individual band members must ask to be removed by [NTD: 120 days from the first publication of notice.] To join the Class Action, First Nations must send their opt in notice no later than 120 days before Class members' claims are to be determined.

GETTING MORE INFORMATION

14. How do I get more information? How to I get this information to people who need it?

BASIC INFORMATION1. Why is there a notice?

The Courts have "certified" Class Actions, This means that the lawsuits meets the requirements for class actions and may proceed to trial. If you are included, you may have legal rights and options before the Courts decide whether the claims being made against Canada on your behalf are correct. This notice attempts to explain all of these things.

Chief Justice Joyal of the Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench is currently overseeing the case known as Tataskweyak Cree Nation and Chief Doreen Spence v. Canada. Justice Favel of the Federal Court of Canada is currently overseeing the case known as Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Nesktanaga First Nation, and Chief Christopher Moonias v. Canada, The persons who sued are called the Plaintiffs. Canada is the Defendant. A link to the latest version of the Statement of Claim (the legal document that makes the allegations against Canada) can be found here; <https://www.mccaithv.ca/en/class-action-litigation-drinking-water-advisori-es-first-nations->

2. What is this litigation about?

These Class Actions assert that Canada breached its obligations by failing to ensure that First Nations communities had adequate access to clean drinking water. The Class Actions also assert that members of these communities and the communities themselves were harmed emotionally, physically, financially, and spiritually. The Class Actions assert that Canada has breached its fiduciary duties, its duty of care, and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The Courts have not decided (and Canada has not admitted) that any of these assertions are true. If there is no settlement with Canada, the Plaintiffs will have to prove their claims in Court.

If you are having a difficult time dealing with these issues, or have questions about the Class Action, you can call 1 (800) 538-0009 for assistance.

3. Why is this a class action?

In a class action, the "representative plaintiffs" (in this case, Tataskweyak Cree Nation, Chief Doreen Spence, Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Nesktanaga First Nation, and Chief Christopher Moonias) sued on behalf of individual band members and First Nations who have similar claims. All of these individual band members are part of the "Class" or "Class Members" as are First Nations who choose to join the Class Action, The Court resolves the issues for all Class Members in one case, except (in the case of individual band members) for those who remove themselves from (opt out of) the Class and (in the case of First Nations) for those that do not join (opt into) the Class Action.

4. Who is a member of the Class?

The Class includes and excludes the following:

All persons, other than "Excluded Persons" who:

- (i) are members of a band, as defined in subsection 2(1) of the Indian Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 1-5 ("First Nation"), the disposition of whose lands is subject to that Act or the First Nations Land Management Act, S.C. 1999, c. 24 ("First Nations Lands"), and whose First Nations Lands were subject to a drinking water advisory (whether a boil water, do not consume, or do not use advisory, or tiie like) that lasted at least one year from November 20, 1995 to present ("Impacted First Nations");
- (ii) were not dead two years prior to the commencement of this action (that is, by November 20, 2017); and
- (iii) ordinarily resided in an Impacted First Nation while it was subject to a drinking water advisory that lasted at least one year: and
- (iv) Tataskweyak Cree Nation, Curve Lake First Nation, Neskantaga First Nation, and any other Impacted First Nation that elects to join this action in a representative capacity ("Participating Nations").

"Excluded Persons" are members of Tsuu T'ina Nation, Sucker Creek First Nation, Ermineskin Cree Nation, the Blood Tribe, Okanagan Indian Band, and Okanagan Indian Band and Michael Darryl Isnardy.

5. What are the Plaintiffs asking for?

The Plaintiffs are asking for money and other benefits for the Class, including water infrastructure. The Plaintiffs are also asking for legal fees and costs, plus interest.

6. Is there any money available to Class Members now?

No money or benefits are available now because the Court has not yet decided whether Canada did anything wrong, and the two sides have not settled the case. There is no guarantee that money or benefits will ever be obtained. If money or other benefits become available, notice will be provided about how to ask for your share.

YOUR RIGHTS AND OPTIONS

Individual band members must decide whether to stay in the Class, and you have to decide this by [NTD: 120 days from the first publication of notice]. First Nations must decide whether they want to join the class by no later than 120 days before the Class members' claims are determined.

7. What happens if I do nothing at oil? What happens if the First Nation does nothing at all?]

Individuals Band Members: if you do nothing, you will automatically remain in the Class Action. You wif be bound by all Court orders, good or bad. If any money or other benefits are awarded, you may need to take fiction after notice to you to receive any benefits.

First Nations: First Nations must chose to join the Class Action to receive the potential benefits and to be bound by all Court orders, good or bad.

8. What if I don't want to be in the Lawsuit? What if a First Nation wants to join the Lawsuit?

Individual Band Members: If you do not want to be in the lawsuit, you must remove yourself - this is referred to as

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

"opting out." If you remove yourself, you will not receive any benefit that may be obtained from the Class Action. You will not be bound by any Court orders and you keep your right to sue Canada as an individual regarding the issues in this case.

To remove yourself, send a communication that says you want to be removed from the Class in Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Neskantaga First Nation, and Chief Christopher Moonias v. Canada Court File No. CI-19-01-2466, Include your name, address, telephone number, and signature. You can also get an Opt Out Form at [insert Administrator web link]. You must deliver your removal request by [NTD: 120 days from the first publication of notice] to: CA2 Inc., 9 Prince Arthur Avenue, Toronto, Ontario M5R 1B2 or info@classaction2.com. Call 1 (800) 538-0009 if you have any questions about how to get out of the Class Action.

First Nations: First Nations that wish to join the Class Action and assert claims on behalf of their band or community must take action to join-this is referred to as "opting in." To opt in, or to seek more information, please contact the Administrator 1(800)538-0009 or info@classaction2.com. First Nations may also contact Class Counsel and ask for Class Counsel Stephanie Willsey (toll free: 1-877-244-7711 or swillsey@mccarthy.ca) or Kevin Hille at khille@oktlaw.com or (416) 593-3694. Requests by First Nations to opt in must be sent no later than 120 days before Class members' claims are determined.

THE LAWYERS REPRESENTING YOU

10. Do Individual Band Members have a lawyer in the case?

Yes. The Court has appointed McCarthy Tetrault LLP and Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP to represent you and other Class Members as "Class Counsel." You will not be charged legal or other fees or expenses for these lawyers. If you want to be represented by another lawyer, you may hire one to appear in Court for you at your own expense.

11. How will the lawyers be paid?

Class Counsel will only be paid if they win judgement or if there is a settlement. The Court has to also approve their request to be paid. The fees and expenses could be deducted from any money obtained for the Class, or paid separately by the Defendant.

A TRIAL

12. How and when will the Court decide who is right?

If the Class Action is not dismissed or settled, the Plaintiffs must prove their claims at a motion for summary judgement or a trial that will take place in Ottawa, Ontario. During the motion or trial, the Court will hear all of the evidence, so that a decision can be reached about whether the Plaintiffs or Canada is right about the claims in the Class Action. There is no guarantee that the Plaintiffs will win any money or benefits for the Class.

13. Will I get money after the trial?

If the Plaintiffs obtain money or benefits as a result of a trial or settlement, you will be notified about how to ask for a share or what your other options are at that time. These things are not known right now. Important information about the case will be posted on the website [NTD: insert Administrator website] as it becomes available.

I understand that by opting out of this class proceeding, I am confirming that I do not wish to participate in this class proceeding.

I understand that any individual claim I may have must be commenced within a specified limitation period or that claim will be legally barred.

I understand that the certification of this class proceeding suspended the running of the limitation period from the time the class proceeding was filed. The limitation period will resume running against me if I opt out of this class proceeding,

I understand that by opting out, I take full responsibility for the resumption of the running of any relevant limitation period legal steps to protect any claim I may have.

Act, C.C.S.M.c. C. 130

LITIGATION PLAN

FOR COMMON ISSUES, CERTIFICATION AND SUMMARY JUDGMENT MOTIONS

1. Attached as Schedule "A" is the parties' consent timetable, as ordered by the Court. This Litigation Plan is intended to address the Plaintiffs' motions for certification and summary judgement.
2. If the motions are successful, a further plan will be proposed to address any remaining issues, depending on the outcome.
3. Alternatively, if the motion for summary judgement is not successful, the Plaintiffs will propose a further plan for the trial of the common issues.
4. At the certification motion, the Plaintiffs will seek certification of the following common issue to be resolved on behalf of the class as a whole ("Stage 1 Common Issue"):
 - (a) From November 20, 1995 to the present, did the Defendant owe a duty or an obligation to Class members to take reasonable measures to provide them with, or ensure they were provided with, or refrain from barring, adequate access to water that is safe for human use?
5. If the Defendant consents to certification of a class proceeding, the Plaintiffs will negotiate with the Defendant to resolve the common issues. If the negotiations fail, the Plaintiffs will require the delivery of a Statement of Defence, following which they will deliver a record in support of a motion for summary judgement on the Stage 1 Common Issue. At a pre-trial conference following delivery of the Plaintiffs' record, they will ask the Court to determine that this matter is appropriate for summary judgement and schedule a hearing of their motion.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

6. If the Defendant opposes the certification of a class proceeding, the Plaintiffs will require the Defendant to deliver a Statement of Defence. The Plaintiffs will then deliver a record in support of motions for certification and summary judgement on the Stage 1 Common Issue. At a pre-trial conference following the delivery of the Plaintiffs' record, they will ask the Court to determine that this matter is appropriate for summary judgement and schedule the hearing of their motion for summary judgement together with the hearing of their motion for certification.

7. At the certification motion, the Plaintiffs will also seek certification of the following common issues to be resolved on behalf of each Impacted First Nation sub-group, being the members of that First Nation and the First Nation itself, if it is a Participating First Nation ("Stage 1 Common Issues"):

(a) If the answer to common issue 4(a) is "yes", did Canada breach its duties or obligations to members of the sub-group?

(b) If the answer to common issue 7 a) is yes, is any breach of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms ("Charter") saved by s. 1 of the Charter?

(c) If the answer to common issue 7(a) is yes, did the Defendant's breach cause a substantial and unreasonable interference with Class members' or their First Nations' use and enjoyment of their lands?

(d) If the answer to common issue 7(a) is "yes" and the answer to common issue 7(b) is "no", are damages available to members of the sub-group under s. 24(1) of the Charter?

(e) Can the causation of any damages suffered by members of the sub-group be determined as a common issue?

(f) Can the Court make an aggregate assessment of all or part of any damages suffered by members of the sub-group?

(g) Does the Defendant's conduct justify an award of punitive damages, and if so, in what amount?

(b) Should the Court order that the Defendant take measures to provide or ensure that members of the sub-group are provided with, or refrain from barring, adequate access to clean tap water?

(i) If so, what measures should be ordered?

8. If the Stage 1 Common Issue is determined in favour of the Plaintiffs, the parties will conclude a discovery plan to manage the Defendant's timely production of relevant documents in respect of the Stage 2 Common Issues for each Impacted First Nation sub-group.

9. Upon assessing the Defendant's productions, the Plaintiffs will decide whether to bring motions for summary judgement on the Stage 2 Common Issues for some or all of the Impacted First Nation sub-groups, or alternatively, to schedule a trial of these common issues.

NOTIFICATION OF CERTIFICATION AND OPT OUT PROCEDURE

10. On the motion for certification, the Plaintiffs will ask that the Court settle the form and content for notification of the certification of this action (the "Notice of Certification"), the timing and manner of providing Notice of Certification ("Notice Program") and set out an opt-out date as being three (3) months following the date of the Certification Order ("Opt-Out Date"), and an opt-in date as being six (6) months prior to the commencement of the determination of the Stage 2 Common Issues,

11. If a motion for summary judgement is being heard together with a motion for certification, the Plaintiffs will ask the court to render its decision on certification first, direct that notice issue if a class proceeding is certified, and then render its decision on the Stage 1 Common Issue following the Opt-Out Date.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

12. The Plaintiffs will ask the Court to order that the defendant pay the costs of the Notice Program, including the cost of the Administrator.
13. The Plaintiffs will seek an order for the distribution of notice of certification as follows:
- (a) posting the notice on the respective websites of Class Counsel, the Defendant, and the Administrator;
 - (b) publishing the notice in designated newspapers;
 - (c) distributing the notice to all offices of Tataskweyak Cree Nation and the Assembly of First Nations.
 - (d) forwarding the notice to any Class member who requests it and the Chiefs of every First Nation that is eligible to opt into the class, as well as each band office;
 - (e) establishing a national toll-free support line, to provide assistance to Class members, family, guardians, or other persons who make inquiries on their own behalf or on behalf of Class members.
- (a) And by such other notice as the Court directs.
14. The Plaintiffs will ask the Court to approve opt-out and opt-in forms to be used by class members wishing to opt out of, or opt into, the class action, which will require the Class member to provide sufficient information to establish their membership in the Class.

LITIGATION STEPS FOLLOWING THE DETERMINATION OF COMMON ISSUES FAVOURABLE TO THE CLASS

Notice of Resolution of Common Issues

15. The Plaintiffs will ask that the Court settle the form and content for notification of the resolution of the Stage 1 and Stage 2 Common Issues ("Resolution Notice Plan") and the means by which Class members will file claims ("Claim Forms") by a fixed date with the Administrator. The Plaintiffs will also ask that the Court settle an appropriate process to determine any remaining individual issues.

Valuation of Damages

16. If the Common Issues are resolved in favour of the Plaintiffs, the Plaintiffs propose two (2) methods for assessing and distributing damages for the class members as follows:
- (a) Aggregate damages that accrue to individual Class members on a pro rata basis or on a pro rata basis within a sub-group;
 - (b) Aggregate damages that accrue to Participating First Nations on a community basis; and
17. Following the determination of aggregate damages, including punitive damages, additional damages may be awarded in individual issues proceedings.

Assessment of Number of Claimants

18. After the deadline for submitting Claim Forms has expired, the Administrator shall calculate the total number of claimants for the purpose of any pro rata distribution of aggregate damages.

Global Punitive Damages Distribution

19. Should the Court award aggregate damages to the Class or a sub-group, the total amount of damages will be apportioned to the class in a manner to be determined by the Court within a fixed period of time set by the Court from the Notice of Resolution.

Funds not Distributed

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

20. Any monies not distributed will be distributed cy-pres as the Court directs. The Plaintiffs propose that any residual amounts be distributed cy-pres to community organizations that assist with water infrastructure in Impacted First Nations.

Resolution of the Individual Issues

21. Within thirty (30) days of the issuance of the judgment on the common issues, the parties will convene to settle a protocol to resolve any individual issues. If the parties cannot settle such a protocol, the Plaintiffs will move for directions from the Court within sixty (60) days.

MISCELLANEOUS REQUIREMENTS OF THE LITIGATION PLANFunding

22. Class Counsel has entered into an agreement with the Representative Plaintiffs with respect to legal fees and disbursements. This agreement provides that counsel will not receive payment for their work unless and until the class proceeding is successful or costs are recovered from the Defendant.

23. Class Counsel's legal fees are subject to court approval under the Class Proceedings Act,

Claims Administration

24. The Administrator will provide the claims administration for any settlement or judgement achieved. The Administrator will distribute notice in accordance with the Resolution Notice Plan. If a settlement is achieved and a settlement fund is provided, or if judgement results in an award in favour of Class members, the Administrator will administer payments out of the fund to claimants based on the procedures set out above, after approval and/or modification by the Court.

Class Action Website

25. From time to time, Class Counsel will post relevant pleadings and court filings, the latest documents and summaries of the latest developments, anticipated timelines, frequently asked questions and answers, and contact information for class counsel for the information of class members.

Conflict Management

26. Class Counsel and the Plaintiffs have taken appropriate measures to determine that no conflict of interest exists among the members of the Class, and no such conflict is anticipated. Should a conflict arise, McCarthy Tétrault LLP will represent one sub-group, and Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP will represent the other. Should any conflict arise as between First Nations and their members, which is not anticipated given their commonality of interest, McCarthy Tétrault LLP will represent the members and Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP will represent the First Nations.

Applicable Law

27. The applicable law is the Constitution Act, 1982, the Constitution Act, 1867, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the Safe Drinking Water for First Nations Act, S.C. 2013, c. 21, the Indian Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 1-5, the First Nations Land Management Act, S.C. 1999, c. 24, The Class Proceedings Act, C.C.S.M. c. Cl 30, as well as applicable regulations, the common law and the law of Manitoba.

Proceeding under The Class ProceedingsAct, C.C.S.M.c. C. 130ORDER

THIS MOTION for certification, brought by the Plaintiffs was heard on July 14, 2020 at 408 York Ave in Winnipeg, Manitoba.

ON READING the motion record of the Plaintiffs and the consent of the Defendant.

AND ON BEING ADVISED that the parties consent to this order.

1. THIS COURT ORDERS that this action be and is hereby certified as a class proceeding pursuant to The Class Proceedings Act, C.C.S.M.c. C. 130.

2. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that the Class is defined as:

(a) All persons other than Excluded Persons who:

(i) are members of a band, as defined in subsection 2(1) of the Indian Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 1-5 ("First Nation"), the disposition of whose lands is subject to that Act or the First Nations Land Management Act, S.C. 1999, c. 24 ("First Nations Lands"), and whose First Nations Lands were subject to a drinking water advisory (whether a boil water, do not consume, or do not use advisory, or the like) that lasted at least one year from November 20, 1995 to present ("Impacted First Nations");

(ii) had not died before November 20, 2017; and

(iii) ordinarily resided in an Impacted First Nation while it was subject to a drinking water advisory that lasted at least one year; and

(b) Tataskweyak Cree Nation and any other Impacted First Nation that elects to join this action in a representative capacity ("Participating Nations").

"Excluded Persons" are members of Tsuu T'ina Nation, Sucker Creek First Nation, Ermineskin Cree Nation, the Blood Tribe, and the Okanagan Indian Band, and Michael Daryl Isnardy,

3. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that until the claims asserted in this class proceeding are fully and finally decided, settled, discontinued, or abandoned, including the exhaustion of all rights of appeal, leave of the Court is required to commence any other proceeding on behalf of any member of the Class in respect of the claims asserted in this action, save and except for proceedings commenced on behalf of those members of the Class who opt out of this class proceeding in the manner prescribed below.

4. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that the following common issues be and are hereby certified for resolution on behalf of the Class as a whole:

(a) From November 20, 1995 to the present, did the Defendant owe a duty or an obligation to Class members to take reasonable measures to provide them with, or ensure they were provided with, or refrain from barring, adequate access to water that is safe for human use?

5. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that a sub-group be and is hereby recognized for the members of each Impacted First Nation, and the First Nation itself, if it is a Participating Nation;

6. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that the following common issues be and are hereby certified for resolution on behalf of each sub-group:

- (a) If the answer to common issue 4(a) is "yes", did Canada breach its duties or obligations to members of the sub-group?
- (b) If the answer to common issue 6(a) is yes, is any breach of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms ("Charter") saved by s. 1 of the Charter?
- (c) If the answer to common issue 6(a) is yes, did the Defendant's breach cause a substantial and unreasonable interference with Class members' or their First Nations' use and enjoyment of their lands?
- (d) If the answer to common issue 6(a) is "yes" and the answer to common issue 6(b) is "no", are damages available to members of the sub-group under s. 24(1) of the Charter?
- (e) Can the causation of any damages suffered by members of the sub-group be determined as a common issue?
- (f) Can the Court make an aggregate assessment of all or part of any damages suffered by members of the sub-group?
- (g) Does the Defendant's conduct justify an award of punitive damages, and if so, in what amount?
- (h) Should the Court order that the Defendant take measures to provide or ensure that members of the sub-group are provided with, or refrain from barring, adequate access to clean tap water?
- (i) If so, what measures should be ordered?

7. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that Chief Doreen Spence and Tataskweyak Cree Nation are hereby appointed as Representative Plaintiffs for the Class.

8. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that McCarthy Tétrault LLP and Olthuis Kleer Townshend are hereby appointed as class counsel ("Class Counsell").

9. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that the Plaintiffs and the Defendant shall make reasonable efforts to agree on the appointment of an administrator for the purpose of giving notice of the certification of this class proceeding (the "Administrator"). The Parties shall advise the Court of the appointment of the Administrator within sixty (60) days of the date of this Order, failing which the Court shall appoint an appropriately qualified Administrator.

10. THIS COURT ORDERS that class members shall be notified that this action has been certified as a class proceeding as follows, which shall be and is hereby deemed adequate notice:

- (a) by posting the Short Form Notice set out in Schedule "A" and Long Form Notice set out in Schedule "B", and the French language translations of these documents, as agreed upon by the parties, on the respective websites of Class Counsel, the Defendant, and the Administrator;
- (b) by the Administrator publishing the Short Form Notice in the newspapers set out in Schedule "C" attached hereto, in 'A of a page size in the weekend edition of each newspaper, if possible;
- (c) by the Administrator distributing the Short Form Notice to all offices of Tataskweyak Cree Nation and the Assembly of First Nations;
- (d) by the Administrator forwarding the Short Form Notice and Long Form Notice to any Class member who requests them;
- (e) by the Administrator forwarding the Short Form Notice and Long Form Notice to the Chiefs of every Impacted First Nation identified in accordance with paragraph 12, below, except for Excluded Persons;

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

(f) by the Administrator forwarding the Short Form Notice and Long Form Notice to the band office or similar office of every Impacted First Nation identified in accordance with paragraph 12, below, except for Excluded Persons, together with a request that they be posted in a prominent place;

(g) by the Administrator establishing a national toll-free support line, to provide assistance to Class members, family, guardians, or other persons who make inquiries on their own behalf or on behalf of Class members.

11. THIS COURT ORDERS that the Defendant shall be responsible for the cost of giving notice of the certification of a class proceeding as set out in paragraph 10, above.

12. THIS COURT ORDERS that within 30 days of the date of this Order, the Plaintiffs and the Defendant shall exchange a list setting out their best information on the names of the First Nations that are eligible to opt into the Class, and taken together these lists shall constitute the means of identifying the First Nations that are entitled to direct notice for the purpose of paragraphs 10(e) and 10(f), above.

13. THIS COURT ORDERS that a class member may opt out of this class proceeding by delivering & signed opt-out coupon, a form of which is attached as Schedule "D", or some other legible signed request to opt out, within one-hundred-and- twenty-days (120) days of the date on which notice is first published in accordance with paragraph 10(b), above (the "Opt Out Deadline"), to the Administrator. The Short Form Notice and Long Form Notice shall state the Opt Out Deadline and the address of the Administrator for the purpose of receiving opt-out coupons.

14. THIS COURT ORDERS that no Class Member may opt out of this class proceeding after the Opt Out Deadline, except with leave of the Court.

15. THIS COURT ORDERS that the Administrator shall serve on the parties and file with the Court, within sixty (60) days of the expiry of the Opt Out Deadline, an affidavit listing all persons who have opted out of the class proceeding, if any.

16. THIS COURT ORDERS that any Impacted First Nation may opt into this class proceeding by retaining Class Counsel no fewer than one-hundred-and-twenty (120) days before the disposition of any of the common issues (the "Opt In Deadline"), to Class Counsel, at the address set out in paragraph 11, above.

17. THIS COURT ORDERS that no Class member may opt into this class proceeding after the Opt In Deadline, except with leave of the Court.

18. THIS COURT ORDERS that Class Counsel shall serve on the parties and file with the Court, within sixty (60) days of the expiry of the Opt In Deadline, a list of all the Impacted First Nations that have opted into the class proceeding.

19. THIS COURT DECLARES that the Litigation Plan attached hereto as Appendix 1 is a workable method of advancing the class proceeding on behalf of the Class.

20. THIS COURT ORDERS that each party shall bear its own costs of the within motion for certification of this class proceeding.

Legal Notice

Are You a Member of a First Nation That Has Been Subject To A Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory?

A Lawsuit May Affect You and Your First Nation. Please Read this Carefully.

You could be affected by class action litigation regarding the lack of access to clean drinking water on First Nations reserves.

The Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench and the Federal Court of Canada decided that a class action on behalf of a "Class" of both First Nations and band members may proceed. Band members can choose whether to stay in the Class. First Nations can choose whether to join the Class. There is no money available now and no guarantee that the class action will succeed.

The Courts appointed Tataskweyak Cree Nation, Chief Doreen Spence, Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Neskantaga First Nation, and Chief Christopher Moonias to act as representative Plaintiffs for the Class.

What is this case about?

This class action asserts that Canada breached its obligations by failing to ensure that First Nations communities had adequate access to clean drinking water. The class action asserts that members of these communities and the communities themselves were harmed emotionally, physically, financially, and spiritually. The class action asserts that Canada has breached its fiduciary duties, its duty of care, and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The Court has not decided whether any of these assertions are true. If there is no settlement, the Plaintiffs will have to prove their claims in Court.

If you have questions about this class action, you can contact Eric Khan 1(800)538-0009 or info@classaction2.com.

Who represents the class?

The Court has appointed McCarthy Tetrault LLP and Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP to represent the Class as "Class Counsel". You do not have to pay Class Counsel, or anyone else, to participate. If Class Counsel obtains money or benefits for the Class they may ask for lawyers' fees and costs, which would be deducted from any money or benefits recovered for Class members.

Individuals Class Members: Who is included and who is excluded?

Band Members Included: The Class includes band members (as defined by the Indian Act): (a) whose reserve was subject to a drinking water advisory (such as a boil water advisory, etc.) that lasted at least one year at any time from November 20, 1995 to the present; (b) had not died before November 20, 2017; and (c) ordinarily lived on their reserve.

Band Members Excluded: Members of the Tsuu T'ina Nation, Sucker Creek First Nation, Ermineskiti Cree Nation, the Blood Tribe, Okanagan Indian Band, and Michael Darryl Isnardy are excluded from this class action.

Individuals; What are your options?

Stay in the Class: To stay in the Class, you do not have to do anything. If the Class obtains money or benefits, Class Counsel will give notice about how to ask for your share. You will be legally bound by all orders and judgments, and you will not be able to sue Canada about the legal claims in this case.

Staying in the Class will not impact the supports received from community-based agencies that are funded by any government.

Get out of the Class: If you do not want to participate in this class action litigation, you need to remove yourself by opting out. If you opt out, you cannot get money or benefits from this litigation. To opt out, please visit [NTD: Insert Administrator's website for this action] to obtain an opt out coupon, or write to CA2 Inc., 9 Prince Arthur Avenue, Toronto, Ontario M5R 1B2 requesting to be removed from this class action. Please include your name, address, telephone number, and signature. Your request to opt out must be sent by NTD: 120 days from the date of the first publication of notice].

First Nations: What are your options?

Elect to join the Class: First Nations that wish to join the Class and assert claims on behalf of their community must take action to opt in. To opt in, or to seek more information, please contact the Administrator at 1(800)538-0009 or info@classaction2.com. First Nations may also contact Class Counsel Stephanie Willsey (toll free: 1-877-244-7711; swillsev@mccarthy.ca) or Class Counsel Kevin Hille ((416) 598-3694; khille@oktlaw.com). Your request to opt in must be sent no later than 120 days before Class members' claims are determined.

BASIC INFORMATION

1. Why is there a notice?

The Courts have "certified" Class Actions. This means that the lawsuits meets the requirements for class actions and may proceed to trial. If you are included, you may have legal rights and options before the Courts decide whether the claims being made against Canada on your behalf are correct. This notice attempts to explain all of these things.

Chief Justice Joyal of the Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench is currently overseeing the case known as Tataskweyak Cree Nation and Chief Doreen Spence v. Canada. Justice Favel of the Federal Court of Canada is currently overseeing the case known as Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Nesktanaga First Nation, and Chief Christopher Moonias v. Canada. The persons who sued are called the Plaintiffs. Canada is the Defendant. A link to the latest version of the Statement of Claim (the legal document that makes the allegations against Canada) can be found here; <https://www.mccarthy.ca/en/class-action-litigation-drinkiiig-water-a-dvisories-first-nations-0>

2. What is this litigation about?

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

These Class Actions assert that Canada breached its obligations by failing to ensure that First Nations communities had adequate access to clean drinking water. The Class Actions also assert that members of these communities and the communities themselves were harmed emotionally, physically, financially, and spiritually. The Class Actions assert that Canada has breached its fiduciary duties, its duty of care, and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The Courts have not decided (and Canada has not admitted) that any of these assertions are true. If there is no settlement with Canada, the Plaintiffs will have to prove their claims in Court.

If you are having a difficult time dealing with these issues, or have questions about the Class Action you can call 1 (800) 538-0009 for assistance.

3. Why is this a class action?

In a class action, the "representative plaintiffs" (in this case, Tataskweyak Cree Nation, Chief Doreen Spence, Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Nesktanaga First Nation, and Chief Christopher Moonias) sued on behalf of individual band members and First Nations who have similar claims. All of these individual band members are part of the "Class" or "Class Members", as are First Nations who choose to join the Class Action. The Court resolves the issues for all Class Members in one case, except (in the case of individual band members) for those who remove themselves from (opt out of) the Class and (in the case of First Nations) for those that do not join (opt into) the Class Action.

4. Who is a member of the Class?

The Class includes and excludes the following:

All persons, other than "Excluded Persons" who:

- (i) are members of a band, as defined in subsection 2(1) of the Indian Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 1-5 ("First Nation"), the disposition of whose lands is subject to that Act or the First Nations Land Management Act, S.C. 1999, c. 24 ("First Nations Lands"), and whose First Nations Lands were subject to a drinking water advisory (whether a boil water, do not consume, or do not use advisory, or the like) that lasted at least one year from November 20, 1995 to present ("Impacted First Nations");
- (ii) were not dead two years prior to the commencement of this action (that is, by November 20, 2017); and
- (iii) ordinarily resided in an Impacted First Nation while it was subject to a drinking water advisory that lasted at least one year; and
- (iv) Tataskweyak Cree Nation, Curve Lake First Nation, Neskantaga First Nation, and any other Impacted First Nation that elects to join this action in a representative capacity ("Participating Nations").

"Excluded Persons" are members of Tsuu Tina Nation, Sucker Creek First Nation, Ermineskin Cree Nation, the Blood Tribe, Okanagan Indian Band, and Okanagan Indian Band and Michael Darryl Isnardy.

5. What are the Plaintiffs asking for?

The Plaintiffs are asking for money and other benefits for the Class, including water infrastructure. The Plaintiffs are also asking for legal fees and costs, plus interest.

6. Is there any money available to Class Members now?

No money or benefits are available now because the Court has not yet decided whether Canada did anything wrong, and the two sides have not settled the case. There is no guarantee that money or benefits will ever be obtained. If money or other benefits become available, notice will be provided about how to ask for your share.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

YOUR RIGHTS AND OPTIONS

Individual band members must decide whether to stay in the Class, and you have to decide this by [NTD: 120 days from the first publication of notice]. First Nations must decide whether they want to join the class by no later than 120 days before the Class members' claims are determined.

7. What happens if I do nothing at all? What happens if the First Nation does nothing at all?

Individuals Band Members: if you do nothing, you will automatically remain in the Class Action. You will be bound by all Court orders, good or bad. If any money or other benefits are awarded, you may need to take action after notice to you to receive any benefits.

First Nations: First Nations must chose to join the Class Action to receive the potential benefits and to be bound by all Court orders, good or bad.

8. What if I don't want to be in the Lawsuit? What if a First Nation wants to join the Lawsuit?

Individual Band Members: If you do not want to be in the lawsuit, you must remove yourself - this is referred to as "opting out." If you remove yourself, you will not receive any benefit that may be obtained from the Class Action. You will not be bound by any Court orders and you keep your right to sue Canada as an individual regarding the issues in this case.

To remove yourself, send a communication that says you want to be removed from the Class in Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Neskantaga First Nation, and Chief Christopher Moonias v. Canada Court File No. CI-19-01-2466. Include your name, address, telephone number, and signature. You can also get an Opt Out Form at [insert Administrator web link]. You must deliver your removal request by [NTD: 120 days from the first publication of notice] to: CA2 Inc., 9 Prince Arthur Avenue, Toronto, Ontario M5R 1B2 or info@classaction2.com. Call 1 (800) 538-0009 if you have any questions about how to get out of the Class Action.

First Nations: First Nations that wish to join the Class Action and assert claims on behalf of their band or community must take action to join-this is referred to as "opting in." To opt in, or to seek more information, please contact the Administrator 1(800)538-0009 or info@glclassaction2.com. First Nations may also contact Class Counsel and ask for Class Counsel Stephanie Willsey (toll free: 1-877-244-7711 or swillsey@mccarthy.ca or Kevin Hille at khille@oktlaw.com or (416) 598-3694, Requests by First Nations to opt in must be sent no later than 120 days before Class members' claims are determined.

10. Do Individual Band Members have a lawyer in the case?

Yes. The Court has appointed McCarthy Tetrault LLP and Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP to represent you and other Class Members as "Class Counsel." You will not be charged legal or other fees or expenses for these lawyers. If you want to be represented by another lawyer, you may hire one to appear in Court for you at your own expense.

11. How will the lawyers be paid?

Class Counsel will only be paid if they win judgement or if there is a settlement, The Court has to also approve their request to be paid. The fees and expenses could be deducted from any money obtained for the Class, or paid separately by the Defendant.

A TRIAL

12. How and when will the Court decide who is right?

If the Class Action is not dismissed or settled, the Plaintiffs must prove their claims at a motion for summary judgement or a trial that will take place in Ottawa, Ontario. During the motion or trial, the Court will hear all of the evidence, so that a decision can be reached about whether the Plaintiffs or Canada is right about the claims in the Class Action. There is no guarantee that the Plaintiffs will win any money or benefits for the Class.

13. Will I get money after the trial?

If the Plaintiffs obtain money or benefits as a result of a trial or settlement, you will be notified about how to ask for a share or what your other options are at that time. These things are not known right now. Important information about the case will be posted on the website [NTD: insert Administrator website] as it becomes available.

GETTING MORE INFORMATION

14. How do I get more information? How do I get information to people who need it?

You can get more information at <https://classaction2.com/> by calling toll free at 1(800)538-0009, by writing to: CA2 Inc., 9 Prince Arthur Avenue, Toronto, Ontario M5R 1B2, or by emailing: info@classaction2.coni.

First Nations and Individual Band Members may also contact Class Counsel and ask for Class Counsel Stephanie Willsey (toll free: 1-877-244-7711 or swillssv@inccarthv.ca or 66 Wellington Street West, Toronto, Ontario, M5K. 1E6) or Class Counsel Kevin Hille at khille@oktlaw.com or (416) 598-3694 or 250 University Avenue, 8th floor, Toronto, Ontario, M5H 3E5.

Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Neskantaga First Nation, Chief Christopher Moonias, Tataskweyak Cree Nation, Chief Doreen Spence, and Class Counsel kindly ask for the help of health care workers, social workers, First Nation community leaders, family members, caregivers and friends of Class members in getting information to Class Members who would have trouble reading or understanding this notice. More information about this lawsuit is available at the website or by contacting the Administrator or Class Counsel. Please show this notice to people who may be impacted by this lawsuit or their caregivers.

Act, C.C.S.M.c. C. 130

LITIGATION PLAN

FOR COMMON ISSUES, CERTIFICATION AND SUMMARY JUDGMENT MOTIONS

1. Attached as Schedule "A" is the parties' consensual timetable, as ordered by the Court. This Litigation Plan is intended to address the Plaintiffs' motions for certification and summary judgment.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

2. If the motions are successful, a further plan will be proposed to address any remaining issues, depending on the outcome.
3. Alternatively, if the motion for summary judgement is not successful, the Plaintiffs will propose a further plan for the trial of the common issues.
4. At the certification motion, the Plaintiffs will seek certification of the following common issue to be resolved on behalf of the class as a whole (Stage 1 Common Issue):
 - (a) From November 20, 1995 to the present, did the Defendant owe a duty or an obligation to Class members to take reasonable measures to provide them with, or ensure they were provided with, or refrain from barring, adequate access to water that is safe for human use?
5. If the Defendant consents to certification of a class proceeding, the Plaintiffs will negotiate with the Defendant to resolve the common issues. If the negotiations fail, the Plaintiffs will require the delivery of a Statement of Defence, following which they will deliver a record in support of a motion for summary judgement on the Stage 1 Common Issue. At a pre-trial conference following delivery of the Plaintiffs' record, they will ask the Court to determine that this matter is appropriate for summary judgement and schedule a hearing of their motion,
6. If the Defendant opposes the certification of a class proceeding, the Plaintiffs will require the Defendant to deliver a Statement of Defence. The Plaintiffs will then deliver a record in support of motions for certification and summary judgement on the Stage 1 Common Issue. At a pre-trial conference following the delivery of the Plaintiffs' record, they will ask the Court to determine that this matter is appropriate for summary judgement and schedule the hearing of their motion for summary judgement together with the hearing of their motion for certification,
7. At the certification motion, the Plaintiffs will also seek certification of the following common issues to be resolved on behalf of each Impacted First Nation sub-group, being the members of that First Nation and the First Nation itself, if it is a Participating First Nation ("Stage 2 Common Issues"):
 - (a) If the answer to common issue 4(a) is "yes", did Canada breach its duties or obligations to members of the sub-group?
 - (b) If the answer to common issue 7(a) is yes, is any breach of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms ("Charter") saved by s. 1 of the Charter?
 - (c) If the answer to common issue 7(a) is yes, did the Defendant's breach cause a substantial and unreasonable interference with Class members' or their First Nations' use and enjoyment of their lands?
 - (d) If the answer to common issue 7(a) is "yes" and the answer to common issue 7(b) is "no", are damages available to members of the sub-group under s. 24(1) of the Charier!
 - (e) Can the causation of any damages suffered by members of the sub-group be determined as a common issue?
 - (f) Can the Court make an aggregate assessment of all or part of any damages suffered by members of the sub-group?
 - (g) Does the Defendant's conduct justify an award of punitive damages, and if so, in what amount?
 - (h) Should the Court order that the Defendant take measures to provide or ensure that members of the sub-group are provided with, or refrain from barring, adequate access to clean tap water?
 - (i) If so, what measures should be ordered?
8. If the Stage 1 Common Issue is determined in favour of the Plaintiffs, the parties will conclude a discovery plan to manage the Defendant's timely production of relevant documents in respect of the Stage 2 Common Issues for each Impacted First Nation sub-group.

9. Upon assessing the Defendant's productions, the Plaintiffs will decide whether to bring motions for summary judgement on the Stage 2 Common Issues for some or all of the Impacted First Nation sub-groups, or alternatively, to schedule a trial of these common issues.

NOTIFICATION OF CERTIFICATION AND OPT OUT PROCEDURE

10. On the motion for certification, the Plaintiffs will ask that the Court settle the form and content for notification of the certification of this action (the "Notice of Certification"), the timing and manner of providing Notice of Certification ("Notice Program") and set out an opt- out date as being three (3) months following the date of the Certification Order ("Opt-Out Date"), and an opt-in date as being six (6) months prior to the commencement of the determination of the Stage 2 Common Issues.

11. If a motion for summary judgement is being heard together with a motion for certification, the Plaintiffs will ask the court to render its decision on certification first, direct that notice issue if a class proceeding is certified, and then render its decision on the Stage 1 Common Issue following the Opt-Out Date.

12. The Plaintiffs will ask the Court to order that the defendant pay the costs of the Notice Program, including the cost of the Administrator.

13. The Plaintiffs will seek an order for the distribution of notice of certification as follows:

- (a) posting the notice on the respective websites of Class Counsel, the Defendant, and the Administrator;
- (b) publishing the notice in designated newspapers;
- (c) distributing the notice to all offices of Tataskweyak Cree Nation and the Assembly of First Nations.
- (d) forwarding the notice to any Class member who requests it and the Chiefs of every First Nation that is eligible to opt into the class, as well as each band office;
- (e) establishing a national toll-free support line, to provide assistance to Class members, family, guardians, or other persons who make inquiries on their own behalf or on behalf of Class members.
- (a) And by such other notice as the Court directs.

14. The Plaintiffs will ask the Court to approve opt-out and opt-in forms to be used by class members wishing to opt out of, or opt into, the class action, which will require the Class member to provide sufficient information to establish their membership in the Class.

LITIGATION STEPS FOLLOWING THE DETERMINATION OF COMMON ISSUES FAVOURABLE TO THE CLASS

Notice of Resolution of Common Issues

15. The Plaintiffs will ask that the Court settle the form and content for notification of the resolution of the Stage 1 and Stage 2 Common Issues ("Resolution Notice Plan") and the means by which Class members will file claims ("Claim Forms") by a fixed date with the Administrator, The Plaintiffs will also ask that the Court settle an appropriate process to determine any remaining individual issues.

Valuation of Damages

16. If the Common issues are resolved in favour of the Plaintiffs, the Plaintiffs propose two (2) methods for assessing and distributing damages for the class members as follows:

- (a) Aggregate damages that accrue to individual Class members on a pro rata basis or on a pro rata basis within a sub-group;

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

(b) Aggregate damages that accrue to Participating First Nations on a community basis; and

17. Following the determination of aggregate damages, including punitive damages, additional damages may be awarded in individual issues proceedings.

Assessment of Number of Claimants

18. After the deadline for submitting Claim Forms has expired, the Administrator shall calculate the total number of claimants for the purpose of any pro rata distribution of aggregate damages.

Global Punitive Damages Distribution

19. Should the Court award aggregate damages to the Class or a sub-group, the total amount of damages will be apportioned to the class in a manner to be determined by the Court within a fixed period of time set by the Court from the Notice of Resolution,

Funds not Distributed

20. Any monies not distributed will be distributed cy-pres as the Court directs. The Plaintiffs propose that any residual amounts be distributed cy-pres to community organizations that assist with water infrastructure in Impacted First Nations.

Resolution of the Individual Issues

21. Within thirty (30) days of the issuance of the judgment on the common issues, the parties will convene to settle a protocol to resolve any individual issues. If the parties cannot settle such a protocol, the Plaintiffs will move for directions from the Court within sixty (60) days.

MISCELLANEOUS REQUIREMENTS OF THE LITIGATION PLAN Funding

22. Class Counsel has entered into an agreement with the Representative Plaintiffs with respect to legal fees and disbursements. This agreement provides that counsel will not receive payment for their work unless and until the class proceeding is successful or costs are recovered from the Defendant.

23. Class Counsel's legal fees are subject to court approval under the Class Proceedings Act.

Claims Administration

24. The Administrator will provide the claims administration for any settlement or judgement achieved, The Administrator will distribute notice in accordance with the Resolution Notice Plan. If a settlement is achieved and a settlement fund is provided, or if judgement results in an award in favour of Class members, the Administrator will administer payments out of the fund to claimants based on the procedures set out above, after approval and/or modification by the Court.

Class Action Website

25. From time to time, Class Counsel will post relevant pleadings and court filings, the latest documents and summaries of the latest developments, anticipated timelines, frequently asked questions and answers, and contact information for class counsel for the information of class members.

Conflict Management

26. Class Counsel and the Plaintiffs have taken appropriate measures to determine that no conflict of interest exists among the members of the Class, and no such conflict is anticipated. Should a conflict arise, McCarthy Tetrault LLP will represent one sub-group, and Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP will represent the other. Should any conflict arise as between First Nations and their members, which is not anticipated given their commonality of interest, McCarthy Tetrault LLP will represent the members and Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP will represent the First Nations.

Applicable Law

27. The applicable law is the Constitution Act, 1982, the Constitution Act, 1867, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the Safe Drinking Water for First Nations Act, S.C. 2013, c. 21, the Indian Act, R.S.C, 1985, c. 1-5, the First Nations Land Management Act, S.C. 1999, c. 24, The Class Proceedings Act, C.C.S.M, c. Cl 30, as well as applicable regulations, the common law and the law of Manitoba.

Litigation on Drinking Water

Advisories on First Nations Lands

Reference is made to the settlement agreement (the "Settlement Agreement") dated September [*], 2021, between the Attorney General of Canada ("Canada"), Curve Lake First Nation and Chief Emily Whetung on her own behalf and on behalf of all members of Curve Lake First Nation and Neskantaga First Nation; Chief Wayne Moonias and Former Chief Christopher Moonias on their own behalf and on behalf of all members of Neskantaga First Nation, and Tataskweyak Cree Nation and Chief Doreen Spence on her own behalf and on behalf of all members of Tataskweyak Cree Nation. Capitalized terms used but not defined in this Band Council Confirmation have the meanings given to them in the Settlement Agreement.

In accordance with the Settlement Agreement, a First Nation Class Member may provide the Administrator with a declaration identifying Individual Class Members who were ordinarily resident on a Reserve of that First Nation Class Member between November 20, 1995, and June 20, 2021 while a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory was in place on that Reserve (collectively, the "Identified Class Members"). Ordinarily resident means that a person lived on the Reserve more than that person lived anywhere else, or a person who was eighteen (18) years of age or younger at the applicable time and habitually lived on an affected Reserve but lived elsewhere for a portion of the year to attend an educational facility. Identified Class Members must have been ordinarily resident on the Reserve for at least one year during a period in which a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory was in effect.

DATED as of the day of , 202_.

APPENDIX "A"

Identified Class Members

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

(d) whether each of the Drinking Water Advisories in subsection (c) was a Boil Water Advisory, Do Not Consume Advisory, or Do Not Use Advisory; and

(e) whether the First Nations in subsection (a) are Remote or Non-Remote First Nations.

2. Promptly after receipt of the List, the Administrator shall send a Claims Form to each band office or similar office identified in subsection 1 (b) with a request that a copy of the Claims Form be provided to members of that First Nation. The Administrator shall send the Claims Forms by email or, if no email address is provided, by regular mail if an address is provided. If an email is undelivered or undeliverable, the Administrator shall send the Claims Form by regular mail. If regular mail is undelivered or undeliverable, the Administrator shall have no further obligation to make efforts to provide a copy of the Claims Form to that First Nation.

3. Promptly after receipt of the List, the Administrator shall use all reasonable efforts to retain a community liaison from each First Nation on the List, or an appropriate tribal council, for the purposes of making all reasonable efforts to:

(a) provide Claims Forms to members of that First Nation;

(b) encourage eligible members of that First Nation to submit Claims Forms;

(c) assist members of that First Nation with the completion and submission of their Claims Forms, including by referring them to the Administrator;

(d) advise First Nation Class Members that they must give notice of Acceptance if they wish to participate in the Agreement: and

(e) advise First Nation Class Members that they can submit a Band Council Confirmation, if they wish.

4. The Administrator shall make the Claims Form available on its website and shall email or mail a Claims Form to any person who requests one.

5. The Administrator shall include a postage paid return envelope with every Claims Form sent by mail.

6. The Administrator shall maintain a database of all Claims Forms and Band Council Confirmations it receives. If the Parties receive Claims Forms or Band Council Confirmations, they shall immediately forward them to the Administrator.

7. Upon receipt of a Claims Form or Band Council Confirmation, the Administrator shall examine the Claims Form or Band Council Confirmation, as applicable, to determine if it is complete, and if it is not complete, the Administrator shall make all reasonable efforts to contact the Claimant or First Nation Class Member, as applicable, to obtain further information to complete the Claims Form or Band Council Confirmation. However, the Administrator will have discretion to accept minor deficiencies and if the Administrator accepts a Claims Form or Band Council Confirmation with minor deficiencies, the Administrator need not contact the Claimant or First Nation Class Member for more information. Claimants and First Nation Class Members will have ninety (90) days from the date on which they are contacted to address any identified deficiencies, failing which the Administrator will provide to the Claimant or the First Nation Class Member, as applicable, in writing its refusal to accept the Claims Form or the Band Council Confirmation and the reason for its refusal. Notwithstanding the foregoing, the Administrator may accept such part of an incomplete Band Council Confirmation that provides sufficient information to make an Eligibility Decision.

8. Where a Claims Form or Band Council Confirmation contains minor omissions or errors, the Administrator shall correct such omissions or errors if the information necessary to correct the error or omission is readily available to the Administrator.

9. Each Claimant may only submit one (1) Claims Form in respect of all such Claimant's Claims, and an Estate Executor, Estate Claimant, or Personal Representative may submit only one (1) Claims Form on behalf of a particular Claimant.

ELIGIBILITY DECISIONS FOR INDIVIDUAL CLASS MEMBERS

10. Promptly on receipt of a Claims Form, the Administrator shall make an Eligibility Decision in accordance with the Agreement with reference to the Claims Form, the List, any relevant Band Council Confirmation, any other information received from the Parties, and other information the Administrator considers appropriate. Promptly on receipt of a Band Council Confirmation, the Administrator shall make Eligibility Decisions in accordance with the Agreement (including Section 7.02(2)) with respect to the Claimants identified therein, with reference to the Band Council Confirmation, any Claims Forms received in respect of the Claimants listed in the Band Council Confirmation, the List, any other information received from the Parties, and other information the Administrator considers appropriate.

11. If a Claims Form or Band Council Confirmation indicates that the Claimant was Ordinarily Resident on a Reserve that is on the List for at least one (1) year during a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory, but the Claimant is a member of a First Nation that is not an Impacted First Nation, the Claimant is nevertheless eligible for inclusion in the Class. If a Claims Form or Band Council Confirmation indicates that the Claimant was Ordinarily Resident on a Reserve that is not on the List, and which the Administrator has not previously considered, the Administrator:

(a) shall consult with the Settlement Implementation Committee before determining whether the Reserve should be added to the List on the basis that it was subject to a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory during the Class Period, and if so, when the Reserve was subject to a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory; and

(b) may request further information or evidence before making an Eligibility Decision.

12. If the Administrator determines that that the Claimant is not an Individual Class Member, the Administrator shall promptly inform the Claimant:

(a) of the Administrator's decision;

(b) the reasons for the Administrator's decision that the Claimant is not an Individual Class Member; and

(c) that the Claimant may appeal the Administrator's decision to the Third-Party Assessor in accordance with this Claims Process and the Agreement.

INDIVIDUAL CLASS MEMBER COMPENSATION

13. If the Administrator makes an Eligibility Decision that a Claimant is an Individual Class Member in accordance with the Agreement, the Administrator shall quantify the amount payable to that Individual Class Member from the Trust Fund in accordance with Section 8.01 and Schedule G of the Agreement, the Administrator shall request such funds from the Trustee, the Trustee shall pay such funds to the Administrator, and the Administrator shall pay such funds in accordance with the Agreement.

14. When the Administrator pays compensation in accordance with Section 8.01 of the Agreement and Section 13 of this Schedule F. the Administrator shall also inform the Individual Class Member:

(a) how the amount paid was calculated; and

(b) that the Individual Class Member may appeal the Administrator's quantification of the amount payable to the Third-Party Assessor in accordance with this Claims Process and the Agreement.

SPECIFIED INJURIES COMPENSATION

15. On reasonable request, Class Counsel shall assist a Claimant with their claim for Specified Injuries Compensation or their appeal from a Specified Injuries Decision at no additional cost to the Claimant, and Class Counsel's fees shall be payable in accordance with Section 18.02 of the Agreement.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

16. A Confirmed Individual Class Member is eligible for Specified Injuries Compensation if they meet the criteria in Section 8.02 of the Agreement.

17. To support their claim for Specified Injuries Compensation, a Claimant may, at their option, submit some or all of the following to the Administrator with their Claims Form:

- (a) medical records of the injury and its cause;
- (b) other records, including written records, photographs, and videos, of the injury and its cause;
- (c) a written statement; and
- (d) oral testimony.

18. For greater certainty, the process of claiming compensation for Specified Injuries is intended to be non-traumatizing and Section 17 of this Schedule F does not prevent a Claimant from establishing their eligibility for Specified Injuries Compensation on the basis of their Claims Form alone.

19. If a Claimant claims Specified Injuries Compensation but the Administrator determines that said Claimant is not entitled to Specified Injuries Compensation for the injuries claimed because the injuries are not contemplated in the Specified Injuries Compensation Grid, the Administrator shall promptly comply with Section 7.04 of the Agreement.

20. If a Claimant claims Specified Injuries Compensation but the Administrator determines that said Claimant is not entitled to Specified Injuries Compensation for the injuries claimed for any reason other than the fact that the injuries are not contemplated in the Specified Injuries Compensation Grid, the Administrator shall promptly inform said Claimant:

- (a) of the Administrator's decision;
- (b) the reasons for the Administrator's decision that the Claimant is not entitled to Specified Injuries Compensation; and
- (c) that the Claimant may appeal the Administrator's decision to the Third-Party Assessor in accordance with this Claims Process and the Agreement.

21. If the Administrator determines that a Confirmed Individual Class Member is entitled to Specified Injuries Compensation, the Administrator shall quantify the amount payable to that Confirmed Individual Class Member from the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund in accordance with Section 8.02 of the Agreement and Schedule H.

22. Payment of Specified Injuries Compensation will be made as provided in Section 8.02 of the Agreement. The Administrator shall request such funds from the Trustee, the Trustee shall pay such funds to the Administrator, and the Administrator shall pay such funds in accordance with the Agreement.

23. When the Administrator pays Specified Injuries Compensation to a Confirmed Individual Class Member in accordance with Section 8.02 of the Agreement and this Schedule F the Administrator shall also inform the Confirmed Individual Class Member:

- (a) of how the amount paid was calculated; and
- (b) that the Individual Class Member may appeal the Administrator's quantification of the amount payable to the Third-Party Assessor in accordance with this Claims Process and the Agreement.

FIRST NATIONS CLASS MEMBER DAMAGES

24. Upon receipt of an Acceptance, the Administrator shall determine whether the First Nation is eligible to be a First Nation Class Member. Inclusion on the List is conclusive proof that the First Nation is eligible to be a First Nation Class Member. If the First Nation is not on the List, the Administrator:

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- (a) shall consult with the Settlement Implementation Committee before determining whether the First Nation is eligible to be a First Nation Class Member; and
 - (b) may request additional information or evidence before making the determination as to whether a First Nation is eligible to be a First Nation Class Member.
25. If the Administrator determines that that a First Nation is not a First Nation Class Member under Section 24 of this Schedule F, the Administrator shall promptly inform the First Nation:
- (a) of the Administrator's decision;
 - (b) of the reasons for the Administrator's decision that the First Nation is not a First Nation Class Member; and
 - (c) that the First Nation may appeal the Administrator's decision to the Third-Party Assessor in accordance with this Claims Process and the Agreement.
26. If the Administrator determines that a First Nation that has submitted an Acceptance is a First Nations Class Member, the Administrator shall pay the Base Payment and First Nation Damages in accordance with Section 8.03 of the Agreement. The Administrator shall request such funds from the Trustee, the Trustee shall pay such funds to the Administrator, and the Administrator shall pay such funds in accordance with the Agreement.
27. Whenever the Administrator pays First Nation Damages to a First Nation Class Member, the Administrator shall inform the First Nation Class Member:
- (a) of how it calculated the amount paid; and
 - (b) that the First Nation Class Member may appeal the Administrator's quantification of the amount payable to the Third-Party Assessor in accordance with this Claims Process and the Agreement.

APPEALS

28. When a Claimant, Individual Class Member, First Nation, or First Nation Class Member as the case may be (an "Appellant"), wants to appeal a decision of the Administrator, the Appellant shall within sixty (60) days of receiving the Administrator's decision provide to the Administrator a written statement identifying the decision the Appellant wants to appeal and the reasons why the Appellant believes that the Administrator erred.
29. The Administrator shall immediately forward the materials it receives under Section 28 of this Schedule F to the Third-Party Assessor for determination.
30. When considering an appeal, the Third-Party Assessor may consult the Appellant, the Administrator, and the Settlement Implementation Committee. Without limitation, the Third-Party Assessor may request evidence from the Appellant and the Administrator.
31. The Third-Party Assessor shall adjudicate an appeal as soon as practicable.
32. Upon making a decision, the Third-Party Assessor shall promptly inform the Appellant and the Administrator:
- (a) of the Third-Party Assessor's decision; and
 - (b) the reasons for the Third-Party Assessor's decision.
33. A decision of the Third-Party Assessor is final and not subject to appeal or review.
34. For greater certainty, there is no right of appeal to the Third-Party Assessor where an Individual Class Member claims Specified Injuries Compensation for injuries that the Administrator determines are not contemplated in the Specified Injuries Compensation Grid. Instead, Section 7.04 of the Agreement applies.

GENERAL

35. Unless otherwise specified in the Agreement or this Claims Process, the standard of proof in all cases shall be a balance of probabilities in accordance with the Agreement, and the Third-Party Assessor shall apply a standard of review of correctness in accordance with the Agreement. For greater certainty, for the Administrator or Third- Party Assessor to conclude that a Claimant or First Nation is eligible for compensation, in accordance with the Agreement and unless otherwise specified in the Agreement or this Claims Process, the Administrator or Third-Party Assessor must conclude that it is more likely than not that the Claimant or First Nation is eligible for compensation on the information available to the Administrator or Third-Party Assessor.

36. To determine whether i) a Claimant is an Individual Class Member and eligible for compensation under the Agreement or (ii) a First Nation is a First Nation Class Member, the Administrator and Third-Party Assessor may:

- (a) request more information from a Claimant, a First Nation or the Parties; and
- (b) interview a Claimant or representative of a First Nation.

37. The Parties may amend this Claims Process on consent to make procedural changes, such as the extension of time, and to adopt protocols and procedures, without obtaining Court approval, so long as such amendments do not substantively affect the rights and remedies set out in the Claims Process. The Parties shall obtain the Courts' approval of substantive changes to this Claims Process.

38. The Administrator shall provide a bilingual (English and French) toll-free support line to assist Claimants, their families, their guardians, or other persons who make inquiries on behalf of Claimants.

39. After the distribution, in accordance with this Agreement, of the:

- (a) Trust Fund, including any Trust Fund Surplus
- (b) Specified Injuries Compensation Fund; and
- (c) First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund, the Administrator shall apply to be discharged and shall file with the Courts a report in accordance with Section 21.02 of the Agreement, containing its best information respecting the following:

- (d) the total number of Individual Class Members and First Nation Class Members;
- (e) the number of Claimants who submitted a Claims Form and the number who were paid Individual Damages;
- (f) the number of Claimants who applied for Specified Injuries Compensation and the number who were paid Specified Injuries Compensation;
- (g) the number of First Nations Class Members who provided Acceptance of the Agreement;
- (h) the amounts distributed to Class Members or on behalf of Class Members, as Individual Damages, Specified Injuries Compensation, or First Nation Damages, and a description of how the amounts were distributed;
- (i) the number of Claims by First Nation and the amounts paid by First Nation; and (j) the costs associated with the Administrator's work.

40. Any Party or the Administrator may move to have any part of the report contemplated by Section 39 of this Schedule F placed under seal.

41. Upon being discharged as Administrator, the Administrator shall retain in hard copy or electronic form all documents relating to a Claim for two (2) years, after which the Administrator shall destroy the documents.

Mental Health Exemplar Symptoms

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Major Depressive Disorder 	A. Five (or more) of the following symptoms have been present during the same 2-week period and represent a change from previous functioning; at least one of the symptoms is either (1) depressed mood or (2) loss of interest or pleasure. Do not include symptoms that are clearly attributable to another medical condition. <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Depressed mood most of the day, nearly every day, as indicated by either subjective report (e.g., feels sad, empty, hopeless) or observation made by others (e.g., appears tearful). (Note: In children and adolescents, can be irritable mood.) 2. Markedly diminished interest or pleasure in all, or almost all, activities most of the day, nearly every day (as indicated by either subjective account or observation). 3. Significant weight loss when not dieting or weight gain (e.g., a change of more than 5% of body weight in a month), or decrease or increase in appetite nearly every day. (Note: In children, consider failure to make expected weight gain.) 4. Insomnia or hypersomnia nearly every day. 5. Psychomotor agitation or retardation nearly every day (observable by others, not merely subjective feelings of restlessness or being slowed down). 6. Fatigue or loss of energy nearly every day. 7. Feelings of worthlessness or excessive or inappropriate guilt (which may be delusional) nearly every day (not merely self-reproach or guilt about being sick). 8. Diminished ability to think or concentrate, or indecisiveness, nearly every day (either by subjective account or as observed by others). 9. Recurrent thoughts of death (not just fear of dying), recurrent suicidal ideation without a specific plan, or a suicide attempt or a specific plan for committing suicide. B. The symptoms cause clinically significant distress or impairment in social, occupational, or other important areas of functioning. C. The episode is not attributable to the physiological effects of a substance or another medical condition.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Persistent Depressive Disorder (Dysthymia) 	This disorder represents a consolidation of DSM-IV-defined chronic major depressive disorder and dysthymic disorder. A. Depressed mood for most of the day, for more days than not, as indicated by either subjective account or observation by others, for at least 2 years. Note: In children and adolescents, mood can be irritable and duration must be at least 1 year. B. Presence, while depressed, of two (or more) of the following: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Poor appetite or overeating. 2. Insomnia or hypersomnia. 3. Low energy or fatigue.

	4. Low self-esteem. 5. Poor concentration or difficulty making decisions. 6. Feelings of hopelessness. C. During the 2-year period (1 year for children or adolescents) of the disturbance, the individual has never been without the symptoms in Criteria A and B for more than 2 months at a time. D. Criteria for a major depressive disorder may be continuously present for 2 years. E. There has never been a manic episode or a hypomanic episode, and criteria have never been met for cyclothymic disorder. F. The disturbance is not better explained by a persistent schizoaffective disorder, schizophrenia, delusional disorder, or other specified or unspecified schizophrenia spectrum and other psychotic disorder. G. The symptoms are not attributable to the physiological effects of a substance (e.g., a drug of abuse, a medication) or another medical condition (e.g., hypothyroidism). H. The symptoms cause clinically significant distress or impairment in social, occupational, or other important areas of functioning.
• Panic Disorder	A. Recurrent unexpected panic attacks. A panic attack is an abrupt surge of intense fear or intense discomfort that reaches a peak within minutes, and during which time four (or more) of the following symptoms occur: Note: The abrupt surge can occur from a calm state or an anxious state. <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Palpitations, pounding heart, or accelerated heart rate. 2. Sweating. 3. Trembling or shaking. 4. Sensations of shortness of breath or smothering. 5. Feelings of choking. 6. Chest pain or discomfort. 7. Nausea or abdominal distress. 8. Feeling dizzy, unsteady, light-headed, or faint. 9. Chills or heat sensations. 10. Paresthesias (numbness or tingling sensations). 11. Derealization (feelings of unreality) or depersonalization (being detached from oneself). 12. Fear of losing control or "going crazy." 13. Fear of dying. Note: Culture-specific symptoms (e.g., tinnitus, neck soreness, headache, uncontrollable screaming or crying) may be seen. Such symptoms should not count as one of the four required symptoms. B. At least one of the attacks has been followed by 1 month (or more) of one or both of the following: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Persistent concern or worry about additional panic attacks or their consequences (e.g., losing control, having a heart attack, "going crazy"). 2. A significant maladaptive change in behavior related to the attacks (e.g., behaviors designed to avoid having panic attacks, such as avoidance of exercise or unfamiliar situations).

	C. The disturbance is not attributable to the physiological effects of a substance (e.g., a drug of abuse, a medication) or another medical condition (e.g., hyperthyroidism, cardiopulmonary disorders). D. The disturbance is not better explained by another mental disorder (e.g., the panic attacks do not occur only in response to feared social situations, as in social anxiety disorder; in response to circumscribed phobic objects or situations, as in specific phobia; in response to obsessions, as in obsessive-compulsive disorder; in response to reminders of traumatic events, as in posttraumatic stress disorder; or in response to separation from attachment figures, as in separation anxiety disorder).
• Alcohol Use Disorder	A. A problematic pattern of alcohol use leading to clinically significant impairment or distress, as manifested by at least two of the following, occurring within a 12-month period: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Alcohol is often taken in larger amounts or over a longer period than was intended. 2. There is a persistent desire or unsuccessful efforts to cut down or control alcohol use. 3. A great deal of time is spent in activities necessary to obtain alcohol, use alcohol, or recover from its effects. 4. Craving, or a strong desire or urge to use alcohol. 5. Recurrent alcohol use resulting in a failure to fulfil major role obligations at work, school, or home. 6. Continued alcohol use despite having persistent or recurrent social or interpersonal problems caused or exacerbated by the effects of alcohol. 7. Important social, occupational, or recreational activities are given up or reduced because of alcohol use. 8. Recurrent alcohol use in situations in which it is physically hazardous. 9. Alcohol use is continued despite knowledge of having a persistent or recurrent physical or psychological problem that is likely to have been caused or exacerbated by alcohol. 10. Tolerance, as defined by either of the following: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> a. A need for markedly increased amounts of alcohol to achieve intoxication or desired effect. b. A markedly diminished effect with continued use of the same amount of alcohol. 11. Withdrawal, as manifested by either of the following: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> a. The characteristic withdrawal syndrome for alcohol (refer to DSM-5 for further details). b. Alcohol (or a closely related substance, such as a benzodiazepine) is taken to relieve or avoid withdrawal symptoms.
• Cannabis Use Disorder	A. A problematic pattern of cannabis use leading to clinically significant impairment or distress, as manifested by at least two of the following, occurring within a 12-month period: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. • Specific Phobia	A. Marked fear or anxiety about a specific object or situation (e.g., flying, heights, animals, receiving an injection, seeing blood). Note: In children, the fear or anxiety may be expressed by crying, tantrums, freezing, or clinging. B. The phobic object or situation almost always provokes immediate fear or anxiety. C. The phobic object or situation is actively avoided or endured with intense fear or anxiety. D. The fear or anxiety is out of proportion to the actual danger posed by the specific object or situation and to the sociocultural context. E. The fear, anxiety, or avoidance is persistent, typically lasting for 6 months or more. F. The fear, anxiety, or avoidance causes clinically significant distress or impairment in social, occupational, or other important areas of functioning. G. The disturbance is not better explained by the symptoms of another mental disorder, including fear, anxiety, and avoidance of situations associated with panic-like symptoms or other incapacitating symptoms (as in agoraphobia); objects or situations related to obsessions (as in obsessive-compulsive disorder); reminders of traumatic events (as in posttraumatic stress disorder); separation from home or attachment figures (as in separation anxiety disorder); or social situations (as in social anxiety disorder).
• Adjustment Disorder	A. The development of emotional or behavioral symptoms in response to an identifiable stressor(s) occurring within 3 months of the onset of the stressor(s). B. These symptoms or behaviors are clinically significant, as evidenced by one or both of the following: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Marked distress that is out of proportion to the severity or intensity of the stressor, taking into account the external context and the cultural factors that might influence symptom severity and presentation. 2. Significant impairment in social, occupational, or other important areas of functioning. C. The stress-related disturbance does not meet the criteria for another mental disorder and is not merely an exacerbation of a pre-existing mental disorder. D. The symptoms do not represent normal bereavement. E. Once the stressor (or its consequences) has terminated, the symptoms do not persist for more than an additional 6 months.
• Generalized Anxiety Disorder	A. Excessive anxiety and worry (apprehensive expectation), occurring more days than not for at least 6 months, about a number of events or activities (such as work or school performance). B. The person finds it difficult to control the worry. C. The anxiety and worry are associated with three (or more) of the following six symptoms (with at least some symptoms having been present for more days than not for the past 6 months):

Note: Only one item is required in children <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Restlessness or feeling keyed up or on edge. 2. Being easily fatigued. 3. Difficulty concentrating or mind going blank. 4. Irritability. 5. Muscle tension. 6. Sleep disturbance (difficulty falling or staying asleep, or restless unsatisfying sleep). D. The anxiety, worry, or physical symptoms cause clinically significant distress or impairment in social, occupational, or other important areas of functioning. E. The disturbance is not attributable to the physiological effects of a substance (e.g., a drug of abuse, a medication) or another medical condition (e.g., hyperthyroidism). F. The disturbance is not better explained by another mental disorder (e.g., anxiety or worry about having panic attacks in panic disorder, negative evaluation in social anxiety disorder [social phobia], contamination or other obsessions in obsessive-compulsive disorder, separation from attachment figures in separation anxiety disorder, reminders of traumatic events in posttraumatic stress disorder, gaining weight in anorexia nervosa, physical complaints in somatic symptom disorder, perceived appearance flaws in body dysmorphic disorder, having a serious illness in illness anxiety disorder, or the content of delusional beliefs in schizophrenia or delusional disorder).

When did you live on a Reserve during a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory?

A temporary absence from your ordinary residence does not end a period of ordinary residence. Your ordinary residence changes only if you spend more time living somewhere else in a given year. If you were 18 years old or younger and ordinarily resided on a Reserve during a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory, but were away from that Reserve for a portion of the year to attend an educational facility, you can still count that Reserve as your ordinary residence. Complete the dates below for the time that you were ordinarily resident on a Reserve during a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory on that Reserve. Use additional rows if you were ordinarily resident on more than one Reserve that was subject to a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory.

Part 6: Specified Injuries Compensation

This part is optional

Eligibility for Specified Injuries Compensation

You are eligible for additional compensation if you have suffered one of the Specified Injuries on the list below. To receive money for those injuries, you must establish that your Specified Injury caused by:

1. using treated or tap water in accordance with a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory; or
2. by restricted access to treated or tap water caused by a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory.

List of Specified Injuries:

You may establish your claim through this Claims Form or through additional documents or records of the Specified Injury or its cause, such as medical records. If you want to provide an oral statement about your Specific Injury and its cause, please contact the Administrator at [•].

You must complete an additional declaration with a witness at the end of this Claims Form to be eligible for Specific Injuries Compensation.

It is optional to claim Specified Injuries Compensation. You may be eligible for compensation just for living through a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory on a Reserve. But if you do not claim Specified Injuries Compensation now, you will not have another chance.

Class Counsel can help you claim Specified Injuries Compensation. There is no charge to you. Please contact [•].

The Specified Injuries eligible for compensation are serious and the symptoms must persist for at least one month. Specified Injuries Compensation is paid in addition to individual Damages for the ordinary hardships of living through a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory.

Do you want to claim Specified Injuries Compensation?

Check the appropriate box.

SCHEDULE K

COMMITMENT DISPUTE RESOLUTION PROCESS (AND APPENDIX)

See attached. 1.

1. Fixing Things Together: Commitment Dispute Resolution Process1.1. General

1.1.1. This Schedule applies to disagreements that arise between Canada and Underserved First Nations about whether Canada is meeting its Commitment under the Agreement and about proposed plans for meeting the Commitment (collectively, "Disagreements").

1.1.2. Canada and the Class share the following objectives:

1.1.2.1. to cooperate with each other to ensure that the Commitment is always met;

1.1.2.2. to strive for consensus and harmony;

1.1.2.3. to agree on plans to meet the Commitment in a timely and expeditious fashion ("Remediation Plans");

1.1.2.4. to identify Disagreements quickly and resolve them in the most expeditious and cost-effective manner possible;

1.1.2.5. to resolve Disagreements in a non-adversarial, collaborative and informal atmosphere;

1.1.2.6. to resolve Disagreements in a manner which reflects and incorporates the legal traditions and protocols of the Underserved First Nation;

1.1.2.7. to locate the process for resolving Disagreements within the communities of the Underserved First Nations and conduct those processes in a way that is accessible to and respectful of those communities.

1.1.3. Except as otherwise provided, Canada and any Underserved First Nation may agree to vary a procedural requirement contained in this Schedule, as it applies to a particular Disagreement.

1.1.4. Canada and the Class desire and expect that most Disagreements will be resolved by informal discussions without the necessity of invoking this Schedule.

1.1.5. Except as otherwise provided in this Agreement, Disagreements not resolved informally will progress, until resolved, through the following stages:

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

1.1.5.1. Stage One: formal, unassisted efforts to reach agreement on a Remediation Plan between Canada and the Underserved First Nation, in collaborative negotiations in accordance with Appendix K-1;

1.1.5.2. Stage Two: structured efforts to reach agreement between or among the Canada and the Underserved First Nation in a mediation in accordance with Appendix K-2; and

1.1.5.3. Stage Three: final adjudication in arbitral proceedings in accordance with Appendix K-3.

1.1.6. Except as otherwise provided in this Agreement, no one may refer a Disagreement to final adjudication in Stage Three without first proceeding through Stage One and Stage Two as required in this Schedule.

1.1.7. Nothing in this Schedule prevents Canada or an Underserved First Nation from commencing arbitral proceedings on an urgent basis at any time:

1.1.7.1. to address an urgent loss of regular access to water; and/or

1.1.7.2. to obtain interlocutory or interim relief that is otherwise available pending resolution of the Disagreement under this Schedule, and the Arbitrator shall have the power to hear such hearings on an urgent basis and grant such interlocutory or interim relief.

1.2. Stage One: Collaborative Negotiations

1.2.1. If a Disagreement is not resolved by informal discussion and an Underserved First Nation wishes to invoke this Schedule, that Underserved First Nation will deliver a notice to Canada, requiring the commencement of collaborative negotiations.

1.2.2. Upon receiving the notice, Canada and the Underserved First Nation shall participate in the collaborative negotiations.

1.2.3. Collaborative negotiations must be conducted in a manner which:

1.2.3.1. is in good faith;

1.2.3.2. creates a safe and respectful space for members of the Underserved First Nation participating;

1.2.3.3. promotes mutual understanding and transparency about the issues in the Disagreement, by, among other things, Canada providing sufficient information and sufficiently explaining those issues in a way that is accessible to members of the Underserved First Nation;

1.2.3.4. enables and promotes the use of Indigenous languages;

1.2.3.5. is located within the community of the Underserved First Nation and is accessible to its members;

1.2.3.6. respects the legal traditions and protocols of the Underserved First Nation, including:

1.2.3.6.1. seating arrangements;

1.2.3.6.2. order of speaking;

1.2.3.6.3. prayers, speeches and acknowledgments;

1.2.3.6.4. exchange of gifts;

1.2.3.6.5. the wisdom of elders;

1.2.3.6.6. the importance of traditional teachings;

1.2.3.6.7. the experience of the community;

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

1.2.3.6.8. the community's understanding of the issues in the Disagreement; and

1.2.3.6.9. the community's protocols for decision-making.

1.2.4. Collaborative negotiations terminate in the circumstances described in Appendix K-1.

1.3. Stage Two: Mediation

1.3.1. Within fifteen (15) days of termination of collaborative negotiations that have not resolved the Disagreement, an Underserviced First Nation may require the commencement of a facilitated process by delivering a notice describing the Disagreement and including any Remediation Plans from Canada and the Underserviced First Nation.

1.3.2. Within thirty (30) days after delivery of a notice, the Canada and the Underserviced First Nation engaged in the Disagreement (the "Participating Parties") will use mediation to attempt to resolve the Disagreement.

1.3.3. The Parties shall establish a Roster of Mediators available to facilitate negotiations who have knowledge of:

1.3.3.1. The conditions of life on First Nations reserves; and

1.3.3.2. First Nations languages, customs and legal traditions.

1.3.4. The mediator and the Participating Parties must conduct the facilitated process in a manner which:

1.3.4.1. creates a safe and respectful space for members of the Underserviced First Nation participating;

1.3.4.2. promotes mutual understanding and transparency about the issues in the Disagreement, by, among other things, Canada providing sufficient information and sufficiently explaining those issues in a way that is accessible to members of the Underserviced First Nation;

1.3.4.3. enables and promotes the use of Indigenous languages throughout the process;

1.3.4.4. is located within the community of the Underserviced First Nation and is accessible to its members;

1.3.4.5. respects the legal traditions and protocols of the Underserviced First Nation, including:

1.3.4.5.1. seating arrangements;

1.3.4.5.2. order of speaking;

1.3.4.5.3. prayers, speeches and acknowledgments;

1.3.4.5.4. exchange of gifts;

1.3.4.5.5. the wisdom of elders;

1.3.4.5.6. the importance of traditional teachings;

1.3.4.5.7. the experience of the community;

1.3.4.5.8. the community's understanding of the issues in the Disagreement;

1.3.4.5.9. the community's protocols for decision-making.

1.3.5. The Underserviced First Nation may designate a representative knowledge keeper or elder to provide guidance to the mediator on legal traditions and protocols.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

1.3.6. The Underserviced First Nation may develop guidelines outlining its legal traditions and protocols for use by the mediator and the Parties.

1.3.7. The Participating Parties may or may not request a report from the mediator.

1.3.8. A mediation terminates in the circumstances described in Appendix K-2.

1.4. Stage Three: Adjudication - Arbitration

1.4.1. After the later of termination of collaborative negotiations, or of a required facilitated process, the Disagreement will, on the delivery of a notice to arbitrate in accordance with Appendix K-3, be referred to and finally resolved by arbitration in accordance with that Appendix.

1.4.2. Accompanying the notice to arbitrate shall be:

1.4.2.1. any Remediation Plans prepared by the Participating Parties;

1.4.2.2. any neutral evaluation report;

1.4.2.3. any mediator's report that the Parties have agreed may be provided to the Arbitrator.

1.4.3. The Parties shall establish a Roster of Arbitrators available to hear arbitration of Disagreements.

1.4.4. Arbitrators on the Roster of Arbitrators shall have knowledge of:

1.4.4.1. The conditions of life on First Nations reserves; and

1.4.4.2. First Nations languages, customs and legal traditions

1.4.5. The Arbitrator shall consider the Remediation Plans proposed and the reasonableness of Canada's efforts to ensure regular access as defined in the Commitment. Relevant factors include:

1.4.5.1. the views of the Underserviced First Nation, including:

1.4.5.1.1. the physical, social and cultural importance of water;

1.4.5.1.2. the legal traditions of the Underserviced First Nation as they relate to water use, protection and access;

1.4.5.1.3. the historic and ongoing effects of lack of access to water within the Underserviced First Nation;

1.4.5.1.4. the history of Canada's efforts with respect to ensuring regular access to water;

1.4.5.1.5. the urgency of the Underserviced First Nation's water needs.

1.4.5.2. any federal requirements or provincial standards and protocols relating to water;

1.4.5.3. whether monitoring and testing are performed on the water system; and

1.4.5.4. the physical location of the home, including proximity to centralized water systems and remoteness.

1.4.6. The Arbitrator shall conduct the arbitration proceedings in a manner which:

1.4.6.1. creates a safe and respectful space for members of the Underserviced First Nation participating;

1.4.6.2. promotes mutual understanding and transparency about the issues in the Disagreement;

1.4.6.3. enables and promotes the use of Indigenous languages throughout the process;

1.4.6.4. is located within the community of the Underserviced First Nation and is accessible to its members;

1.4.6.5. respects the legal traditions and protocols of the Underserviced First Nation, including:

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- 1.4.6.5.1. seating arrangements;
- 1.4.6.5.2. order of speaking;
- 1.4.6.5.3. prayers, speeches and acknowledgments;
- 1.4.6.5.4. exchange of gifts;
- 1.4.6.5.5. the admissibility and relevance of evidence, including:
 - 1.4.6.5.5.1. the wisdom of elders;
 - 1.4.6.5.5.2. traditional teachings;
 - 1.4.6.5.5.3. the experience of the community;
 - 1.4.6.5.5.4. the community's understanding of the issues in the Disagreement; and
 - 1.4.6.5.5.5. the community's protocols for decision-making.

1.4.7. The Underserviced First Nation may recommend a representative knowledge keeper or elder, who may, at the discretion of the Arbitrator, sit with the Arbitrator to provide guidance on legal traditions and protocols.

1.4.8. The Underserviced First Nation may develop guidelines outlining its legal traditions and protocols for use by the Arbitrator and the Parties.

1.4.9. After reviewing the Remediation Plans proposed and hearing from the Participating Parties, the Arbitrator shall make an arbitral award as follows:

- 1.4.9.1. ordering the Underserviced First Nation's Remediation Plan if it is reasonable in all the circumstances;
- 1.4.9.2. ordering Canada's Remediation Plan if it is reasonable and the Underserviced First Nation's Remediation Plan is not reasonable; or
- 1.4.9.3. remitting the matter back to the Participating Parties with directions in the event that neither Remediation Plan is reasonable.

1.4.10. An Arbitral Award, as defined in Appendix K-3, is final and binding on all Participating Parties whether or not a Participating Party has participated in the arbitration.

1.4.11. The Parties shall maintain a public registry of arbitral decisions for use by Canada, Underserviced First Nations, and Arbitrators.

Dispute Resolution Procedures

GENERAL

(1) If, in the circumstances set out in Section 9.07 of the Agreement, an Underserviced First Nation wishes to invoke the dispute resolution process set out in this Schedule in respect of an applicable dispute (each a "Disagreement"), the Underserviced First Nation may give Canada a Negotiation Notice, and the Parties shall resolve the Disagreement using the procedure set out in this Schedule.

(2) The "Schedule" means this Schedule K: Dispute Resolution.

Appendix K-1: Collaborative Negotiations

Appendix K-2: Mediation

Appendix K-3: Arbitration

APPENDIX K-1

Collaborative Negotiations

GENERAL

(3) Collaborative negotiations commence on the date of delivery of a written notice by an Underserved First Nation requiring the commencement of collaborative negotiations (a "Negotiation Notice").

NOTICE

(4) A Negotiation Notice will include the following:

- (a) the names of the Participating Parties
- (b) a summary of the particulars of the Disagreement;
- (c) a description of the efforts made to date to resolve the Disagreement;
- (d) the names of the individuals involved in those efforts; and
- (e) any other information that will help the Participating Parties.

REPRESENTATION

(5) A Participating Party may attend collaborative negotiations with or without legal counsel or other advisors.

(6) At the commencement of the first negotiation meeting, each Participating Party will advise the other Participating Parties of any limitations on the authority of its representatives. NEGOTIATION PROCESS

(7) The Participating Parties will convene their first negotiation meeting in collaborative negotiations within twenty-one (21) days after the commencement of the collaborative negotiations.

(8) Before the first scheduled negotiation meeting, the Participating Parties will attempt to agree on any procedural issues that will facilitate the collaborative negotiations.

(9) The Participating Parties will make a serious attempt to resolve the Disagreement by:

- (a) identifying underlying interests;
- (b) isolating points of agreement and disagreement;
- (c) exploring alternative solutions;
- (d) considering compromises or accommodations; and
- (e) taking any other measures that will assist in resolution of the Disagreement.

(10) No transcript or recording will be kept of collaborative negotiations, but this does not prevent an individual from keeping notes of the negotiations.

CONFIDENTIALITY

(11) In order to assist in the resolution of a Disagreement, collaborative negotiations will not be open to the public, but this paragraph does not prevent leadership of the Underserved First Nation and their representatives from attending.

(12) The Participating Parties, and all persons, will keep confidential:

- (a) all oral and written information disclosed in the collaborative negotiations; and
- (b) the fact that the information has been disclosed.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

(13) The collaborative negotiations will be without prejudice to the rights of the Participating Parties, and nothing disclosed in the collaborative negotiations may be used outside of the collaborative negotiations.

RIGHT TO WITHDRAW

(14) A Participating Party may withdraw from collaborative negotiations at any time.

TERMINATION OF COLLABORATIVE NEGOTIATIONS

(15) Collaborative negotiations are terminated when any of the following occurs:

- (a) the expiration of sixty (60) days;
- (b) a Participating Party withdraws from the collaborative negotiations under paragraph (14);
- (c) the Participating Parties agree in writing to terminate the collaborative negotiations; or
- (d) the Participating Parties sign a written agreement resolving the Disagreement.

COSTS

(16) Canada shall pay the reasonable costs of collaborative negotiations conducted under this Appendix in accordance with Section 9.08 of the Agreement.

APPENDIX K-2Mediation*GENERAL

(17) A mediation may commence at any time after the conclusion of collaborative negotiations, in accordance with Appendix K-1, when an Underserved First Nation delivers written notice requiring the commencement of mediation (a "Mediation Notice").

(18) A mediation begins on the date the Participating Parties directly engaged in the Disagreement have agreed in writing to commence mediation in accordance with 1.3.2 of the Schedule.

NOTICE

(19) A Mediation Notice will include the following:

- (a) the names of the Participating Parties
- (b) a summary of the particulars of the Disagreement;
- (c) a description of the efforts made to date to resolve the Disagreement;
- (d) the names of the individuals involved in those efforts; and
- (e) any other information that will help the Participating Parties.

APPOINTMENT OF MEDIATOR

(20) A mediation will be conducted by one mediator selected by the Underserved First Nation from the Roster of Mediators established in accordance with the Schedule.

(21) Subject to any limitations agreed to by the Participating Parties, a mediator may employ reasonable and necessary administrative or other support services.

REQUIREMENT TO WITHDRAW

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

(22) At any time a Participating Party may give the mediator and the other Participating Parties a written notice, with or without reasons, requiring the mediator to withdraw from the mediation on the grounds that the Participating Party has justifiable doubts as to the mediator's independence or impartiality.

(23) On receipt of a written notice in accordance with paragraph (22), the mediator will immediately withdraw from the mediation.

END OF APPOINTMENT

(24) A mediator's appointment terminates if:

(a) the mediator is required to withdraw in accordance with paragraph (23);

(b) the mediator withdraws from office for any reason; or

(c) the Participating Parties agree to the termination.

(25) If a mediator's appointment terminates, a replacement mediator will be appointed in accordance with paragraph (20).

REPRESENTATION

(26) A Participating Party may attend a mediation with or without legal counsel or other advisor.

(27) If a mediator is a lawyer, the mediator will not act as legal counsel for any Participating Party.

(28) At the commencement of the first meeting of a mediation, each Participating Party will advise the mediator and the other Participating Parties of any limitations on the authority of its representatives.

CONDUCT OF MEDIATION

(29) The Participating Parties will:

(a) make a serious attempt to resolve the Disagreement by:

(i) identifying underlying interests;

(ii) isolating points of agreement and disagreement;

(iii) exploring alternative solutions; and

(iv) considering compromises or accommodations; and

(b) cooperate fully with the mediator and give prompt attention to, and respond to, all communications from the mediator.

(30) A mediator shall conduct a mediation with reference to Indigenous legal traditions and protocols, as set out in the Schedule, and may otherwise take any steps the mediator considers necessary and appropriate to assist the Participating Parties to resolve the Disagreement in a fair, efficient and cost-effective manner.

(31) Within seven (7) days of appointment of a mediator, each Participating Party may deliver a written summary to the mediator of the relevant facts, the issues in the Disagreement, and its viewpoint in respect of them and the mediator will deliver copies of the summaries to each Participating Party at the end of the seven-day period.

(32) A mediator may conduct a mediation in joint meetings or private caucus convened at locations the mediator designates after consulting the Participating Parties.

(33) Disclosures made by any Participating Party to a mediator in private caucus will not be disclosed by the mediator to any other Participating Party without the consent of the disclosing Participating Party.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

(34) No transcript or recording will be kept of a mediation meeting but this does not prevent a person from keeping notes of the negotiations.

CONFIDENTIALITY

(35) In order to assist in the resolution of a Disagreement, mediations will not be open to the public, but this paragraph does not prevent leadership of the Underserved First Nation and their representatives from attending.

(36) The Parties, and all persons, will keep confidential:

- (a) all oral and written information disclosed in the mediation; and
- (b) the fact that this information has been disclosed.

(37) The Participating Parties will not rely on or introduce as evidence in any proceeding, whether or not that proceeding relates to the subject matter of the mediation, any oral or written information disclosed in or arising from the mediation, including:

- (a) any documents of other Participating Parties produced in the course of the mediation that are not otherwise produced or producible in that proceeding;
- (b) any views expressed, or suggestions, or proposals made in respect of a possible settlement of the Disagreement;
- (c) any admissions made by any Participating Party in the course of the mediation, unless otherwise stipulated by the admitting Participating Party;
- (d) any recommendations for settlement made by the mediator; and
- (e) the fact that any Participating Party has indicated a willingness to make or accept a proposal or recommendation for settlement.

(38) A mediator, or anyone retained or employed by the mediator, is not compellable in any proceeding to give evidence about any oral and written information acquired or opinion formed by that person as a result of the mediation, and all Participating Parties will oppose any effort to have that person or that information subpoenaed.

(39) A mediator, or anyone retained or employed by the mediator, is disqualified as a consultant or expert in any proceeding relating to the Disagreement, including any proceeding that involves persons not a Participating Party to the mediation.

REFERRAL OF ISSUES TO OTHER PROCESSES

(40) During a mediation the Participating Parties may agree to refer particular issues in the Disagreement to independent fact-finders, expert panels or other processes for opinions or findings that may assist them in the resolution of the Disagreement, and in that event, the Participating Parties will specify:

- (a) the terms of reference for the process;
- (b) the time within which the process will be concluded; and
- (c) how the costs of the process are to be allocated to the Participating Parties.

(41) The time specified for concluding a mediation will be extended for fifteen (15) days following receipt of the findings or opinions rendered in a process described in paragraph (40).

RIGHT TO WITHDRAW

(42) A Participating Party may withdraw from a mediation at any time by giving

(43) Before a withdrawal is effective, the withdrawing Participating Party will:

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- (a) speak with the mediator;
- (b) disclose its reasons for withdrawing; and
- (c) give the mediator the opportunity to discuss the consequences of withdrawal.

TERMINATION OF MEDIATION

(44) A mediation is terminated when any of the following occurs:

- (a) subject to paragraph (41), the expiration of sixty (60) days after the appointment of the last mediator appointed to assist the Parties in resolving the Disagreement, or any longer period agreed by the Participating Parties;
- (b) the Participating Parties have agreed in writing to terminate the mediation or not to appoint a replacement mediator in accordance with paragraph (25);
- (c) a Participating Party withdraws from the mediation in accordance with
- (d) the Participating Parties sign a written agreement resolving the Disagreement.

MEDIATOR RECOMMENDATION

(45) If a mediation is terminated without an agreement between the Participating Parties, they may jointly request that the mediator give a written non-binding recommendation for settlement, but the mediator may decline the request without

(46) Within fifteen (15) days after delivery of a mediator's recommendation in accordance with paragraph (45), the Participating Parties will meet with the mediator to attempt to resolve the Disagreement.

COSTS

(47) Subject to paragraph (40), Canada shall pay for the reasonable costs of mediations conducted under this Appendix in accordance with Section 9.08 of the Agreement.

APPENDIX K-3 ArbitrationDEFINITIONS

(48) In this Appendix:

- (a) "Court" means the superior court of the province where the Reserve of the Underserved First Nation underlying the Disagreement is located;
 - (b) "Applicant" means the Participating Party that delivered the notice of arbitration;

- (c) the Participating Parties, to the greatest extent permitted by law, waive any right to appeal, question, review, or restrain arbitral proceeding of an Arbitrator, or an order, ruling or Arbitral Award made by an Arbitrator.

COMMENCEMENT OF ARBITRAL PROCEEDINGS

(53) The arbitral proceedings in respect of a Disagreement commences on delivery of the notice of arbitration by the Applicant to the Respondents ("Arbitration Notice").

NOTICE OF ARBITRATION

(54) An Arbitration Notice will be in writing and contain the following information:

- (a) a statement of the subject matter or issues of the Disagreement;
- (b) a requirement that the Disagreement be referred to arbitration;
- (c) the remedy sought; and
- (d) any preferred qualifications of the arbitrators.

(55) An Arbitration Notice may contain the names of any proposed arbitrators, including the information specified in paragraph (58).

ARBITRATOR

(56) In each arbitration, there will be one arbitrator.

APPOINTMENT OF ARBITRATORS

(57) The Participating Parties will make good faith efforts to agree on the Arbitrator from the Roster of Arbitrators. If the Participating Parties fail to agree on the Arbitrator within fifteen (15) days after the commencement of the arbitration, the Participating Parties will ask the Courts or any one of them to appoint an arbitrator from the Roster of Arbitrators.

(58) In appointing an Arbitrator, the Courts will have due regard to:

- (a) any qualifications required of the Arbitrator as set out in the Arbitration Notice or as otherwise agreed in writing by the Participating Parties; and

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

(b) any other considerations that are likely to secure the appointment of an independent and impartial Arbitrator.

TERMINATION OF MANDATE AND SUBSTITUTION OF ARBITRATOR

(59) The mandate of an Arbitrator terminates:

- (a) if the Arbitrator withdraws from office for any reason; or
- (b) by, or pursuant to, agreement of the Participating Parties.

(60) If the mandate of an Arbitrator terminates, a replacement arbitrator will be appointed in accordance with paragraph (57).

INTERIM MEASURES ORDERED BY ARBITRAL TRIBUNAL

(61) Unless otherwise agreed by the Participating Parties, the Arbitrator may, at the request of a Participating Party, order a Participating Party to take any interim measure of protection as the Arbitrator may consider necessary in respect of the subject matter of the Disagreement.

EQUAL TREATMENT OF PARTIES

(62) The Participating Parties will be treated with equality and each Participating Party will be given a full opportunity to present its case.

DETERMINATION OF RULES OF PROCEDURE

(63) Subject to the Schedule and this Appendix, the Participating Parties may agree on the procedure to be followed by the Arbitrator in conducting the proceedings.

(64) Failing any agreement in accordance with paragraph (63), the Arbitrator, subject to the Schedule and this Appendix, may conduct the arbitration in the manner they consider appropriate with due regard to the Indigenous legal traditions and protocols of the Underserved First Nation.

(65) The Arbitrator is not required to apply the legal rules of evidence, and may determine the admissibility, relevance, materiality and weight of any evidence. In accordance with the Schedule, the Arbitrator shall have due regard to the Indigenous legal traditions and protocols of the Underserved First Nation in determining the presentation and admission of evidence.

(66) Subject only to the Schedule and the Indigenous laws and protocols of the Underserved First Nation, the Arbitrator will make all reasonable efforts to conduct the arbitral proceedings in the most efficient, expeditious and cost effective manner as is appropriate in all the circumstances of the case.

(67) The Arbitrator may extend or abridge a period of time:

- (a) set in this Appendix, except the period specified in paragraph (109); or
- (b) established by the Arbitrator.

PRE-HEARING MEETING

(68) Within ten (10) days after the Arbitrator is appointed, the Arbitrator will convene a pre-hearing meeting of the Participating Parties to reach agreement and to make any necessary orders on

- (a) any procedural issues arising in accordance with this Appendix;
- (b) the procedure and community protocols to be followed in the arbitration;
- (c) any elders or knowledge keepers who will sit with and advise the Arbitrator on community protocol and Indigenous law;
- (d) the time periods for taking steps in the arbitration;

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- (e) the scheduling of hearings or meetings, if any;
 - (f) any preliminary applications or objections; and
 - (g) any other matter which will assist the arbitration to proceed in an efficient and expeditious manner.
- (69) The Arbitrator will prepare and distribute promptly to the Participating Parties a written record of all the business transacted, and decisions and orders made, at the prehearing meeting.
- (70) The pre-hearing meeting may be conducted by conference or videoconference call.

PLACE OF ARBITRATION

- (71) As far as practicable the place of the arbitration shall be on or near the reserve of the Underserviced First Nation.
- (72) An Arbitrator may
- (a) with the consent of the Participating Parties, may meet at any other place it considers, for hearing witnesses, experts or the Participating Parties; and
 - (b) attend any place for inspection of documents, goods or other personal property, or for viewing physical locations.

LANGUAGE

- (73) As far as practicable the conduct of the arbitration will promote the use of the Indigenous language of the Underserviced First Nation.
- (74) Canada shall bear the costs of translation of oral presentations and proceedings, and of such documents as the Arbitrator may direct in the circumstances of a particular Disagreement.

STATEMENTS OF CLAIM AND DEFENCE

- (75) Within twenty-one (21) days after the Arbitrator is appointed, the Underserviced First Nation, as Applicant will deliver its Remediation Plan and a written statement to Canada, the Respondent, stating the facts supporting its claim or position, the points at issue and the relief or remedy sought.
- (76) Within fifteen (15) days after receipt of the Applicant's statement, the Respondent will deliver a written statement to all the Participating Parties stating its defence or position in respect of those particulars.
- (77) Each Participating Party will attach to its statement a list of documents:
- (a) upon which the Participating Party intends to rely; and
 - (b) which describes each document by kind, date, author, addressee and subject matter.
- (78) The Participating Parties may amend or supplement their statements, including the list of documents, unless the Arbitrator considers it inappropriate to allow the amendment, supplement or additional pleadings having regard to:
- (a) the delay in making it; and
 - (b) any prejudice suffered by the other Participating Parties.
- (79) The Participating Parties will deliver copies of all amended, supplemented or new documents delivered in accordance with paragraph (78) to all the Participating Parties.

DISCLOSURE

- (80) The Arbitrator may order a Participating Party to produce, within a specified time, any documents that:

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- (a) have not been listed in accordance with paragraph (77);
 - (b) the Participating Party has in its care, custody or control; and
 - (c) the Arbitrator considers to be relevant.
- (81) Each Participating Party will allow the other Participating Parties the necessary access at reasonable times to inspect and take copies of all documents that the Participating Party has listed in accordance with paragraph (77), or that the Arbitrator has ordered to be produced in accordance with paragraph (80).
- (82) The Participating Parties will prepare and send to the Arbitrator an agreed statement of facts within the time specified by the Arbitrator, failing which the Parties will identify their differences and ask the arbitrator to decide the facts.
- (83) Not later than twenty-one (21) days before a hearing commences, each Participating Party will give the other Participating Party:
- (a) the name and address of any witness and a written summary or statement of the witness's evidence; and
 - (b) in the case of an expert witness, a written statement or report prepared by the expert witness.
- (84) Not later than fifteen (15) days before a hearing commences, each Participating Party will give to the other Participating Party and the Arbitrator an assembly of all documents to be introduced at the hearing.

HEARINGS AND WRITTEN PROCEEDINGS

- (85) Unless the Participating Parties have agreed that no hearings will be held, the Arbitrator will convene a hearing if so requested by a Participating Party.
- (86) The Arbitrator will give the Participating Parties sufficient advance notice of any hearing and of any meeting of the Arbitrator for the purpose of inspection of documents, goods or other property or viewing any physical location.
- (87) All statements, documents or other information supplied to, or applications made to, the Arbitrator by one Participating Party will be communicated to the other Participating Parties, and any expert report, evidentiary document or case law on which the Arbitrator may rely in making its decision will be communicated to the Participating Parties.
- (88) Unless ordered by the Arbitrator, all hearings and meetings in arbitral proceedings, other than the Arbitrator's meetings, are open to the public.
- (89) The Arbitrator will schedule hearings to be held on consecutive days until completion.
- (90) All oral evidence will be taken in the presence of the Arbitrator and all the Participating Parties unless a Participating Party is absent by default or has waived the right to be present.
- (91) The Arbitrator may order any individual to be examined by the Arbitrator under oath or on affirmation in relation to the Disagreement and to produce before the Arbitrator all relevant documents within the individual's care, custody or control.
- (92) The document assemblies delivered in accordance with paragraph (84) will be deemed to have been entered into evidence at the hearing without further proof and without being read out at the hearing, but a Participating Party may challenge the admissibility of any document so introduced.
- (93) If the Arbitrator considers it just and reasonable to do so, the Arbitrator may permit a document that was not previously listed in accordance with paragraph (77), or produced in accordance with paragraph (80) or (84), to be introduced at the hearing.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

(94) If the Arbitrator permits the evidence of a witness to be presented as a written statement, the other Participating Party may require that witness to be made available for cross examination at the hearing.

(95) The Arbitrator may order a witness to appear and give evidence, and, in that event, the Participating Parties may cross examine that witness and call evidence in rebuttal.

DEFAULT OF A PARTY

(96) If, without explanation, the Applicant fails to communicate its statement of claim in accordance with paragraph (75), the Arbitrator may terminate the proceedings.

If, without explanation, a Respondent fails to communicate its statement of defence in accordance with paragraph (76), the Arbitrator will continue the proceedings without treating that failure in itself as an admission of the Applicant's allegations.

(97) If, without showing sufficient cause, a Participating Party fails to appear at the hearing or to produce documentary evidence, the Arbitrator may continue the proceedings and make the Arbitral Award on the evidence before it.

(98) Before terminating the proceedings contemplated by paragraph (96), the Arbitrator will give all Parties written notice providing an opportunity to provide an explanation and to file a statement of claim in respect of the Disagreement within a specified period of time.

(99) For greater clarity, termination under paragraph (96) is without prejudice to the Applicant's ability to initiate new arbitration proceedings, without first returning to Stage 1 and 2 processes.

EXPERT APPOINTED BY ARBITRAL TRIBUNAL

(100)After consulting the Participating Parties, the Arbitrator may:

- (a) appoint one or more experts to report to it on specific issues to be determined by the Arbitrator; and
- (b) for that purpose, require a Participating Party to give the expert any relevant information or to produce, or to provide access to, any relevant documents, goods or other personal property or land for inspection or viewing.

(101)The Arbitrator will give a copy of the expert's report to the Participating Parties who will have an opportunity to reply to it.

(102)If a Participating Party so requests, or if the Arbitrator considers it necessary, the expert will, after delivery of a written or oral report, participate in a hearing where the Participating Parties will have the opportunity to cross-examine the expert and to call any evidence in rebuttal.

(103)The expert will, on the request of a Participating Party:

- (a) make available to that Participating Party for examination all documents, goods or other property in the expert's possession, and provided to the expert in order to prepare a report; and
- (b) provide that Participating Party with a list of all documents, goods or other personal property or land not in the expert's possession but which were provided to or given access to the expert, and a description of the location of those documents, goods or other personal property or lands.

LAW APPLICABLE TO SUBSTANCE OF DISPUTE

(104)An Arbitrator will decide the Disagreement in accordance with the law, including Indigenous law, and the Schedule.

(105)If the Participating Parties have expressly authorized it to do so, an Arbitrator may decide the Disagreement based upon equitable considerations.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

(106)In all cases, an Arbitrator will make its decisions in accordance with the spirit and intent of the Agreement.

SETTLEMENT

(107)If, during arbitral proceedings, the Participating Parties settle the Disagreement, the Arbitrator will terminate the proceedings and, if requested by those Participating Parties, will record the settlement in the form of an Arbitral Award on agreed terms.

(108)An Arbitral Award on agreed terms:

- (a) will be made in accordance with paragraphs (110) to (112);
- (b) will state that it is an Arbitral Award; and
- (c) has the same status and effect as any other Arbitral Award on the substance of the Disagreement.

FORM AND CONTENT OF ARBITRAL AWARD

(109)An Arbitrator will make its final Arbitral Award as soon as possible and, in any event, not later than sixty (60) days after:

- (a) the hearings have been closed; or
- (b) the final submission has been made, whichever is the later date.

(110)An Arbitral Award will be made in writing, and be signed by the Arbitrator.

(111)An Arbitral Award will state the reasons upon which it is based, unless:

- (a) the Participating Parties have agreed that no reasons are to be given; or
- (b) the award is an Arbitral Award on agreed terms contemplated by paragraphs (107) and(108).

(112)A signed copy of an Arbitral Award will be delivered to all the Participating Parties and the Joint Committee by the Arbitrator.

(113)At any time during the arbitral proceedings, an Arbitrator may make an interim Arbitral Award on any matter with respect to which it may make a final Arbitral Award.

(114)An Arbitrator may award interest.

(115)Unless an Arbitrator orders otherwise, Canada shall pay for the costs of an arbitration under this Appendix in accordance with Section 9.08 of the Agreement.

TERMINATION OF PROCEEDINGS

(116)An Arbitrator will close any hearings if:

- (a) the Participating Parties advise they have no further evidence to give or submissions to make; or
- (b) the Arbitrator considers further hearings to be unnecessary or inappropriate.

(117)A final Arbitral Award, or an order of the Arbitrator in accordance with paragraph (118), terminates arbitral proceedings.

(118)An Arbitrator will issue an order for the termination of the arbitral proceedings if:

- (a) the Applicant withdraws its claim, unless the Respondent objects to the order and the Arbitrator recognizes a legitimate interest in obtaining a final settlement of the Disagreement;
- (b) the Participating Parties agree on the termination of the proceedings; or
- (c) the Arbitrator finds that the continuation of the proceedings has for any other reason become unnecessary or impossible.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

(119) Subject to paragraphs (120) to (125), the mandate of an Arbitrator terminates with the termination of the arbitral proceedings.

CORRECTION AND INTERPRETATION OF AWARD; ADDITIONAL AWARD

(120) Within thirty (30) days after receipt of an Arbitral Award:

(a) a Participating Party may request the Arbitrator to correct in the Arbitral Award any computation errors, any clerical or typographical errors or any other errors of a similar nature; and

(b) a Participating Party may, if agreed by all the Participating Parties, request the Arbitrator to give an interpretation of a specific point or part of the Arbitral Award.

(121) If an Arbitrator considers a request made in accordance with paragraph (120) to be justified, it will make the correction or give the interpretation within thirty (30) days after receipt of the request and the interpretation will form part of the Arbitral Award.

(122) An Arbitrator, on its own initiative, may correct any error of the type referred to in sub-paragraph (120) (a) within thirty (30) days after the date of the Arbitral Award.

(123) A Participating Party may request, within thirty (30) days after receipt of an Arbitral Award, the Arbitrator to make an additional Arbitral Award respecting claims presented in the arbitral proceedings but omitted from the Arbitral Award.

(124) If the Arbitrator considers a request made in accordance with paragraph (123) to be justified, it will make an additional Arbitral Award within thirty (30) days.

(125) Paragraphs (110) to (112), and paragraphs (114) to (115), apply to a correction or interpretation of an Arbitral Award made in accordance with paragraph (121) or (122), or to an additional Arbitral Award made in accordance with paragraph (124).

NO APPEAL

(126) An Arbitral Award shall be final and binding on the Participating Parties and not subject to any appeal or review.

RECOGNITION AND ENFORCEMENT

(127) An Arbitral Award will be recognized as binding and, upon application to the Court, will be recognized and enforced.

(128) Unless the Court orders otherwise, the Participating Party relying on an Arbitral Award or applying for its enforcement will supply the duly authenticated original Arbitral Award or a duly certified copy of it.

SCHEDULE LNOTICE PLAN*I. OVERVIEWObjective:*

To provide clear, concise, plain-language information to the greatest practicable number of Class Members and their family members regarding:

- a. the Settlement Agreement and their rights to receive compensation under it; and
- b. the Claims Process and timeline.

Class Members:

The Class Consists of the following:

- * Individual Class Members, consisting of an estimated 142,300 individuals who are members of the Class and have not Opted Out of the Actions.
- * First Nation Class Members, consisting of First Nations that are members of the Class and provide the Administrator with notice of Acceptance. There are up to a total of 258 Impacted First Nations that could deliver notices of Acceptance and become First Nation Class Members.

Known Factors:

Known factors considered in designing this Notice Plan include:

1. The Reserves subject to Long-Term Drinking Water Advisories during the Class Period include Reserves in remote areas, posing additional communication challenges (for example, delays or limitations in delivery of mailed notice materials).
2. Education levels of Class Members vary widely, from members who have not completed high school to members with graduate-level university education.
3. Class Members speak a variety of languages, including English, French, and a number of Indigenous languages.
4. Impacted First Nations are geographically dispersed across Canada's provinces, with particular concentration in Ontario, British Columbia, and Manitoba.
5. 2016 census data indicates that approximately two thirds of First Nation people do not reside on Reserves.¹ Class Members who lived on impacted Reserves during the Class Period may no longer reside on the Reserve with which their Claim is associated or in the same province or territory. Some Class Members may reside outside of Canada.

Strategies:

1. CA2 will give the "Settlement Notice" using the same notice plan that it used to give Certification Notice, as particularized further below. The form of the Settlement Notice will be substantially as set out in Schedule M, with such reasonable modifications as CA2 may suggest, and as approved by the Courts. CA2 will disseminate the Settlement Notice in a manner that is substantially similar to the way in which it disseminated the notice of certification of the Actions.
2. The Administrator will give the "Settlement Approval Notice" substantially in the form set out in Schedule N, with such reasonable amendments as the Administrator may suggest, and as approved by the Courts. The Settlement Approval Notice will advise Individual Class Members of the Claims Deadline and First Nation Class Members of the need to accept the settlement agreement. The Settlement Approval Notice will be disseminated by the following methods, as particularized further below:
 - a. Direct mailed notice to Class member First Nations;
 - b. A national press release;
 - c. Live in-person and virtual community meetings for interested First Nation Class Members;
 - d. Creation of an informational website providing access to copies of the Settlement Agreement, Claims Form, FAQs, and other informational resources, to be referenced in all notice materials and advertisements;
 - e. Establishment of a national toll-free support line for Class Members, family, guardians, or other persons who make inquiries on their own behalf or on behalf of Class Members to call for further information and support with Claims, to be cited in all notice materials and advertisements.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- f. Publication in newspapers and First Nation publications across the country
 - g. Placement of 30- and 60-second television advertisements on APTN;
 - h. Placement of 30- and 60-second radio advertisements on leading First Nation radio stations in all relevant regions;
 - i. Social media/online advertisements to run on popular platforms, including Facebook, Twitter, and YouTube;
 - j. Translation of the notice into French, and all reasonable efforts to translate notice into Indigenous languages, as requested by Class Members; and
 - k. Toll-free support line to assist members in making Claims.
3. The Administrator will give a "Reminder Notice" eight months after first publication of Settlement Approval Notice, using the same notice plan. The Reminder Notice will be in a form to be agreed by the Parties, acting reasonably, on the advice of the Administrator, and approved by the Courts.
4. The Administrator will give a "Late Claims Notice" in the event that late claims are permitted. The Late Claims Notice, if any, will use the same notice plan as the Settlement Approval Notice and the Reminder Notice, modified as the Administrator advises and the Courts approve to target those First Nations where participation has fallen below expectations.
5. Canada will be responsible for the cost of giving notice in accordance with this Notice Plan.

II. SETTLEMENT NOTICE PLAN

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

The Court of Queen's Bench of Manitoba and the Federal Court of Canada approved this notice. This is not a solicitation from a lawyer.

First Nations and their members affected by drinking water advisories since November 20, 1995 sued Canada for compensation in two class actions. The representative plaintiff First Nations and their members and Canada have reached a proposed settlement.

If approved by the courts, the proposed settlement would compensate eligible First Nations and their members. Eligible individuals may receive a payment for the years they ordinarily resided on First Nations Lands during a long-term drinking water advisory. It is expected that the per-year amount will vary from approximately $1,300 to $2,000 for eligible years. Additional amounts may be available to eligible individuals who suffered certain specified injuries as a result of using treated or tap water in accordance with a long-term drinking water advisory, or by restricted access to treated or tap water caused by a long-term drinking water advisory.

Each eligible First Nation that accepts the settlement will receive $500,000 plus half the amount paid to eligible individuals who ordinarily resided on that First Nation's reserve during a long-term drinking water advisory. Additionally, Canada will commit to make reasonable efforts to help ensure that eligible individuals have regular access to safe drinking water in their homes, and Canada will spend at least $6 billion on water and wastewater infrastructure on reserves.

If the settlement is approved by the courts, individuals and First Nations will give up their right to sue Canada for failing to provide safe drinking water on their reserves. Subject to court approval, the lawyers will be paid by Canada from a separately negotiated fund and not the money available for compensation.

The courts must approve the proposed settlement before there is any money or any other benefit available.

If you are eligible for compensation, your legal rights will be affected even if you do nothing.

You have three options:

- 1. Object in writing: Write to the courts if you do not like the proposed settlement or the lawyers' fees and do not want them approved. If the settlement is not approved, no one will get any benefits under the settlement.
- 2. Object in person: Ask to speak in court about why you do not like the proposed settlement or the lawyers' fees on [*date] by [*videoconference]. If the settlement is not approved, no one will get any benefits.
- 3. Do Nothing: Give up any right you have to object to the proposed settlement.

If you want to object or go to a hearing, you must act by [*date].

If you are a resident of the following First Nations: Oneida of the Thames; Deer Lake; Mitaanjigaming First Nation; North Caribou Lake; and Ministikwan Lake Cree Nation you may be able to exclude yourself from these class actions by writing to the Settlement Administrator by [*date].

If approved the courts, the proposed settlement would compensate eligible First Nations and their members. Eligible individuals may receive a payment for the years they ordinarily resided on First Nations Lands during a long-term drinking water advisory. It is expected that the per- year amount will vary from approximately $1,300 to $2,000 for eligible years. Additional amounts may be available to eligible individuals who suffered certain specified injuries as a result of using treated or tap water in accordance with a long-term drinking water advisory, or by restricted access to treated or tap water caused by a long-term drinking water advisory.

Each eligible First Nation that accepts the settlement will receive $500,000 plus half the amount paid to eligible individuals who ordinarily resided on that First Nation's reserve during a longterm drinking water advisory. Additionally, Canada will commit to make reasonable efforts to help ensure that eligible individuals have regular access to safe drinking water in their homes, and Canada will spend at least $6 billion on water and wastewater infrastructure on reserves.

If the settlement is approved by the courts, individuals and First Nations will give up their right to sue Canada for failing to provide safe drinking water on their reserves. Subject to court approval, the lawyers will be paid by Canada from a separately negotiated fund and not the money available for compensation.

The courts must approve the proposed settlement before there is any money or any other benefit available.

If you are eligible for compensation, your legal rights will be affected even if you do nothing.

You have three options:

- 1. Object in writing: Write to the courts if you do not like the proposed settlement or the lawyers' fees and do not want them approved. If the settlement is not approved, no one will get any benefits under the settlement.
- 2. Object in person: Ask to speak in court about why you do not like the proposed settlement or the lawyers' fees on [date] by [ videoconference], If the settlement is not approved, no one will get any benefits.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

3. Do Nothing: Give up any right you have to object to the proposed settlement.

If you want to object or go to a hearing, you must act by [*date].

If you are a resident of the following First Nations: Oneida of the Thames; Deer Lake; Mitaanjigaming First Nation; North Caribou Lake; and Ministikwan Lake Cree Nation you can exclude yourself from these class actions by writing to the Settlement Administrator by [*date].

Additional Information for First Nations:

Eligible First Nations will not receive compensation unless they accept the proposed settlement by [*date]. First Nations who do not accept the proposed settlement by [*date] are not eligible for any benefits under the settlement agreement.

This notice explains your rights and options and how to exercise them.

BASIC INFORMATION

WHY DID I GET NOTICE OF THIS PROPOSED SETTLEMENT?

The Court of Queen's Bench of Manitoba and the Federal Court of Canada approved this notice to let you know about the proposed settlement and your options before the courts decide whether to approve the settlement. Notice was provided to First Nations and their members who may be affected by the proposed settlement.

WHAT IS A CLASS ACTION?

In a class action, one or more people called "Plaintiffs" or "Representative Plaintiffs" sue on behalf of people who have similar claims. All of those people are called a "Class" or "Class Members". The courts resolve the issues for everyone affected.

The Representative Plaintiffs in the Court of Queen's Bench of Manitoba are Tataskweyak Cree Nation and Chief Doreen Spence.

The Representative Plaintiffs in the Federal Court of Canada are (i) Curve Lake First Nation and Chief Emily Whetung and (ii) Neskantaga First Nation, Chief Wayne Moonias and Former Chief Christopher Moonias.

Canada is the defendant in both class actions. Canada is represented by the Attorney General of Canada.

WHAT ARE DRINKING WATER ADVISORIES?

Drinking water advisories mean that something is unsafe about drinking water. Drinking water advisories include boil water advisories, do not consume advisories, and do not use advisories.

WHAT ARE THE CLASS ACTIONS ABOUT?

The representative plaintiffs allege that Canada failed to address long-term drinking water advisories on First Nations reserves across Canada. The key allegation is that Canada breached its obligations to First Nations and their members by failing to ensure that reserve communities have safe water.

WHY IS THERE A PROPOSED SETTLEMENT?

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

The Representative Plaintiffs and Canada have agreed to a proposed settlement. By agreeing to a proposed settlement, the parties avoid the costs and uncertainties of a trial and delays in obtaining judgment and Class members receive the benefits described in this notice (if the courts approve the proposed settlement).

The Representative Plaintiffs and their lawyers believe that the proposed settlement is in the best interests of all Class Members.

WHO IS INCLUDED IN THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT?

WHICH INDIVIDUALS ARE INCLUDED?

Individuals are included in the Class if:

1. they were alive on November 20, 2017;
2. they are members of a band, as defined in the Indian Act, or aboriginal peoples of Canada, other than the Inuit or Metis aboriginal peoples of Canada, who are parties to a modern treaty (a "First Nation"), the disposition of whose lands is subject to that Act, the First Nations Land Management Act, or a modern treaty ("First Nations Lands"); and
3. for at least one year between November 20, 1995, and June 30, 2021, they ordinarily resided on First Nations Lands that were subject to a drinking water advisory (whether a boil water, do not consume, or do not use advisory, or the like) that lasted at least one year between November 20, 1995, and June 30, 2021 ("Impacted First Nations") while such a drinking water advisory of at least one year was in effect.

Individuals who are included are eligible for compensation even if their First Nation, or the First Nation on whose First Nation Lands they resided, does not accept the settlement.

WHO SHOULD INDIVIDUALS WITH QUESTIONS CONTACT?

The Settlement Administrator at [*Administrator email] or [*Administrator phone],

WHICH FIRST NATIONS ARE INCLUDED?

Impacted First Nations are eligible for compensation only if they accept the proposed settlement. Every Impacted First Nation that wants to participate must approve the settlement in a band council acceptance resolution and provide a copy of that resolution to the Settlement Administrator at [*Administrator email] or [*Administrator mailing address].

First Nations must accept the proposed settlement by [*date for Acceptance Deadline] to participate. The Settlement Administrator can provide you with the form of band council acceptance resolution that is required to accept the proposed settlement.

WHO SHOULD FIRST NATIONS WITH QUESTIONS CONTACT?

The Settlement Administrator at [*Administrator email] or [*Administrator phone].

WHAT ARE THE BENEFITS OF THE SETTLEMENT?

WHAT COMPENSATION WILL BE PAID UNDER THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT IF THE COURTS APPROVE IT?

Individuals may receive a payment for each year they ordinarily resided on First Nations Lands while under a drinking water advisory. The per-year amount is expected to vary from $1,300 to $2,000 depending on the type of advisory and the remoteness of the First Nation Lands. These amounts are subject to limitation periods: individuals who reached the age of 18 before November 20, 2013, are eligible for compensation only back to November 20, 2013, unless they were incapable of commencing a proceeding in respect of their claim before November 20, 2013, because of their physical, mental or psychological condition.

Individuals with specific injuries may be eligible for additional compensation.

Impacted First Nations who accept the proposed settlement will receive $500,000 plus 50% of the amounts paid to individuals for drinking water advisories on their reserves.

For more details, please consult the proposed settlement available here: [*URL].

WHAT ARE THE OTHER BENEFITS FOR FIRST NATIONS AND THEIR MEMBERS IN THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT?

1. Canada has agreed to make all reasonable efforts to support the removal of long-term drinking water advisories that affect the Class.
2. Canada has agreed to make all reasonable efforts to ensure that class members living on reserves have regular access to drinking water in their homes. Canada will spend at least $6 billion by March 31, 2030 to implement that commitment by funding the actual cost of construction, upgrading, operation, and maintenance of water infrastructure on reserves.
3. Canada has agreed to an alternative dispute resolution framework to decide what additional measures are reasonably required to help individuals get regular access to safe drinking water in their homes.
4. Canada has agreed to make all reasonable efforts to repeal the Safe Drinking Water for First Nations Act, S.C. 2013, c. 21 by March 31, 2022 and replace it with legislation that improves drinking water on First Nations reserves.
5. Canada has agreed to provide $20 million to create the First Nations Advisory Committee on Safe Drinking Water.
6. Canada has agreed to make available $9 million to fund First Nations governance initiatives and by-law developments.

For more details, please consult the proposed settlement available here: [*URL].

WHEN WILL INDIVIDUALS AND FIRST NATIONS RECEIVE COMPENSATION?

Nothing will be paid unless the courts approve the proposed settlement. Payment of the base payment to First Nations will be made within 90 days of the settlement approval order becoming final. The remaining payments to individuals and First Nations will begin to be paid one year after the settlement approval order becomes final.

HOW WILL INDIVIDUALS AND FIRST NATIONS RECEIVE COMPENSATION?

Individuals and First Nations eligible for compensation must submit their claims to the Settlement Administrator to receive payment. No claims forms will be available until the courts approve the proposed settlement.

HOW WILL THE LAWYERS BE PAID?

The lawyers who represent the plaintiffs will ask the courts to agree that Canada can pay them from a separately-negotiated fund that will not be deducted from the money available to pay individuals or First Nations. The amount of the fund is $53 million for fees and disbursements, inclusive of taxes, plus $5 million for ongoing legal services.

The lawyers will not be paid until the courts decide that the fees requested are fair and reasonable. The courts will decide how much the lawyers should be paid.

WHAT AM I GIVING UP IN THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT?

If the courts approve the settlement, you will give up your right to sue Canada for the claims resolved by the proposed settlement. That means you will not be able to sue Canada for damages incurred before June 20, 2021 that arise from Canada's failure to provide safe drinking water on your reserve.

First Nations who do not accept the proposed settlement are not bound by it (though their Members will be).

CAN I REMOVE MYSELF FROM THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT?

Individuals cannot remove themselves from the settlement without court approval. Class counsel will not help individuals opt out. Individuals who want to opt out should consult a different lawyer.

However, if you are a resident of the following First Nations: Oneida of the Thames; Deer Lake; Mitaanjigaming First Nation; North Caribou Lake; and Ministikwan Lake Cree Nation you may be able to exclude yourself from these class actions by writing to the Settlement Administrator by [*date].

First Nations do not need to agree to the proposed settlement. If a First Nation does not accept the proposed settlement, the proposed settlement will not affect that First Nation.

WHO REPRESENTS ME?

WHO ARE THE LAWYERS REPRESENTING ME?

The Representative Plaintiffs and the Class are represented by McCarthy Tétrault LLP and Olthuis Kleer Townsend LLP ("Class Counsel"). You may contact class counsel at [* contact address].

DO I HAVE TO PAY CLASS COUNSEL?

No. Class counsel will ask the courts to approve their fees.

WHAT IF I WANT MY OWN LAWYER?

If you want to hire your own lawyer, you may do so at your own expense.

HOW DO I OBJECT TO THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT?

HOW DO I TELL THE COURTS I DO NOT LIKE THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT?

If you do not like some part of the proposed settlement, including the lawyers' fees, you may object. The courts will consider your views. To object, you must submit an objection form that includes the following:

1. your name, address, phone number, and email address;
2. a statement saying you object to the proposed settlement;
3. the reasons you object to the proposed settlement;
4. the First Nation you are a member of and the reserve on which you ordinarily reside; and
5. your signature.

You must mail or email your objection by [*date] to [*Administrator email address] or [*Administrator mailing address].

WHEN AND WHERE WILL THE COURTS DECIDE WHETHER TO APPROVE THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT?

The courts will hold a joint hearing on [*date] at [*time]. You may attend by [*videoconference or teleconference].

DO I HAVE TO ATTEND COURT TO OBJECT?

No. If you send an objection you do not have to talk about it in court. The courts will consider objections received in time even if you do not attend the hearing. You or your lawyer may attend by [*videoconference or teleconference] at your own expense.

MAY I SPEAK AT THE HEARING?

You may ask the courts for permission to speak at the approval hearings. To do so, you must file a notice of objection and indicate you wish to speak.

WHAT IF I DO NOTHING?

Individuals who are eligible for the proposed settlement who do nothing will be bound by the settlement if the courts approve it. Those individuals will be eligible for compensation but will give up their right to object to the settlement.

First Nations who are eligible for the proposed settlement who do nothing will not be bound by the proposed settlement if the courts approve it. Those First Nations will not be eligible for compensation and will give up their right to object to the settlement.

If the settlement is approved, individuals, together with First Nations that accept the settlement, will give up their right to sue Canada for failing to provide safe drinking water on their reserves.

HOW DO FIRST NATIONS ACCEPT THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT?

HOW DO FIRST NATIONS ACCEPT THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT?

First Nations who are eligible for the proposed settlement must approve it in a Band Council Acceptance Resolution and provide a copy to the Settlement Administrator by [*date].

Short Form Notice of Settlement Approval

Settlement of First Nation Drinking Water Advisory Class Actions

You may be eligible for compensation.

Please read this notice

carefully.

Pour lire cet avis en français: [*Settlement Website URL]

The courts have approved a settlement between Canada and certain First Nations and their members who were subjected to long-term drinking water advisories from 1995 to 2021.

Who is included?

Individuals are included in the Class if:

1. they were alive on November 20, 2017;
2. they are members of a band, as defined in the Indian Act, or aboriginal peoples of Canada, other than the Inuit or Metis aboriginal peoples of Canada, who are parties to a modern treaty (a "First Nation"), the disposition of whose lands is subject to that Act, the First Nations Land Management Act, or a modern treaty ("First Nations Lands"); and
3. for at least one year between November 20, 1995, and June 30, 2021, they ordinarily resided on First Nations Lands that were subject to a drinking water advisory (whether a boil water, do not consume, or do not use advisory, or the like) that lasted at least one year between November 20, 1995, and June 30, 2021 ("Impacted First Nations") while such a drinking water advisory of at least one year was in effect.

Individuals who are included are eligible for compensation even if their First Nation, or the First Nation on whose First Nation Lands they resided, does not accept the settlement.

Impacted First Nations are included if they accept the settlement by [*date]. Impacted First Nations who do not accept the settlement by then will not be compensated.

What does the settlement provide?

Individuals will receive a payment for each year they ordinarily resided on First Nations Lands while under a drinking water advisory. The per-year amount is expected to vary from $1,300 to $2,000 for eligible years, depending on the type of advisory and the remoteness of the First Nation Lands. These amounts are subject to limitation periods. Individuals with specific injuries may be eligible for additional compensation.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

Impacted First Nations who accept the proposed settlement will receive $500,000 plus 50% of the amounts paid to individuals for drinking water advisories on their reserves.

Canada must also take other steps to lift long-term drinking water advisories and help individuals get regular access to safe drinking water in their homes. Canada will spend at least $6 billion on water and wastewater infrastructure on reserves. There is an alternative dispute resolution process available where individuals are unhappy with Canada's efforts.

How do I claim money?

Individuals must submit a claims form, or their band council can submit a resolution, confirming that they were ordinarily resident on that First Nation's First Nations Lands during a long-term drinking water advisory. First Nations must accept the settlement and inform the Settlement Administrator. To view and submit claims forms please visit [*URL],

Long Form Notice of Settlement Approval

Settlement of First Nation Drinking Water Advisory Class Actions

You may be eligible for compensation.

Please read this notice

carefully.

Pour lire cet avis en français: [*Settlement Website URL]

The courts have approved a settlement between Canada and certain First Nations and their members who were subjected to long-term drinking water advisories from 1995 to 2021.

First Nations and their members affected by drinking water advisories since November 20, 1995 sued Canada for compensation in two class actions. The Court of Queen's Bench of Manitoba and the Federal Court of Canada approved a settlement in the class actions. The settlement compensates eligible First Nations and their members.

This notice explains who is eligible for compensation and how to claim it. Individuals who do not claim compensation by [*date] and First Nations who do not accept the settlement by [*date] will not be compensated.

BASIC INFORMATION

WHY DID I GET NOTICE OF THE SETTLEMENT?

The Court of Queen's Bench of Manitoba and the Federal Court of Canada approved the settlement on [*date]. They also approved this notice to let you know about the settlement and how to claim compensation.

WHO IS INCLUDED IN THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT?

Individuals who are included are eligible for compensation even if their First Nation, or the First Nation on whose First Nation Lands they resided, does not accept the settlement.

WHO SHOULD INDIVIDUALS WITH QUESTIONS CONTACT?

The Settlement Administrator at [*Administrator email] or [*Administrator phone].

WHICH FIRST NATIONS ARE INCLUDED?

Impacted First Nations are eligible for compensation only if they accept the proposed settlement. Every Impacted First Nation that wants to participate must accept the settlement in a Band Council Acceptance Resolution and provide a copy of that resolution to the Settlement Administrator at [*Administrator email] or [*Administrator mailing address].

Impacted First Nations must accept the proposed settlement by [*date] to participate. The Settlement Administrator can provide you with the form of Band Council Acceptance Resolution that is required to accept the proposed settlement.

WHO SHOULD FIRST NATIONS WITH QUESTIONS CONTACT?

Class Counsel at [* contact address].

HOW DO I GET COMPENSATION?

WHAT CAN CLASS MEMBERS GET?

Individuals may receive a payment for each year they ordinarily resided on First Nations Lands while under a long-term drinking water advisory. It is expected that the amount will vary from approximately $1,300 to $2,000 for each eligible year, depending on the type of advisory and the remoteness of the First Nation Lands. These amounts are subject to limitation periods: individuals who reached the age of 18 before November 20, 2013, are only eligible for compensation going back to November 20, 2013, unless they were incapable of commencing a proceeding in respect of their claim before November 20, 2013, because of their physical, mental or psychological condition.

Individuals with specific injuries may be eligible for additional compensation.

Impacted First Nations who accept the proposed settlement will receive $500,000 plus 50% of the amounts paid to individuals for drinking water advisories on their reserves.

For more details, please consult the proposed settlement available here: [*URL].

WHAT ARE THE OTHER BENEFITS FOR FIRST NATIONS AND THEIR MEMBERS IN THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT?

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

1. Canada has agreed to make all reasonable efforts to support the removal of long-term drinking water advisories that affect the Class.
2. Canada has agreed to make all reasonable efforts to ensure that class members living on reserves have regular access to drinking water in their homes. Canada will spend at least $6 billion by March 31, 2030 to implement that commitment by funding the actual cost of construction, upgrading, operation, and maintenance of water infrastructure on reserves.
3. Canada has agreed to an alternative dispute resolution framework to decide what additional measures are reasonably required to help individuals get regular access to safe drinking water in their homes.
4. Canada has agreed to make all reasonable efforts to repeal the Safe Drinking Water for First Nations Act, S.C. 2013, c. 21 by March 31, 2022 and replace it with legislation that improves drinking water on First Nations reserves.
5. Canada has agreed to provide $20 million to create the First Nations Advisory Committee on Safe Drinking Water.
6. Canada has agreed to make available $9 million to fund First Nations governance initiatives and by-law developments.

For more details, please consult the proposed settlement available here: [*URL].

WHEN WILL INDIVIDUALS AND FIRST NATIONS RECEIVE COMPENSATION?

Individuals can submit claims forms until [* date]. After the claims period ends, the Settlement Administrator will pay valid claims for compensation.

First Nations will be paid the $500,000 base payment within 90 days of their acceptance or the Courts' approval of the settlement agreement, whichever comes first. Every six months, each First Nation will receive an installment of 50% of the amounts paid to eligible individuals who ordinarily resided on that First Nation's reserve during a long-term drinking water advisory.

HOW WILL INDIVIDUALS AND FIRST NATIONS RECEIVE COMPENSATION?

Individuals must submit a claims form, or their band council can submit a resolution, confirming that they were ordinarily resident on that First Nation's First Nations Lands during a long-term drinking water advisory.

First Nations must accept the settlement and inform the Settlement Administrator. To view and submit claims forms please visit [*URL].

Individuals can receive compensation even if their First Nation, or the First Nation on whose First Nation Lands they resided, does not accept the settlement agreement.

Claims forms are available here [*URL] and may be submitted to the Settlement Administrator at [*Administrator email] or [*Administrator mailing address].

DO I NEED MY OWN LAWYER TO MAKE A CLAIM?

No. Class Counsel represent you. You may contact class counsel at [* contact address].

HOW WILL THE LAWYERS BE PAID?

Canada, rather than class members, will pay the Class Counsel's fees for prosecuting the class actions and continuing to assist individuals and First Nations. The courts have approved the lawyers' fees and you do not have to pay any money to make a claim.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

WHAT AM I GIVING UP IN THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT?

Class members are giving up their right to sue Canada for the claims resolved by the proposed settlement. That means you will not be able to sue Canada for damages incurred before June 20, 2021 that were caused by Canada's failure to provide safe drinking water on your reserve.

First Nations that do not accept the proposed settlement will not be not bound by it, although their members' individual claims will be covered by the settlement.

CAN I REMOVE MYSELF FROM THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT?

Individuals generally cannot remove themselves from the settlement without court approval. Class Counsel are not able to help individuals opt out. Individuals who want to seek leave of the Courts to opt out should consult a different lawyer.

First Nations do not need to agree to the settlement. If a First Nation does not accept the settlement, the settlement will not resolve the collective or communal claims of that First Nation.

You are not required to submit a claim but if you do not opt out and do not submit a claim, and a band does not provide the Settlement Administrator with confirmation of your residence, you will not receive compensation and you will still give up your right to sue Canada.

WHO REPRESENTS ME?

WHO ARE THE LAWYERS REPRESENTING ME?

The Representative Plaintiffs and the Class are represented by McCarthy Tétrault LLP and Olthuis Kleer Townsend LLP ("Class Counsel"). You may contact Class Counsel at [*contact address].

DO I HAVE TO PAY CLASS COUNSEL?

No. The courts approved Class Counsel's fees.

WHAT IF I WANT MY OWN LAWYER?

If you want to hire your own lawyer, you may do so at your own expense.

HOW DO FIRST NATIONS ACCEPT THE SETTLEMENT?

First Nations who are eligible for the settlement must accept it in a Band Council Acceptance Resolution and provide a copy to the Settlement Administrator by [*date].

member objects or in the case of the latter, counsel designated by such objectors to make oral submissions on their behalf;

AND UPON HEARING the oral submissions of counsel for the Plaintiffs and the Defendant as well as the oral submissions of Class Member supporters and Class Member objectors or in the case of the latter, counsel designated by such objectors to make oral submissions on their behalf;

THIS COURT ORDERS that:

1. For the purposes of this Order, the definitions in the Settlement Agreement apply to and are incorporated into this Order.
2. The Settlement Agreement is fair, reasonable, and in the best interests of the Plaintiffs and the Class.
3. The Settlement Agreement (including all of its Schedules) is expressly incorporated by reference into this Order and has the full force and effect of an order of this Court.
4. The Settlement Agreement shall be and hereby is approved and shall be implemented in accordance with this Order and such further orders of this Court.
5. Notice of settlement approval shall be given in accordance with the Notice Plan attached to this Order as Schedule "B" which will constitute adequate notice, and which is the best practicable notice that can be given in the circumstances.
6. The persons listed in Schedule "C" have Opted Out and shall have no further participation in this action.
7. First Nation Class Members and Individual Class Members who have not Opted Out are bound by the releases in s. 10.03(1) of the Settlement Agreement and this Court declares that:

Except as set forth in the Settlement Agreement, and in consideration for Canada's obligations and liabilities under the Settlement Agreement, each Individual Class Member or their Estate Executor, Estate Claimant, or Personal Representative on behalf of such Individual Class Member or their estate and each First Nation Class Member (hereinafter collectively the "Releasors") has fully, finally and forever released Canada and its servants, agents, officers and employees, predecessors, successors, and assigns (hereinafter collectively the "Releasees"), from any and all actions, causes of action, claims, and demands of every nature or kind available, whether or not known or anticipated, which the Releasors had, now have or may in the future have against the Releasees in respect of or arising from Canada's failure to provide, or fund the provision of, safe drinking water on the Reserve or Reserves of such First Nation Class Member, or on which such Individual Class Member was Ordinarily Resident during a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory, in each case prior to the conclusion of the Class Period.

8. This Order and the Settlement Agreement, including the releases referred to in paragraph 7 above are binding on all Individual Class Members who have not Opted Out, including those persons who are under a disability.
9. This Order and Settlement Agreement, including the releases referred to in paragraph 7 above are binding on all First Nation Class Members who have provided notice of Acceptance.
10. This Court, without in any way affecting the finality of this Order, reserves exclusive and continuing jurisdiction over this action, the Plaintiffs, all Individual Class Members who have not Opted Out, all First Nations Class Members that have provided notice of Acceptance, and the Defendant for the purpose of implementing the Settlement Agreement.
11. Save as set out above, this action is discontinued against the Defendant without costs and with prejudice.
12. This court may issue such further and ancillary orders, from time to time, as are necessary to implement the Settlement Agreement and this Order,

RESOLUTION APPROVING PRIVATE WATER SYSTEMS ON RESERVE

See attached.

[Name of First Nation]

Band Council Resolution

Approving Private Water Systems on Reserve

WHEREAS certain plaintiffs commenced a lawsuit styled as Curve Lake First Nation and Chief Emily Whetung on her own behalf and on behalf of all members of Curve Lake First Nation and Neskantaga First Nation and Chief Wayne Moonias and Former Chief Christopher Moonias on their own behalf and on behalf of all members of Neskantaga First Nation v Attorney General of Canada, Court File No. T-1673-19, in the Federal Court on October 11, 2019 (the "Federal Action");

AND WHEREAS certain plaintiffs commenced a court action styled Tataskweyak Cree Nation and Chief Doreen Spence on her own behalf and on behalf of all members of Tataskweyak Cree Nation v Attorney General of Canada, Court File No. CI-19-01-24661, in the Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench on November 20, 2019 (the "Manitoba Action", and together with the Federal Action, the "Actions");

AND WHEREAS the Actions were certified by the respective courts as class proceedings;

AND WHEREAS the Attorney General of Canada and the plaintiffs in the Actions have negotiated a settlement agreement (the "Settlement Agreement") in respect of the Actions;

AND WHEREAS the Settlement Agreement provides that Canada shall make all reasonable efforts to ensure that Individual Class Members (as defined in the Settlement Agreement) living on Reserves (as defined in the Settlement Agreement) have regular access to drinking water in their homes, whether from a public water system or a private water system approved by a Band Council resolution including on-site systems, that meets the stricter of the federal requirements or provincial standards governing residential water quality (the "Commitment");

AND WHEREAS [Name of First Nation Council] (the "Council") wishes to approve the private water systems listed below for the purposes of the Commitment by passing this Band Council Resolution;

AND WHEREAS this Band Council Resolution is not an acknowledgment that the Council is responsible in any way for the private water systems listed below;

BE IT HEREBY RESOLVED THAT:

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

1. For the purposes of the Commitment only, and without hereby confirming or accepting responsibility, the Council hereby approves the following water systems:

a. [Identify or describe private water systems, including wells]

2. The Council hereby declares that the approval set out in Paragraph 1, above, may be revoked by the Council at any time.

3. The Council hereby declares that the approval set out in Paragraph 1, above, may be supplemented by the Council at any time to incorporate additional water systems.

4. These resolutions may be signed by the Chief and Council members in as many counterparts as may be necessary, in original or electronic form, each of which so signed shall be deemed to be an original, and such counterparts together shall constitute one and the same resolution.

The signatories below hereby certify and warrant that a quorum of Council has signed this Band Council Resolution as evidenced by their signatures below.

SCHEDULE Q

ELIGIBLE CLASS MEMBER ADDRESS SEARCH PLAN

1. If the Administrator receives a Band Council Confirmation or a Claims Form that does not provide a legible mailing address for an Individual Class Member or an Individual Class Member has not deposited a cheque or claimed a payment made in accordance with the Agreement within one hundred and eighty (180) days of such cheque or payment being issued, such Individual Class Member will be a "Missing Eligible Class Member", and the date of becoming a Missing Eligible Class Member will be the "Search Commencement Date".

2. For each Missing Eligible Class Member, the Administrator will conduct or cause to be conducted all of the following searches in order to find the Missing Eligible Class Member's current contact information:

- (a) Canadian national change of address database;

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- (b) reverse phone number lookup;
 - (c) Canada 411;
 - (d) consult any contact information for such Missing Eligible Class Member in a Band Council Confirmation, if any, and make a written or telephonic request for such Missing Eligible Class Member's contact information from the band office of the First Nation where such Missing Eligible Class Member ordinarily resides or last resided, if any; and
 - (e) make a written or telephonic request for such Missing Eligible Class Member's contact information from the band office of the First Nation of which such Missing Eligible Class Member is a member, if different than paragraph 2(d), above.
3. The searches identified in paragraph 2, above, will be conducted within forty-five (45) days of the Search Commencement Date.
 4. If the Administrator locates more than one new mailing address for a Missing Eligible Class Member, the Administrator will make reasonable inquiries to determine which address is correct.
 5. If the Administrator locates a new mailing address for a Missing Eligible Class Member, the Administrator will issue and mail a new cheque or other form of payment to the Missing Eligible Class Member for any amount payable in accordance with this Agreement, which cheque or payment will be stale dated within ninety (90) days of issuance. If a cheque or other form of payment had been previously issued to the Missing Eligible Class Member but not deposited or claimed, the Administrator will cancel or rescind such prior payment prior to issuance of the new cheque or other payment.
 6. If the Administrator does not locate a new mailing address for a Missing Eligible Class Member, but such Missing Eligible Class Member's Claims Form indicates that they are currently resident on a Reserve, the Administrator will issue and mail to such Missing Eligible Class Member, care of the band office or similar place on such Reserve, a new cheque or other form of payment for any amount payable in accordance with this Agreement, which cheque or payment will be stale dated within ninety (90) days of issuance. If a cheque or other form of payment had been previously issued to the Missing Eligible Class Member but not deposited or claimed, the Administrator shall cancel or rescind such prior payment prior to issuance of the new cheque or other payment.
 8. If the Administrator remains unable to locate a Missing Eligible Class Member despite complying with this Eligible Class Member Search Plan, and any cheque or payment to such Missing Eligible Class Member has become stale dated, the Administrator shall wait for a period of one hundred and eighty (180) days (the conclusion of which is the "Search Cancellation Date)". If the Administrator is still unable to locate the Missing Eligible Class Member on the Search Cancellation Date, the Missing Eligible Class Member's Claim will be fully and finally extinguished and discharged, the Administrator shall have no obligation to make any payment to such Missing Eligible Class Member, and the Administrator, Canada, counsel for Canada, Class Counsel, the Joint Committee and its members, the Settlement Implementation Committee and its Members, the Trustee, and the FNAC will be released from any liability.

FIRST ADDENDUM TO THE SETTLEMENT AGREEMENT

This addendum (the "Addendum") is made as of October 8, 2021.

WHEREAS:

A. Tataskweyak Cree Nation and Chief Doreen Spence, on their own behalf and on behalf of all Individual Class Members (together, the "Manitoba Action Plaintiffs"), Curve Lake First Nation and Chief Emily Whetung, on their own behalf and on behalf of all Individual Class Members (together, the "Curve Lake First Nation Plaintiffs"), Neskantaga First Nation and Chief Wayne Moonias and Former Chief Christopher Moonias, each on his own behalf and on behalf of all Individual Class Members (together, the "Neskantaga First Nation Plaintiffs"), and collectively with the Curve Lake First Nation Plaintiffs, the "Federal Action Plaintiffs") and Her Majesty the

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

Queen in Right of Canada (all of the foregoing, collectively, the "Parties") entered into a settlement agreement dated September 15, 2021 (the "Settlement Agreement"); and

B. The Parties wish to amend the Settlement Agreement to clarify the availability of Specified Injuries Compensation;

NOW THEREFORE the Parties agree to amend the Settlement Agreement as follows:

1. Capitalized terms used but not defined herein shall have the meanings set out in the Settlement Agreement.
2. Section 8.02(2) of the Settlement Agreement is hereby amended to add the words "Specified Injuries Compensation shall only be paid if the Individual Class Member experienced a Specified Injury or the continuing symptoms of an earlier Specified Injury, as set out in Schedule H, during a year for which Individual Damages would be payable to the Individual Class Member in accordance with the Individual Damages Formula in Section 8.01 (2) if it were an Advisory Year (but which, for greater certainty, is not required to have been an Advisory Year)." at the end of the paragraph, as follows:

Confirmed Individual Class Members will be entitled to compensation for Specified Injuries in the amount set out in Schedule H (the "Specified Injuries Compensation"), provided that the Claimant establishes that the injury was caused by using treated or tap water in accordance with a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory, or by restricted access to treated or tap water caused by a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory, in accordance with the Claims Process and Schedule H. Specified Injuries Compensation shall only be paid if the Individual Class Member experienced a Specified Injury or the continuing symptoms of an earlier Specified Injury, as set out in Schedule H, during a year for which Individual Damages would be payable to the Individual Class Member in accordance with the Individual Damages Formula in Section 8.01(2) if it were an Advisory Year (but which, for greater certainty, is not required to have been an Advisory Year).

3. Sections 1.12, 1.13, 1.14, 1.15, 2.01 and 2.02 of the Settlement Agreement are incorporated by reference herein and shall apply to this Addendum. Section 16.12(1) of the Settlement Agreement is hereby amended to replace the words "section 81 (g.3) of the Income Tax Act" with "section 81(1)(g.3) of the Income Tax Act".
4. The Parties, by their counsel, agree that this Addendum shall be incorporated into the Settlement Agreement.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF the undersigned have executed this Addendum on behalf of the Parties as of the date first written above.

SA MAJESTÉ LA REINE DU CHEF DU CANADA.(le «Canada»).*ATTENDU QUE :

- A. Le 11 octobre 2019, les demandeurs de l'action devant la Cour fédérale ont introduit l'action intitulée Curve Lake First Nation and Chief Emily Whetung on her own behalf and on behalf of all members of Curve Lake First Nation and Neskantaga First Nation and Chief Christopher Moonias on his own behalf and on behalf of all members of Neskantaga First Nation c. Attorney General of Canada, portant le numéro de dossier T-1673-19 devant la Cour fédérale (l'«action devant la Cour fédérale»);
- B. Le 20 novembre 2019, les demandeurs de l'action au Manitoba ont introduit l'action intitulée Tataskweyak Cree Nation and Chief Doreen Spence on her own behalf and on behalf of all members of Tataskweyak Cree Nation c Attorney General of Canada, portant le numéro de dossier CI-19-01-24661 devant la Cour du Banc de la Reine du Manitoba (l'«action au Manitoba» et, collectivement avec l'action devant la Cour fédérale, les «actions»);
- C. Le 14 juillet 2020, la Cour du Banc de la Reine du Manitoba a attesté l'action au Manitoba à titre de recours collectif et le 8 octobre 2020, la Cour fédérale a autorisé l'action devant la Cour fédérale à titre de recours collectif;
- D. Le «groupe» de chacune des actions est ainsi défini :
- a) toutes les personnes, sauf les personnes exclues :
 - (i) qui sont membres d'une Première Nation;
 - (ii) qui n'étaient pas décédées avant le 20 novembre 2017; et
 - (iii) qui au cours de la période visée ont résidé habituellement pendant au moins un an dans une Première Nation touchée alors visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme; et
 - b) la Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak, la Première Nation de Curve Lake, la Première Nation de Neskantaga et toute autre Première Nation qui donne un avis d'acceptation conformément aux conditions de la présente entente;
- E. L'avis d'autorisation des actions a été donné en la forme approuvée par les tribunaux et de la manière ordonnée par les tribunaux. Les personnes membres du groupe ont eu la possibilité de s'exclure du groupe pendant une période de cent vingt (120) jours après la première publication de l'avis d'autorisation (la «période d'exclusion»);
- F. La période d'exclusion a expiré le 29 mars 2021. Aucune personne membre du groupe ne s'est exclue des actions;
- G. Le groupe a subi d'énormes préjudices en étant privé d'eau potable salubre et les personnes et collectivités touchées en ont gravement souffert;
- H. Le Canada reconnaît les préjudices dont ont souffert les membres du groupe et souhaite aider les membres du groupe à assurer un accès à une source fiable d'eau potable salubre;
- I. Les avocats du groupe et le Canada ont conclu une entente de principe intervenue le 20 juin 2021, qui énonce en principe les conditions auxquelles le Canada est disposé à régler les actions et auxquelles les avocats du groupe recommanderaient aux demandeurs de l'action au Manitoba et aux demandeurs de l'action devant la Cour fédérale (collectivement, les «représentants demandeurs»);
- J. Le chef Wayne Moonias a succédé à Christopher Moonias en tant que chef de la

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

Première Nation de Neskantaga et demandera à la Cour fédérale l'autorisation de le remplacer en tant que représentant;

K. Les représentants demandeurs et le Canada ont conclu une entente de principe intervenue le 29 juillet 2021, qui énonce les principales conditions de leur entente de règlement des actions et qui constitue le fondement de la présente entente;

L Dans le cadre de la rédaction de la présente entente, les parties :

a) ont l'intention d'en faire un règlement juste, global et durable des réclamations relatives à la privation d'eau potable salubre des membres du groupe et aux préjudices connexes dont ils ont souffert;

b) souhaitent la mise en oeuvre de mesures concrètes pour empêcher que les membres du groupe ne souffrent de nouveau de ces préjudices;

c) reconnaissent l'importance de fournir aux Premières Nations des fonds pour des projets liés à l'approvisionnement en eau et au traitement des eaux usées, au développement économique et aux activités culturelles, et respectent l'autonomie des Premières Nations quant à l'utilisation de ces fonds;

d) souhaitent promouvoir la guérison, l'éducation, la commémoration et la réconciliation; et

e) ont l'intention d'inclure les Premières Nations signataires d'un traité moderne, selon le cas, mais reconnaissent le caractère unique de chaque Première Nation signataire d'un traité moderne, de ses terres, de ses peuples et de ses relations avec le Canada, et conviennent par conséquent que les modalités précises de la participation d'une Première Nation signataire d'un traité moderne seront élaborées en consultation avec les parties et la Première Nation signataire d'un traité moderne visée.

PAR CONSÉQUENT, en contrepartie des ententes, des accords et des engagements réciproques énoncés dans les présentes, les parties conviennent de ce qui suit :

ARTICLE 1 - INTERPRÉTATION

1.02 Titres

La division de la présente entente en articles et en paragraphes et l'utilisation de titres ne visent qu'à en faciliter la consultation et ne sauraient influencer sur son interprétation.

1.03 Sens large

Dans la présente entente, le singulier s'entend du pluriel et inversement, le masculin s'entend du féminin et inversement, et le terme «personnes» s'entend, également des Premières Nations. Le terme «y compris» s'entend au sens de «y compris, sans que soit limitée la portée générale de ce qui précède». Tout renvoi à un ministère ou à un poste du gouvernement s'entend également de tout ministère ou poste du gouvernement remplaçant.

1.04 Interprétation

Les parties reconnaissent qu'elles ont examiné les conditions de la présente entente et ont participé à leur établissement et conviennent qu'il n'existe aucune règle d'interprétation par inférence selon laquelle toute ambiguïté dans la présente entente doit être interprétée en faveur d'une partie en particulier.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

1.05 Législation citée

À moins que l'objet ou le contexte ne s'y oppose ou sauf disposition contraire, dans la présente entente, un renvoi à une législation et à son règlement d'application renvoie à cette législation et à son règlement d'application en leur version alors en vigueur et non pas en leur version le cas échéant modifiée, remise en vigueur ou remplacée.

1.06 Date prévue d'une mesure à prendre

Si une mesure doit être prise aux termes des présentes un jour ou au plus tard un jour qui n'est pas un jour ouvrable, cette mesure peut être prise le jour ouvrable suivant.

1.07 Monnaie

Dans la présente entente, le numéraire est exprimé en monnaie légale du Canada.

1.08 Indemnisation inclusive

Les montants payables aux membres du groupe aux termes de la présente entente comprennent les intérêts avant jugement ou après jugement.

1.10 Aucun effet sur les traités ou les accords existants

Aucune disposition de la présente entente n'annule ni ne remplace un traité entre le Canada et un ou plusieurs membres du groupe, ou un accord existant entre le Canada et un ou plusieurs membres du groupe à l'égard des réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau et de traitement des eaux usées des Premières Nations, des avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme ou de questions analogues, à l'exception de l'entente de principe, que la présente entente remplace.

1.11 Aucune dérogation aux droits constitutionnels

La présente entente doit être interprétée comme une entente confirmant les droits des peuples autochtones reconnus et affirmés par l'article 35 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982, et non pas comme une entente les abrogeant ou y dérogeant.

1.12 Avantage de l'entente

La présente entente lie les parties, et dans le cas du Canada et des Premières Nations membres du groupe, leurs successeurs respectifs et, dans le cas des personnes membres du groupe, leurs successions, héritiers, exécuteurs testamentaires, demandeurs d'indemnité successorales et représentants personnels, et elle est faite à leur avantage.

1.13 Droit applicable

La présente entente est régie par la législation du Canada et par la législation du Manitoba, selon le cas, ou encore, au choix d'un membre, par la législation du Canada et par la législation de la province ou du territoire où le membre réside habituellement, selon le cas.

1.14 Exemplaires

La présente entente peut être signée par voie électronique et en plusieurs exemplaires, dont chacun est réputé être un original et dont l'ensemble est réputé constituer une seule et même entente.

1.15 Langues officielles

Comme il est indiqué dans la version anglaise de la présente entente, les avocats du groupe préparent la présente traduction française aux fins d'audition de l'approbation du règlement. Après le prononcé des ordonnances d'approbation du règlement, la présente version française a le même poids et la même force exécutoire que la version anglaise.

1.16 Rôle de supervision continue des tribunaux

Par dérogation à toute autre disposition contraire de la présente entente, les tribunaux restent compétents quant à la supervision de la mise en oeuvre de la présente entente conformément à ses conditions, y compris, notamment l'adoption de protocoles et d'énoncés de procédure, et les parties reconnaissent la compétence des tribunaux à cette fin. Les tribunaux peuvent donner les directives ou rendre les ordonnances nécessaires pour l'application du présent article.

ARTICLE 2 - DATE DE PRISE
D'EFFET DE L'ENTENTE

2.01 Date à laquelle l'entente prend effet et devient exécutoire

À la date de mise en oeuvre, la présente entente devient exécutoire pour toutes les personnes membres du groupe. La présente entente devient exécutoire pour toutes les Premières Nations membres du groupe a) à la date de son acceptation par les Premières Nations ou, si elle est postérieure b) à la date de mise en oeuvre. Si une Première Nation membre du groupe ne donne pas un avis d'acceptation au plus tard à la date limite pour l'acceptation, la présente entente n'est pas exécutoire pour la Première Nation membre du groupe et la Première Nation membre du groupe n'a droit à aucun avantage aux termes des présentes, à moins que les tribunaux n'en décident autrement.

2.02 Prise d'effet au moment de l'approbation

Sous réserve de l'article 2.03, aucune des dispositions de la présente entente ne prend effet tant que les tribunaux n'ont pas approuvé la présente entente.

2.03 Frais de justice dissociés

Les honoraires des avocats du groupe dans le cadre des actions ont été négociés séparément de la présente entente et demeurent assujettis à l'approbation des tribunaux. Le refus des tribunaux d'approuver les honoraires des avocats du groupe n'a aucune incidence sur la mise en oeuvre de la présente entente. Dans l'éventualité où les tribunaux refusent d'approuver les honoraires des avocats du groupe prévus à l'article 18.01, a) les autres dispositions de la présente entente demeurent pleinement en vigueur et ne sont aucunement modifiées ou invalidées, et b) l'article 18.01 est modifié compte tenu des honoraires des avocats du groupe approuvés par les tribunaux et par ailleurs de l'intention originale des parties.

ARTICLE 3 - ADMINISTRATION

3.01 Nomination de l'administrateur

Sur la recommandation des parties, les tribunaux nomment un administrateur chargé d'administrer la procédure de règlement des réclamations et investi des pouvoirs, des droits, des attributions et des responsabilités énoncés à l'article 3.02 et des autres pouvoirs, droits, attributions et responsabilités déterminés par le comité mixte et approuvés par les tribunaux. Sur la recommandation des parties, ou de leur propre chef, les tribunaux peuvent à tout moment remplacer l'administrateur.

3.02 Attributions de l'administrateur

L'administrateur est notamment investi des attributions et des responsabilités suivantes :

- a) élaborer, mettre en place et mettre en oeuvre des systèmes, des formulaires, de l'information, des lignes directrices et des procédures pour le traitement des réclamations et prendre des décisions concernant les réclamations conformément à la présente entente;
- b) élaborer, mettre en place et mettre en oeuvre des systèmes et des procédures de paiement des indemnités conformément à la présente entente;
- c) recevoir des fonds de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre et du fiduciaire pour effectuer des paiements aux membres du groupe conformément à la présente entente;
- d) fournir le personnel en nombre raisonnable requis pour l'exercice de ses fonctions aux termes de la présente entente, et former et diriger ce personnel;
- e) conserver des liaisons avec les collectivités des Premières Nations touchées et des liaisons avec les conseils tribaux afin de faciliter la mise en oeuvre du plan de notification et de la procédure de règlement des réclamations;

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- f) tenir ou veiller à ce que soient tenus des comptes exacts de ses activités et de son administration et établir les états financiers, rapports et dossiers exigés par les tribunaux;
- g) rendre compte chaque mois au comité de mise en oeuvre du règlement de ce qui suit :
 - (i) les réclamations reçues et ayant fait l'objet d'une décision;
 - (ii) les réclamations réputées non admissibles et les raisons de cette décision; et
 - (iii) les appels des décisions de l'administrateur et les résultats de ces appels;
- h) répondre aux demandes de renseignements concernant les réclamations et les formulaires de réclamation;
- i) examiner les formulaires de réclamation et les confirmations du conseil de bande et déterminer, sous réserve du paragraphe 7.02(2) dans le cas d'une confirmation du conseil de bande :
 - (i) l'adhésion au groupe d'un demandeur d'indemnité;
 - (ii) les dates auxquelles et les endroits où le demandeur d'indemnité était un résident habituel;
 - (iii) le droit d'un demandeur d'indemnité à des dommages-intérêts individuels, le cas échéant; et
 - (iv) le droit d'un demandeur d'indemnité à une indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés, le cas échéant;
- j) examiner les acceptations et déterminer si une Première Nation qui soumet une acceptation est admissible à titre de Première Nation membre du groupe et le droit de chaque Première Nation membre du groupe à des dommages-intérêts de Première Nation, le cas échéant;
- k) donner avis des décisions prises conformément à la présente entente;
- l) communiquer avec les demandeurs d'indemnité soit en anglais soit en français, au choix du demandeur d'indemnité, et si un demandeur d'indemnité exprime le désir de communiquer dans une autre langue que l'anglais ou le français, faire de son mieux pour l'accommoder; et
- m) exercer les autres attributions et responsabilités que les tribunaux ou les parties peuvent de temps à autre demander.

3.03 Nomination du tiers évaluateur

Sur la recommandation des parties, les tribunaux nomment un ou plusieurs tiers évaluateurs. Sur la recommandation des parties, ou de leur propre chef, les tribunaux peuvent remplacer un tiers évaluateur à tout moment. Le tiers évaluateur exerce les fonctions de tiers évaluateur énoncées dans la présente entente.

3.04 Responsabilité des frais

Le Canada paie :

- a) les frais de remise d'un avis conformément au plan de notification et de tout autre avis ordonné par les tribunaux;
- b) les frais et débours raisonnables de l'administrateur, du tiers évaluateur, du fiduciaire, de l'auditeur et du comité de mise en oeuvre du règlement (sauf les membres du comité mixte), jusqu'à concurrence de cinquante millions de dollars au total (50 000 000 $), et par la suite, l'administrateur paie ces frais sur le Fonds en fiducie sous réserve de l'approbation des tribunaux;
- c) les frais du comité consultatif des Premières Nations sur l'eau potable salubre, conformément à l'article 9.04;
- d) les frais du Fonds pour la gouvernance de l'eau conformément à l'article 9.05;

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- e) les frais des conseils techniques relatifs à l'engagement conformément au paragraphe 9.06(3); et
- f) les frais de la procédure de règlement des différends relatifs à l'engagement conformément à l'article 9.08.

ARTICLE 4 - FONDS EN FIDUCIE4.01 Création du Fonds en fiducie

(1) Dans les meilleurs délais après sa nomination et après l'établissement de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre conformément à l'article 16.01, le fiduciaire ouvre un compte en fiducie portant intérêt auprès d'une banque canadienne de l'annexe I aux fins du Fonds en fiducie (le «compte en fiducie»).

(2) Au plus tard soixante (60) jours après la date de mise en oeuvre, et conformément aux conditions de l'Article 16, le Canada fait une contribution à la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre en versant un milliard quatre cent trente-huit millions de dollars (1 438 000 000 $) dans le compte en fiducie, ce paiement constituant un fonds distinct (le «Fonds en fiducie») dans la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre.

4.02 Distribution du Fonds en fiducie

Le fiduciaire autorise l'administrateur à distribuer et l'administrateur distribue le Fonds en fiducie au bénéfice des membres du groupe conformément à la présente entente, y compris, notamment aux fins du paiement des dommages-intérêts individuels conformément à l'alinéa 8.01 (2)a).

4.03 Excédent du Fonds en fiducie

(1) Sur l'avis d'un actuaire ou d'un conseiller analogue, le comité mixte peut à tout moment décider qu'il est plus probable qu'improbable qu'il y ait des fonds non affectés ou excédentaires dans le Fonds en fiducie (un «excédent du Fonds en fiducie»).

(2) Le comité mixte propose une distribution de tout excédent du Fonds en fiducie pour le bénéfice direct ou indirect des membres du groupe conformément au présent article 4.03.

(3) Une distribution d'un excédent du Fonds en fiducie comprend notamment des distributions à une ou plusieurs des fins suivantes, par ordre de priorité décroissant, et aux autres fins que le comité mixte peut déterminer en consultation avec le CCPNEPS :

a) transférer jusqu'à quatre cents millions de dollars (400 000 000 $) au Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations, au besoin;

b) payer une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés si le fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés est insuffisant pour payer le montant total de l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés;

c) payer les dommages-intérêts individuels ou les dommages-intérêts de Première Nation aux demandeurs d'indemnité qui ont déposé des réclamations valables pendant une période déterminée après la date limite pour les réclamations, s'il y a lieu (une « période de réclamation tardive»), à l'appréciation du comité mixte;

d) payer les dommages-intérêts individuels ou les dommages-intérêts de Première Nation, à l'appréciation du comité mixte; et

e) financer des programmes visant à promouvoir l'éducation, les pratiques traditionnelles ou spirituelles, l'enseignement ou la guérison eu égard aux avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme, à l'appréciation du comité mixte.

(4) Le comité mixte propose toute distribution de l'excédent du Fonds en fiducie et saisit les tribunaux des demandes d'approbation de la distribution proposée de l'excédent du Fonds en fiducie.

(5) L'affectation d'un excédent du Fonds en fiducie doit être approuvée par les deux tribunaux et prend effet

a) le lendemain du dernier jour où un membre du groupe peut interjeter appel ou demander l'autorisation d'interjeter appel de l'une ou l'autre des ordonnances d'approbation à l'égard de cette affectation, ou, si elle est postérieure,

b) à la date à laquelle le dernier des appels de l'une ou l'autre des ordonnances d'approbation à l'égard de cette affectation est définitivement tranché.

(6) Il est entendu qu'en aucun cas un montant provenant du Fonds en fiducie, y compris un excédent du Fonds en fiducie, n'est restitué au Canada, et que le Canada n'est pas un bénéficiaire admissible de tout excédent du Fonds en fiducie.

ARTICLE 5 - FONDS D'INDEMNISATION POUR PRÉJUDICES DÉTERMINÉS

5.01 Établissement du Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés

(1) Dans les meilleurs délais après sa nomination et après l'établissement de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre conformément à l'article 16.01, le fiduciaire ouvre un compte en fiducie portant intérêt auprès d'une banque canadienne de l'annexe I aux fins du Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés (le «compte d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés»).

(2) Au plus tard soixante (60) jours après la date de mise en oeuvre, et conformément aux modalités de l'article Article 16 , le Canada fait une contribution à la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre en versant cinquante millions de dollars (50 000 000 $) dans le compte d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés, ce paiement constituant un fonds distinct (le «Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés» dans la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre.

5.02 Distribution du Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés

(1) Le fiduciaire autorise l'administrateur à payer et l'administrateur paie l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés sur le Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés, conformément à l'article 8.02.

(2) Si, après la dernière date limite pour les réclamations et le paiement de l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés comme il est prévu à l'article 8.02, il reste des fonds dans le Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés, le fiduciaire transfère ces fonds restants au Fonds en fiducie.

(3) Il est entendu qu'en aucun cas un montant provenant du Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés n'est restitué au Canada, et que le Canada n'est pas un bénéficiaire admissible des fonds provenant du Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés.

ARTICLE 6 - FONDS POUR LA RELANCE ÉCONOMIQUE ET CULTURELLE DES PREMIERES NATIONS

6.01 Création du Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations

(1) Dans les meilleurs délais après sa nomination et après rétablissement de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre conformément à l'article 16.01, le fiduciaire ouvre un compte en fiducie portant intérêt auprès d'une banque canadienne de l'annexe I aux fins du Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations (le «compte du Fonds de relance»).

(2) Au plus tard soixante (60) jours après la date de mise en oeuvre, et conformément aux modalités de l'Article 16 , le Canada fait une contribution à la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre en versant quatre cents millions de dollars (400 000 000 $) dans le compte du Fonds de relance, ce paiement constituant un fonds distinct (le «Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations») dans la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre.

(3) Le Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations a pour but de fournir aux Premières Nations membres du groupe des fonds pour financer des projets liés à l'approvisionnement en eau et au traitement des eaux usées, au développement économique et aux activités culturelles. Les parties respectent l'autonomie des Premières Nations quant à l'utilisation des fonds distribués provenant du compte du Fonds de relance.

6.02 Distribution du Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations

(1) Le fiduciaire autorise l'administrateur à payer et l'administrateur paie les dommages-intérêts de Première Nation sur le Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations, conformément au paragraphe 8.03(1).

(2) Si, après la dernière date limite pour les réclamations et le paiement des dommages-intérêts de Première Nation comme il est prévu au paragraphe 8.03(1), il reste des fonds dans le Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations, le fiduciaire transfère ces fonds restants au Fonds en fiducie.

(3) Il est entendu qu'en aucun cas un montant provenant du Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations n'est restitué au Canada, et que le Canada n'est pas un bénéficiaire admissible des fonds provenant du Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations.

ARTICLE 7 - PROCÉDURE DE RÈGLEMENT DES RÉCLAMATIONS

7.01 Principes régissant l'administration des réclamations

(1) La procédure de règlement des réclamations est censée être rapide, économique, conviviale, adaptée aux différences culturelles et non traumatisante, compte tenu des traumatismes subis. L'administrateur détermine et met en oeuvre les délais de service pour la procédure de règlement des réclamations au plus tard soixante (60) jours après la date de mise en oeuvre.

(2) Sauf preuve raisonnable contraire, l'administrateur, le tiers évaluateur et le comité de mise en oeuvre du règlement et ses membres supposent qu'un demandeur d'indemnité agit honnêtement et de bonne foi à l'égard d'une réclamation.

(3) Dans l'examen d'un formulaire de réclamation ou d'une confirmation du conseil de bande, l'administrateur, le tiers évaluateur et le comité de mise en oeuvre du règlement et ses membres tirent toutes les conclusions raisonnables et favorables qu'ils peuvent tirer en faveur du demandeur d'indemnité.

7.02 Décisions quant à l'admissibilité et décisions quant aux préjudices déterminés

(1) L'administrateur examine chaque formulaire de réclamation, confirmation du conseil de bande et/ou tout autre renseignement qu'il juge pertinent pour établir, sous réserve du paragraphe 7.02(2) dans le cas d'une confirmation du conseil de bande, pour chaque demandeur d'indemnité si ce dernier est ou non une personne membre du groupe et la période pendant laquelle il a résidé habituellement dans une réserve alors visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme (une «décision quant à l'admissibilité») et, s'il y a lieu, la validité d'une réclamation d'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés (une «décision quant aux préjudices déterminés»). Il est entendu que l'administrateur peut communiquer à un demandeur d'indemnité une décision quant à l'admissibilité ou une décision quant aux préjudices déterminés avant que l'administrateur n'ait calculé l'indemnité pour préjudices individuels ou l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés, le cas échéant, à laquelle le demandeur d'indemnité peut avoir droit.

(2) Une confirmation du conseil de bande est facultative. Dans les cas où elle est fournie, et sauf preuve contraire, une confirmation du conseil de bande constitue une preuve suffisante que les personnes membres du groupe qui y sont identifiées résidaient habituellement dans une réserve alors visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme aux fins d'une décision quant à l'admissibilité et est suffisante pour faire une demande d'indemnité pour préjudices individuels pour le compte de ces personnes membres du groupe sans que ces personnes membres du groupe ne soient tenues de soumettre des formulaires de réclamation. Par dérogation à ce qui précède, une personne membre du groupe identifiée dans une confirmation du conseil de bande, ou un exécuteur testamentaire, un demandeur d'indemnité successoral ou un représentant personnel pour son compte, a le droit de soumettre un formulaire de réclamation, et une confirmation du conseil de bande n'est pas censée remplacer un formulaire de réclamation soumis par une personne membre du groupe ou pour son compte, que cette personne membre du groupe soit ou non identifiée dans une confirmation du conseil de bande. En cas de conflit entre une confirmation du conseil de bande et un formulaire de réclamation, le formulaire de réclamation prévaut. Tout demandeur d'indemnité qui souhaite présenter une demande d'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés est tenu de soumettre un formulaire de réclamation à l'égard de ses préjudices déterminés.

(3) L'administrateur donne à chaque demandeur d'indemnité un avis énonçant les résultats de sa décision quant à l'admissibilité et, s'il y a lieu, de sa décision quant aux préjudices déterminés. Si l'administrateur établit que le demandeur d'indemnité est une personne membre du groupe, la décision quant à l'admissibilité précise la période pendant laquelle il résidait habituellement dans une réserve applicable alors visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme, le type d'avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable applicable et s'il s'agit d'une réserve située dans une Première Nation éloignée.

(4) L'administrateur communique au demandeur d'indemnité ses motifs écrits dans les cas suivants :

a) une décision quant à l'admissibilité selon laquelle un demandeur d'indemnité n'est pas une personne membre du groupe, ou le demandeur d'indemnité n'a pas résidé habituellement dans une réserve applicable pendant toute la période indiquée dans le formulaire de réclamation du demandeur d'indemnité; ou

b) une décision quant aux préjudices déterminés selon laquelle un demandeur d'indemnité n'est pas admissible à l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés réclamée dans le formulaire de réclamation du demandeur d'indemnité.

(5) Seul un demandeur d'indemnité dont une décision quant à l'admissibilité (y compris, pour plus de certitude, identifié comme une personne membre du groupe dans une confirmation du conseil de bande) confirme qu'il est une personne membre du groupe (une «personne membre du groupe confirmée») peut avoir droit à une indemnité en vertu de l'article 8.01 et, le cas échéant, de l'article 8.02.

(6) Le demandeur d'indemnité dispose d'un délai de soixante (60) jours pour interjeter appel devant le tiers évaluateur conformément à la procédure de règlement des réclamations après avoir reçu :

a) une décision quant à l'admissibilité selon laquelle un demandeur d'indemnité n'est pas une personne membre du groupe ou le demandeur d'indemnité n'a pas résidé habituellement dans une réserve applicable pendant toute la période indiquée dans le formulaire de réclamation du demandeur d'indemnité ou une confirmation du conseil de bande; ou

b) une décision quant aux préjudices déterminés selon laquelle un demandeur d'indemnité n'est pas admissible à l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés réclamée dans le formulaire de réclamation du demandeur d'indemnité.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

(7) La décision du tiers évaluateur dans un appel interjeté en vertu du paragraphe 7.02(6) est définitive et n'est pas susceptible d'appel ou de révision.

(8) Les avocats du groupe aident les demandeurs d'indemnité ou leurs représentants qui en font raisonnablement la demande à soumettre des demandes d'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés ou à interjeter appel d'une décision quant aux préjudices déterminés sans frais pour le Canada ou le demandeur d'indemnité, si ce n'est, pour plus de certitude, des honoraires des avocats du groupe négociés séparément ou approuvés par les tribunaux et payables conformément à l'article 18.02.

7.03 Décisions quant aux dommages-intérêts de Première Nation

Dans les trente (30) jours qui suivent la réception par une Première Nation membre du groupe de la décision de l'administrateur quant à son admissibilité à une indemnité de base ou quant au calcul par l'administrateur de ses dommages-intérêts de Première Nation conformément la procédure de règlement des réclamations, la Première Nation membre du groupe peut interjeter appel devant le tiers évaluateur de cette décision conformément à la procédure de règlement des réclamations. La décision du tiers évaluateur dans un tel appel est définitive et n'est pas susceptible d'appel ou de révision.

7.04 Renvois au comité de mise en oeuvre du règlement

(1) L'administrateur renvoie un formulaire de réclamation au comité de mise en oeuvre du règlement lorsque les préjudices qui y sont décrits ne sont pas prévus dans la grille d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés et que le comité de mise en oeuvre du règlement n'a pas déjà refusé d'accorder l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés dans des circonstances essentiellement analogues.

(2) La décision du comité de mise en oeuvre du règlement à l'égard d'un formulaire de réclamation qui lui est renvoyé en vertu du présent article 7.04 est définitive et n'est pas susceptible d'appel ou de révision.

7.05 Caractère définitif des décisions

Sous réserve de ce qui est énoncé dans le présent Article 7 et dans la procédure de règlement des réclamations, toutes les décisions de l'administrateur sont définitives et lient un demandeur d'indemnité et ne sont pas susceptibles d'appel ou de révision.

ARTICLE 8 - INDEMNISATION

RÉTROSPECTIVE

8.01 Dommages-intérêts individuels

(1) Lorsqu'il détermine où résidait habituellement un demandeur d'indemnité aux fins de la présente entente, l'administrateur tient compte de chaque année au cours de la période visée où une réserve était visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme, depuis la date de l'imposition de l'avis (individuellement, une «année de l'avis»), et où un demandeur d'indemnité a été un «résident habituel» dans une réserve touchée, aux fins de la présente entente, si :

a) le demandeur d'indemnité a vécu dans la réserve touchée pendant une plus grande partie d'une année de l'avis (ou, après la première année de l'avis, la partie applicable de l'année de l'avis subséquente où un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme était en vigueur si l'avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme a été levé avant la fin de l'année de l'avis) qu'il n'a vécu ailleurs; et

b) par dérogation à ce qui précède, dans le cas d'un demandeur d'indemnité âgé de dix-huit (18) ans ou moins au moment applicable, le demandeur d'indemnité vivait habituellement dans une réserve touchée, mais a vécu ailleurs pendant une partie de l'année de l'avis pour fréquenter un établissement d'enseignement.

(2) L'administrateur calcule les dommages-intérêts pour chaque personnes membre du groupe confirmée (les «dommages-intérêts individuels») selon la formule suivante (la «formule de calcul des dommages-intérêts individuels») :

a) dans le cas d'une personne membre du groupe confirmée qui n'avait pas encore atteint l'âge de dix-huit (18) ans le 20 novembre 2013 :

(i) pour chaque année de l'avis; et

(ii) après la première année de l'avis, pour chaque partie d'une année de l'avis conformément au paragraphe 8.01(4);

au cours de la période visée pendant laquelle la personne membre du groupe confirmée était un résident habituel dans une réserve alors visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme en vigueur;

b) dans le cas d'une personne membre du groupe confirmée qui avait atteint l'âge de dix-huit (18) ans avant le 20 novembre 2013, mais qui était incapable en raison de son état physique, mental ou psychologique d'introduire une instance à l'égard de sa réclamation :

(i) pour chaque année de l'avis (et, après la première année de l'avis, pour chaque partie d'une année de l'avis conformément au paragraphe 8.01(4)) antérieure au 20 novembre 2019, dans laquelle la personne membre du groupe confirmée avait atteint l'âge de dix-huit (18) ans et avait été en mesure d'introduire une instance à l'égard de cette année de l'avis (ou d'une partie de celle-ci) pour une période cumulative de moins de six (6) années en date du 20 novembre 2019; et

(ii) pour chaque année de l'avis (et, après la première année de l'avis, pour chaque partie d'une année de l'avis conformément au paragraphe 8.01(4)) postérieure au 20 novembre 2019,

au cours de la période visée pendant laquelle la personne membre du groupe confirmée était un résident habituel dans une réserve alors visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme en vigueur; ou

c) dans le cas d'une personne membre du groupe confirmée qui avait atteint l'âge de dix-huit (18) ans avant le 20 novembre 2013, sauf une personne visée à l'alinéa 8.01 (2)b) :

(i) pour chaque année de l'avis; et

(ii) après la première année de l'avis, pour chaque partie d'une année de l'avis conformément au paragraphe 8.01(4), entre le 20 novembre 2013 et la fin de la période visée au cours de laquelle la personne membre du groupe confirmée était un résident habituel dans une réserve alors visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme en vigueur.

(3) Le comité mixte, agissant sur l'avis d'un actuaire ou d'un conseiller analogue, détermine les taux auxquels les dommages-intérêts individuels sont payés. Sous réserve a) de la disponibilité de fonds suffisants dans le Fonds en fiducie et b) de la disponibilité de fonds suffisants dans le Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations pour payer des dommages-intérêts de Première Nation d'un montant égal à cinquante pour cent (50 %) des dommages-intérêts individuels, les dommages-intérêts individuels sont payés aux taux indiqués à l'ANNEXE G, ou à des taux se rapprochant de ceux que permettent les fonds dans le Fonds en fiducie et dans le Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations.

(4) Les dommages-intérêts individuels pour toute année de l'avis partielle postérieure à la première année de l'avis sont calculés pour chaque personne membre du groupe confirmée en multipliant :

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- a) les dommages-intérêts individuels auxquels aurait eu droit la personne membre du groupe confirmée pour une année de l'avis complète, calculés conformément au paragraphe 8.01(2); par
- b) une fraction, dont le numérateur est le nombre de jours de l'année de l'avis partielle applicable après la première année de l'avis au cours de laquelle un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme était encore en vigueur dans une réserve où la personne membre du groupe confirmée était un résident habituel, et dont le dénominateur est trois cent soixante-cinq (365).

8.02 Indemnité pour préjudices déterminés

(1) En plus des dommages-intérêts individuels, une personne membre du groupe peut indiquer dans son formulaire de réclamation qu'elle demande des dommages-intérêts pour un ou plusieurs problèmes de santé indiqués à l' Error! Reference source not found, qui ont été causés par une utilisation d'eau traitée ou d'eau du robinet conformément à un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme dans une réserve dans laquelle la personne membre du groupe était un résident habituel, ou par un accès restreint à de l'eau traitée ou à de l'eau du robinet en raison d'un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme dans une réserve dans laquelle la personne membre du groupe était un résident habituel (les «préjudices déterminés»). Il est entendu que les problèmes de santé causés par une utilisation de l'eau d'une manière qui est contraire à un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme ou par une utilisation d'eau de source ne constituent pas des préjudices déterminés.

(4) Dans les cent vingt (120) jours qui suivent la date limite pour les réclamations, l'administrateur détermine s'il y a suffisamment de fonds dans le Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés pour payer la totalité de l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés pour chaque réclamation valide et établie d'une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés (le «montant total de l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés») établie conformément à la procédure de règlement des réclamations, et :

- a) s'il y a suffisamment de fonds dans le Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés pour payer le montant total de l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés, l'administrateur paie l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés conformément à la présente entente; ou
- b) s'il n'y a pas suffisamment de fonds dans le Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés pour payer le montant total de l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés, l'administrateur paie à chaque personne membre du groupe confirmée, conformément à la

présente entente, sa quote-part du Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés proportionnelle à l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés à laquelle la personne membre du groupe confirmée aurait droit si le montant total de l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés était égal au Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés; et

c) dans l'un ou l'autre cas, l'administrateur demande ces fonds au fiduciaire, le fiduciaire fournit ces fonds à l'administrateur et l'administrateur paie ces fonds conformément à la présente entente.

8.03 Dommages-intérêts de Première Nation membre du groupe

- a) une indemnité de base de cinq cent mille dollars (500 000 $) (l'«indemnité de base»); et
- b) une indemnité d'un montant correspondant à 50 pour cent (50 %) des dommages-intérêts individuels payés aux personnes membres du groupe confirmées qui résidaient habituellement dans la réserve ou les réserves de la Première Nation membre du groupe alors visées par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme (les «dommages-intérêts de Première Nation»).

(3) Tous les six (6) mois après le paiement de l'indemnité de base conformément au paragraphe 8.03(2), l'administrateur paie à chaque Première Nation membre du groupe sur le Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations, sans double emploi, les dommages-intérêts de Première Nation alors accumulés, mais impayés payables à la Première Nation membre du groupe. L'administrateur demande ces fonds au fiduciaire, le fiduciaire fournit ces fonds à l'administrateur et l'administrateur paie ces fonds conformément à la présente entente.

ARTICLE 3 - MESURES

DE REDRESSEMENT POTENTIELLES

9.01 Plan d'action pour les Premières Nations membres du groupe

(1) Le Canada déploie tous les efforts raisonnables pour contribuer à l'élimination des avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme qui touchent les membres du groupe, notamment en prenant les mesures décrites dans le plan d'action dans les délais de projet qui y sont prévus.

(2) Le Canada met à jour régulièrement, et au moins chaque trimestre, le plan d'action compte tenu des progrès réalisés par rapport au plan d'action.

(3) Le plan d'action est modifié pour tenir compte des engagements supplémentaires pris par le Canada, y compris les engagements prévus dans les plans de mesures correctrices.

(4) Dans les trente (30) jours ouvrables qui suivent une mise à jour ou une modification du plan d'action, le Canada remet au comité mixte une copie du plan d'action mis à jour ou modifié.

(5) Il est entendu qu'aucune disposition de la présente entente ne limite le Canada qu'aux mesures à prendre énoncées dans le plan d'action ni n'empêche le Canada de prendre des mesures additionnelles qui ne sont pas prévues dans le plan d'action au bénéfice des membres du groupe.

9.2 Engagement à prendre d'autres mesures

(1) En plus des mesures énoncées dans le plan d'action, le Canada déploie tous les efforts raisonnables pour veiller à ce que les personnes membres du groupe qui vivent dans des réserves aient un accès à une source fiable d'eau potable dans leurs foyers, que ce soit à partir d'un réseau d'approvisionnement en eau public ou d'un réseau d'approvisionnement en eau privé approuvé par voie d'une résolution du conseil de bande conforme essentiellement selon le modèle reproduit en ANNEXE P, ou une autre modèle que le Canada et les avocats du groupe jugent acceptable, y compris, notamment des réseaux sur place, qui respectent les exigences fédérales ou les normes provinciales les plus rigoureuses en matière de qualité de l'eau à domicile (l'« engagement»). Il est entendu que :

- a) l'«accès à une source fiable d'eau potable» doit être de nature et en quantité suffisantes pour permettre toute utilisation habituelle et nécessaire de l'eau dans un foyer canadien semblable, y compris, notamment, l'eau potable, le bain et l'hygiène personnelle, la préparation et le lavage des aliments, l'assainissement et la lessive;
- b) l'engagement se limite aux efforts raisonnables du Canada, y compris, notamment le financement des coûts réels, la formation, la planification et l'assistance technique;
- c) si, malgré tous les efforts raisonnables déployés par le Canada, l'accès à une source fiable d'eau potable ne peut être assuré, le Canada n'est pas tenu de garantir l'accès à une source fiable d'eau potable dans le foyer d'une personne membre du groupe; et
- d) les facteurs qui peuvent être pris en compte pour déterminer le caractère raisonnable des efforts déployés comprennent, notamment :
 - (i) les opinions de la Première Nation visée;
 - (ii) les exigences fédérales ou les normes et protocoles provinciaux en matière de qualité de l'eau;
 - (iii) la surveillance et les essais effectués ou non à l'égard du réseau d'approvisionnement en eau; et
 - (iv) remplacement physique du foyer, y compris la proximité des réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau centralisés et l'éloignement.

(2) Le Canada dépensera au moins six milliards de dollars (6 000 000 000 $) entre le 20 juin 2021 et le 31 mars 2030 pour respecter l'engagement, à raison d'au moins quatre cents millions de dollars (400 000 000 $) par exercice se terminant le 31 mars, en finançant les coûts réels de la construction, de l'amélioration, de l'exploitation et de l'entretien de l'infrastructure d'approvisionnement en eau dans les réserves pour les Premières Nations (les «dépenses dans le cadre de l'engagement»).

(3) Le Canada remet au comité mixte un état annuel de toutes les dépenses dans le cadre de l'engagement effectivement engagées au cours de chaque exercice jusqu'au 31 mars 2030, lequel état doit être fourni au plus tard quatre-vingt-dix (90) jours après la fin de l'exercice visé.

9.03 Abrogation et remplacement de la Loi sur la salubrité de l'eau potable des Premières Nations

(1) Le Canada déploie tous les efforts raisonnables :

- a) pour déposer une loi abrogeant la Loi sur la salubrité de l'eau potable des Premières Nations, L.C. 2013, ch. 21 (la « LSEPPN») au plus tard le 31 mars 2022;
- b) pour élaborer et déposer une loi remplaçant la LSEPPN (la «loi remplaçante»), en consultation avec les Premières Nations; et c) pour déposer la loi remplaçante au plus tard le 31 décembre 2022.

(2) La loi remplaçante vise les objectifs suivants :

a) assurer la viabilité des réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau et de traitement des eaux usées des Premières Nations, en fonction des prémisses suivantes :

(i) définir des normes minimales de qualité de l'eau pour les réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau et de traitement des eaux usées des Premières Nations, compte tenu des normes qui s'appliquent directement aux collectivités des Premières Nations; et

(ii) définir des normes minimales de capacité pour l'approvisionnement en eau des collectivités des Premières Nations, quant au volume par personne membre de la collectivité;

b) élaborer une approche transparente pour la construction, l'amélioration et la prestation de services d'approvisionnement en eau potable et de traitement des eaux usées pour les Premières Nations;

c) confirmer le financement adéquat et durable des réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau et de traitement des eaux usées des Premières Nations; et

d) appuyer la prise en charge volontaire de l'infrastructure d'approvisionnement en eau et de traitement des eaux usées par les Premières Nations.

(3) Malgré l'engagement du Canada de déposer la loi remplaçante, le Canada appuie l'élaboration d'initiatives en matière de gouvernance des Premières Nations, comme il est décrit à l'article 9.05, ci-après.

9.04 Comité consultatif des Premières Nations sur l'eau potable salubre

(1) Le Canada fournit vingt millions de dollars (20 000 000 $) de financement jusqu'à l'exercice se terminant le 31 mars 2026, pour la création du comité consultatif des Premières Nations sur l'eau potable salubre (le « CCPNEPS »).

(4) Le CCPNEPS est investi des fonctions principales suivantes :

a) travailler avec les Premières Nations membres du groupe à assurer une supervision et un encadrement et à faire des recommandations à Services aux Autochtones Canada propres à favoriser l'élaboration et la mise en oeuvre d'initiatives stratégiques prospectives, notamment :

(i) l'élaboration de la stratégie à long terme pour l'approvisionnement en eau et le traitement des eaux usées de Services aux Autochtones Canada dans les réserves des Premières Nations membres du groupe; et

(ii) l'élaboration de la loi remplaçante;

b) fournir à Services aux Autochtones Canada des conseils et des perspectives stratégiques propres à favoriser la viabilité à long terme pour de l'eau potable salubre dans les collectivités des Premières Nations; et

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

c) appuyer l'établissement des besoins et des priorités du financement pour l'approvisionnement en eau et le traitement des eaux usées dans les collectivités des Premières Nations.

(5) Les parties établissent conjointement le mandat du CCPNEPS.

9.5 Initiatives en matière de gouvernance des Premières Nations

(1) Le Canada fournit neuf millions de dollars (9 000 000 $) de financement aux Premières Nations pour qu'elles élaborent leurs propres règlements et initiatives en matière de gouvernance jusqu'à l'exercice se terminant le 31 mars 2026 (le «Fonds pour la gouvernance de l'eau»). Services aux Autochtones Canada administre le Fonds pour la gouvernance de l'eau conformément à son mandat.

(2) La capitalisation du Fonds pour la gouvernance de l'eau s'effectue jusqu'à l'exercice se terminant le 31 mars 2026, que la loi remplaçante soit ou non adoptée, notamment dans les délais prévus.

(3) Le Fonds pour la gouvernance de l'eau aide les Premières Nations membres du groupe qui souhaitent élaborer leurs propres initiatives en matière de gouvernance de l'eau, notamment au moyen de financement pour :

- a) la recherche ;
- b) l'obtention de conseils techniques;
- c) la rédaction de règlements; et
- d) la mise en oeuvre de projets pilotes dans les réserves.

(4) Les parties établissent conjointement le mandat du Fonds pour la gouvernance de l'eau.

9.06 Accord sur les mesures requises

(1) Si une Première Nation établit que l'engagement n'est pas ou n'est plus respecté dans sa ou ses réserves ou si une Première Nation établit que le Canada ne se conforme pas à un plan de mesures correctrices (chacune de ces Premières Nations, une «Première Nation insuffisamment desservie»), elle en donne un avis écrit au Canada, adressé au sous-ministre des Services aux Autochtones Canada, décrivant la manière dont l'engagement n'est pas ou n'est plus respecté ou dont le Canada ne se conforme pas à un plan de mesures correctrices.

(2) Le Canada consulte sans délai chaque Première Nation insuffisamment desservie afin de respecter l'engagement dans les meilleurs délais.

(3) Le Canada paie les frais raisonnables qu'une Première Nation insuffisamment desservie doit engager pour obtenir des conseils techniques afin de déterminer quelles mesures sont nécessaires pour respecter l'engagement dans la ou les réserves de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie.

(4) Le Canada déploie tous les efforts raisonnables pour parvenir à un accord avec la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie précisant les mesures qui sont nécessaires pour respecter l'engagement (un «plan de mesures correctrices»).

(5) Le Canada et la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie se conforment au plan de mesures correctrices.

9.07 Règlement des différends concernant les mesures requises

Si le Canada ne se conforme pas à un plan de mesures correctrices en vigueur ou si le Canada et une Première Nation insuffisamment desservie ne peuvent convenir d'un plan de mesures correctrices dans les trois (3) mois qui suivent la remise de l'avis de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie prévu à l'article 9.06 ou dans tout autre délai dont les parties peuvent convenir, la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie peut recourir à la procédure de règlement des différends décrite à l'ANNEXE K (la «procédure de règlement des différends relatifs à l'engagement»), auquel cas le Canada et la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie soumettent le plan de mesures correctrices alors en vigueur ou leur projet de plan de mesures correctrices respectif à la procédure de règlement des différends relatifs à rengagement.

9.8 Frais de la procédure de règlement des différends relatifs à l'engagement

(1) Le Canada paie cinquante pour cent (50 %) des frais et débours raisonnables de la participation d'une Première Nation membre du groupe insuffisamment desservie à la procédure de règlement des différends relatifs à l'engagement, y compris les honoraires et débours juridiques raisonnables, étant entendu que le Canada paie cent pour cent (100 %) des frais raisonnables d'une convocation à quelque négociation, médiation et arbitrage collaboratifs conformément à la procédure de règlement des différends relatifs à l'engagement, ainsi que les honoraires et les débours raisonnables du médiateur et de l'arbitre nommé conformément à la procédure de règlement des différends relatifs à l'engagement; et

(2) Il est entendu que les frais et débours dont il est question au paragraphe 9.08(1) sont distincts et en sus des frais et débours payables aux avocats du groupe et au comité mixte en vertu de l'Article 18.

ARTICLE 10 - EFFET DE L'ENTENTE

10.01 Aucune disposition quant aux préjudices continus

La présente entente ne prévoit aucune disposition quant aux préjudices dont les membres du groupe pourraient en raison d'avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme qui commencent ou qui sont maintenus après le 20 juin 2021, et les membres du groupe ne peuvent pas réclamer une indemnité à l'égard de ces préjudices.

10.02 Responsabilité du Canada

Les parties conviennent expressément qu'une fois que le Canada a respecté les conditions de la présente entente, le Canada n'a aucune autre responsabilité envers les membres du groupe à l'égard des préjudices dont ils ont souffert avant le 20 juin 2021 en raison de l'omission du Canada d'assurer ou de financer l'approvisionnement en eau potable salubre dans la ou les réserves alors visées par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long de ces Premières Nations membres du groupe, ou dans lesquelles ces personnes membres du groupe étaient des résidents habituels.

10.03 Quittances

(1) Les ordonnances d'approbation du règlement rendues par les tribunaux stipulent que, sauf comme il est prévu aux articles 10.01 et 10.04, et en contrepartie des obligations et des responsabilités du Canada qui lui incombent en vertu de la présente entente, chaque personne membre du groupe ou son exécuteur testamentaire, demandeur d'indemnité successoral ou représentant personnel pour le compte de la personne membre du groupe ou de sa succession, et chaque Première Nation membre du groupe (collectivement ci-après, les «donneurs de quittance») dégage entièrement et définitivement le Canada et ses fonctionnaires, mandataires, dirigeants et employés, prédécesseurs, successeurs et ayants cause (collectivement ci-après, les «bénéficiaires de quittance»), de quelque action, cause d'action, réclamation et demande de quelque nature ou type, qu'elle soit ou non connue ou prévue, que les donneurs de quittance avaient, ont aujourd'hui ou pourraient avoir à l'avenir contre les bénéficiaires de quittance à l'égard ou en raison de l'omission du Canada d'assurer ou de financer l'approvisionnement en eau potable salubre dans la ou les réserves alors visées par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long de ces Premières Nations membres du groupe, ou dans lesquelles ces personnes membres du groupe étaient des résidents habituels, dans chaque cas avant la fin de la période visée.

(2) Les donneurs de quittance sont réputés convenir que s'ils font une réclamation ou une demande ou introduisent une action ou une instance contre d'autres personnes qui donne lieu à une réclamation contre les bénéficiaires de quittance pour une contribution, une indemnité ou une autre réparation, que ce soit en vertu d'une loi, de la common law ou du droit civil du Québec, à l'égard de réclamations visées par la quittance prévue au paragraphe 10.03(1), ci-dessus, les donneurs de quittance limitent expressément leurs réclamations de manière à exclure toute partie de responsabilité du Canada.

(3) Après une décision définitive relative à une réclamation faite en vertu de la procédure de règlement des réclamations et conformément à ses modalités, les donneurs de quittance sont également réputés décharger libérer entièrement et définitivement :

a) les parties, les avocats du groupe, les avocats du Canada, le comité de mise en oeuvre du règlement et ses membres, le CCPNEPS et ses membres, le comité mixte et ses membres, l'administrateur et le tiers évaluateur à l'égard de quelque réclamation qui a découlé, qui découle ou qui pourrait découler de l'application de la procédure de règlement des réclamations, y compris, notamment quelque réclamation quant au calcul des dommages-intérêts individuels, de l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés et des dommages de Première Nation, au caractère suffisant de l'indemnité reçue et à la répartition et à la distribution de l'excédent du Fonds en fiducie;

b) tout conseil de bande qui a soumis une confirmation du conseil de bande à l'égard de quelque réclamation qui a découlé, qui découle ou qui pourrait découler de la confirmation du conseil de bande, y compris, notamment quelque réclamation quant à l'exhaustivité ou à l'exactitude de celle-ci; et

c) tout conseil de bande qui adopte une résolution du conseil de bande approuvant des réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau privés, essentiellement selon le modèle reproduit en ANNEXE P ou un autre modèle que le Canada et les avocats du groupe jugent acceptable à l'égard de quelque réclamation qui a découlé, qui découle ou qui pourrait découler de la résolution du conseil de bande approuvant des réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau privés, y compris, notamment quelque réclamation quant à l'exhaustivité ou à l'exactitude de celle-ci, et l'adoption d'une résolution du conseil de bande ou l'omission d'adopter une résolution du conseil de bande approuvant des réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau privés ne saurait avoir pour effet de rendre une Première Nation ou son conseil de bande responsable ou imputable à l'égard des réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau qui y sont décrits.

(4) Les parties, les avocats du groupe, les avocats du Canada, le comité de mise en oeuvre du règlement et ses membres, le CCPNEPS et ses membres, le comité mixte et ses membres, l'administrateur et le tiers évaluateur n'ont aucune responsabilité envers un membre du groupe admissible disparu à l'égard de quelque réclamation qui a découlé, qui découle ou qui pourrait découler du paiement ou du non-paiement d'un montant conformément à la présente entente, lorsque l'administrateur s'est conformé au plan de recherche d'adresse de membres du groupe admissibles prévu à l'ANNEXE Q.

(5) Il est entendu :

a) qu'une personne membre du groupe vivante qui ne soumet pas un formulaire de réclamation valide à l'administrateur, ou pour le compte de laquelle une réclamation valide n'est pas faite au moyen d'une confirmation du conseil de bande, ou, dans le cas d'une personne membre du groupe qui est une personne frappée d'incapacité, pour le compte de laquelle son représentant personnel n'a pas soumis de formulaire de réclamation valide; et

b) qu'une personne membre du groupe décédée qui n'a pas soumis un formulaire de réclamation valide avant son décès, ou dont l'exécuteur testamentaire ou le demandeur d'indemnité successoral ne soumet pas un formulaire de réclamation valide pour le compte de la personne membre du groupe décédée, avec les autres renseignements requis par la présente entente, dans chaque cas, au plus tard à la dernière date limite pour les réclamations, n'a pas droit à des dommages-intérêts individuels ni à une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés en vertu de la présente entente, et l'administrateur rejette toute réclamation soumise après la dernière date limite pour les réclamations. Chaque personne membre du groupe continue d'être liée par la quittance prévue dans le présent article 10.03, même si elle ne soumet pas un formulaire de réclamation valide au plus tard à la dernière date limite pour les réclamations.

(6) Il est entendu que toute Première Nation touchée qui ne donne pas un avis d'acceptation au plus tard à la date limite pour l'acceptation perd tout droit à quelque avantage en vertu de la présente entente, y compris, notamment les dommages-intérêts de Première Nation, et l'administrateur rejette tout avis d'acceptation soumis après la date limite pour l'acceptation.

10.04 Recours permanents

(1) Les parties reconnaissent et conviennent que, par dérogation à l'article 10.03 ou à toute autre disposition contraire de la présente entente, les membres du groupe n'abandonnent pas et conservent expressément leurs réclamations ou causes d'action en cas de violation de la présente entente par le Canada.

(2) Les Parties reconnaissent et conviennent qu'il y aurait préjudice irréparable pour lequel des dommages-intérêts ne constitueraient pas une réparation appropriée en droit si le Canada devait manquer à ses obligations qui lui incombent en vertu de l'article 3.04, de l'Article 4, de l'Article 5, de l'Article 6 ou de l'Article 9. Il est donc convenu que, sous réserve de la Loi sur la responsabilité civile de l'État et le contentieux administratif, L.R.C. (1985), ch. C-50, les parties ont le droit de recourir à une mesure injonctive et à une autre mesure de redressement équitable pour prévenir toute violation réelle ou imminente de la présente entente, et pour faire respecter les conditions de la présente entente, sans qu'il ne soit nécessaire d'obtenir ou de déposer un cautionnement dans le cadre de l'obtention d'une telle mesure injonctive ou autre mesure de redressement équitable, en plus des autres dommages-intérêts et mesures de redressement dont les parties peuvent bénéficier en droit ou en équité.

10.05 Impôt sur le revenu canadien et avantages sociaux

(1) Le Canada fait de son mieux pour veiller à ce que la réception d'un paiement conformément à la présente entente ne porte pas atteinte au droit d'un membre du groupe à des prestations sociales ou à des prestations d'assistance sociale fédérales, et aucun pareil paiement ne saurait être considéré comme un revenu imposable au sens de la Loi de l'impôt sur le revenu.

(2) Le Canada fait de son mieux pour obtenir une entente avec les gouvernements provinciaux et territoriaux aux termes de laquelle la réception d'un paiement conformément à la présente entente ne porte pas atteinte au montant, à la nature ou à la durée des prestations sociales ou des prestations d'assistance sociale offertes ou payables à un membre du groupe.

ARTICLE 11 - MISE EN OEUVRE DE LA PRÉSENTE ENTENTE

11.01 Ordonnances d'approbation du règlement

(1) Les parties conviennent de solliciter les ordonnances d'approbation du règlement aux tribunaux essentiellement selon le modèle reproduit en ANNEXE O.

(2) Les parties consentent à l'inscription des ordonnances d'approbation du règlement.

(3) Les parties prennent toutes les mesures raisonnables pour coopérer en vue de saisir les tribunaux d'une demande d'ordonnances d'approbation de règlement.

11.2 Plan de notification

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

(1) Les parties conviennent de saisir conjointement les tribunaux d'une demande d'approbation du plan de notification comme moyen permettant aux membres du groupe de recevoir les avis de règlement et les avis d'approbation du règlement, et les avis d'exclusion tardive, selon le cas.

(2) Le Canada convient de financer la mise en oeuvre du plan de notification et de tout avis ultérieur ordonné par les tribunaux.

ARTICLE 12 - EXCLUSION

12.01 Exclusion

Aucune personne membre du groupe ne peut s'exclure des actions sans l'autorisation des tribunaux, et chaque personne membre du groupe est liée par la présente entente si elle est approuvée par les tribunaux.

12.02 Exclusion tardive

Par dérogation à l'article 12.01, les personnes membres du groupe qui résident habituellement dans la Première Nation de Mitaanjigamiing, la North Caribou Lake, la Nation crie de Ministikwan Lake, la Nation des Oneidas de la Thames et la Bande de Deer Lake ont le droit de s'exclure des actions moyennant la remise à l'administrateur d'un avis écrit dans les quarante-cinq (45) jours qui suivent la date de la première publication de l'avis de règlement. Les Premières Nations visées dans le présent article 12.02 ont reçu un premier avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme après le commencement de la période d'exclusion. Sauf en ce qui a trait à l'exclusion tardive prévue dans le présent article 12.02, les personnes membres du groupe n'ont pas le droit de s'exclure aux termes de la présente entente et ne peuvent s'exclure des actions qu'avec l'autorisation des tribunaux conformément à l'article 12.01. Error! Reference source not found.

12.03 Exclusion automatique pour les réclamations individuelles

Toute personne membre du groupe qui n'abandonne pas, avant l'expiration du délai pour s'exclure des actions, quelque instance qui soulève des questions de droit ou de fait qui sont communes aux actions, est réputée s'être exclue des actions.

ARTICLE 13 - PAIEMENTS AUX PERSONNES MEMBRES DU GROUPE DÉCÉDÉES ET FRAPPEES D'INCAPACITE

13.01 Indemnisation d'une personne décédée; octroi d'une autorisation ou d'un pouvoir analogue

(1) Si une personne membre du groupe est décédée ou décède après le 20 novembre 2017, inclusivement (cette personne membre du groupe, une «personne membre du groupe décédée»), et ;

- a) que la personne membre du groupe décédée a été identifiée dans une confirmation du conseil de bande;
- b) que la personne membre du groupe décédée, ou son représentant personnel, a soumis un formulaire de réclamation à l'administrateur avant son décès; ou
- c) que l'exécuteur testamentaire de la personne membre du groupe décédée a soumis un formulaire de réclamation à l'administrateur après le décès de cette dernière, et que l'exécuteur testamentaire de la personne membre du groupe décédée a soumis à l'administrateur la preuve exigée par le paragraphe 13.01(2), l'administrateur paie à l'exécuteur testamentaire de la personne membre du groupe décédée l'indemnité à laquelle la personne membre du groupe décédée avait droit aux termes de la procédure de règlement des réclamations, ce paiement étant payable à «la succession» de la personne membre du groupe décédée.

(2) Au soutien d'une réclamation soumise conformément au paragraphe 13.01(1), l'exécuteur testamentaire de la personne membre du groupe décédée soumet à l'administrateur, dans chaque cas, selon le modèle que l'administrateur juge acceptable :

- a) un formulaire de réclamation (si un formulaire de réclamation n'a pas été soumis par la personne membre du groupe décédée, ou son représentant personnel, avant son décès et que la personne membre du groupe décédée n'a pas été identifiée dans une confirmation du conseil de bande);
- b) la preuve et la date du décès de la personne membre du groupe décédée;
- c) la preuve de l'autorisation légale du représentant de recevoir l'indemnité pour le compte de la succession de la personne membre du groupe décédée, ainsi établie :
 - (i) si la réclamation est fondée sur un testament ou un autre titre testamentaire ou une succession ab intestat, une copie de l'acte d'homologation ou des lettres d'homologation ou d'un autre document de même nature ou des lettres d'administration ou d'un autre document de même nature, étant censés être délivrés par un tribunal ou une autorité au Canada; ou
 - (ii) si la réclamation est fondée sur un testament notarié au Québec, une copie certifiée conforme du testament.

13.02 Indemnisation d'une personne décédée; sans octroi d'une autorisation ou d'un pouvoir analogue

(1) Si un formulaire de réclamation a été soumis à l'administrateur par une personne membre du groupe décédée, ou par son représentant personnel, avant son décès, ou par son exécuteur testamentaire ou un autre représentant de la personne membre du groupe décédée (un «demandeur d'indemnité successorale»), après son décès, mais que la succession de la personne membre du groupe décédée n'a pas soumis à l'administrateur tous les éléments de la preuve requise aux termes du paragraphe 13.01(2), l'exécuteur testamentaire ou le demandeur d'indemnité successorale doit soumettre à l'administrateur la preuve requise aux termes de l'alinéa a) et de l'alinéa b), ainsi qu'une preuve de l'autorisation ou du pouvoir d'agir de l'exécuteur testamentaire ou du demandeur d'indemnité successorale de la personne membre du groupe décédée conformément au paragraphe 13.02(3) (collectivement, une «déclaration de représentation successorale»), au plus tard à la date limite pour les réclamations ou, si elle est postérieure, à l'expiration de la période de réclamation tardive (la «dernière date limite pour les réclamations») et par ailleurs conformément à la présente entente, et :

- a) si une seule déclaration de représentation successorale a été soumise à l'égard de la personne membre du groupe décédée au plus tard à la dernière date limite pour les réclamations, l'administrateur paie l'indemnité à laquelle la personne membre du groupe décédée a droit à l'exécuteur testamentaire ou au demandeur d'indemnité successorale indiqué dans la déclaration de représentation successorale pour le compte de la succession; ou
- b) si plus d'une déclaration de représentation successorale a été soumise à l'égard de la personne membre du groupe décédée au plus tard à la dernière date limite pour les réclamations, l'administrateur :
 - (i) si les exécuteurs testamentaires ou les demandeurs d'indemnité successoraux indiqués dans toutes les déclarations de représentation successorale soumettent à l'administrateur une convention signée ordonnant le paiement de l'indemnité à laquelle la personne membre du groupe décédée a droit et donnent une quittance que l'administrateur juge acceptable quant à la forme, paie l'indemnité à la succession conformément à cette convention; ou
 - (ii) si les exécuteurs testamentaires ou les demandeurs d'indemnité successoraux indiqués dans toutes les déclarations de représentation successorale ne soumettent pas à l'administrateur une convention conformément au sous-alinéa 13.02(1)b)(i), demande à l'un des exécuteurs testamentaires ou des demandeurs d'indemnité successoraux de soumettre à l'administrateur la preuve requise aux termes de l'alinéa 13.01(2)c) et paie à cette personne pour le compte de la succession l'indemnité à laquelle a droit la personne membre du groupe décédée, étant entendu que si personne ne soumet à l'administrateur la preuve requise aux termes de l'alinéa 13.01(2)c) dans les deux (2) ans qui suivent la dernière date limite pour les réclamations, la réclamation pour le compte de la personne membre du groupe décédée et de sa succession s'éteint, l'administrateur n'a plus aucune autre obligation de faire quelque paiement à la personne membre du groupe décédée ou à sa succession et toutes les réclamations de ou pour le compte de la personne membre du groupe décédée et de sa succession sont réputées avoir fait l'objet d'une quittance conformément à l'article 10.03.

(2) Si un formulaire de réclamation est soumis à l'administrateur par une personne membre du groupe décédée, ou pour son compte, mais qu'aucune déclaration de représentation successorale n'est soumise à l'administrateur à l'égard de la personne membre du groupe décédée conformément au paragraphe 13.01(1) dans les quatre-vingt-dix (90) jours qui suivent la réception du formulaire de réclamation, l'administrateur déploie des efforts raisonnables pour envoyer un avis à la dernière adresse connue de la personne membre du groupe décédée ou à l'exécuteur testamentaire ou au demandeur d'indemnité successoral de la personne membre du groupe décédée, selon le cas, demandant la soumission d'une déclaration de représentation successorale. Si personne ne soumet à l'administrateur une déclaration de représentation successorale à l'égard de la personne membre du groupe décédée dans les deux (2) ans qui suivent la dernière date limite pour les réclamations, la réclamation pour le compte de la personne membre du groupe décédée et de sa succession s'éteint, l'administrateur n'a plus aucune autre obligation de faire quelque paiement à la personne membre du groupe décédée ou à sa succession et toutes les réclamations de ou pour le compte de la personne membre du groupe décédée et de sa succession sont réputées avoir fait l'objet d'une quittance conformément à l'article 10.03.

(3) Au soutien d'une déclaration de représentation successorale soumise en vertu du paragraphe 13.02(1), l'exécuteur testamentaire ou le demandeur d'indemnité successoral de la personne membre du groupe décédée, selon le cas, soumet à l'administrateur la preuve suivante qu'il représente la succession de la personne membre du groupe décédée, dans chaque cas, selon le modèle que l'administrateur juge acceptable :

a) si la personne membre du groupe décédée avait un testament :

(i) une copie du testament nommant l'exécuteur testamentaire ou le demandeur d'indemnité successoral, selon le cas, pour représenter la succession de la personne membre du groupe décédée; et

(ii) une attestation ou une déclaration signée par l'exécuteur testamentaire ou le demandeur d'indemnité successoral, et par une autre personne qui connaissait personnellement la personne membre du groupe décédée, confirmant qu'ils croient que le testament est valide, n'ont pas connaissance que le testament a été révoquée, n'ont pas connaissance de quelque testament ultérieur de la personne membre du groupe décédée, et n'ont pas connaissance de quelque exécuteur, administrateur, fiduciaire ou liquidateur nommé par un tribunal; ou

b) si la personne membre du groupe décédée n'avait pas de testament :

(i) une attestation ou une déclaration signée par l'exécuteur testamentaire ou le demandeur d'indemnité successoral, et par une autre personne qui connaissait personnellement la personne membre du groupe décédée, confirmant qu'ils n'ont pas connaissance de quelque testament de la personne membre du groupe décédée et n'ont pas connaissance de quelque exécuteur, administrateur, fiduciaire ou liquidateur nommé par un tribunal;

(ii) une preuve de la relation entre l'exécuteur testamentaire ou le demandeur d'indemnité successoral, selon le cas, et la personne membre du groupe décédée, selon le modèle que l'administrateur juge raisonnablement acceptable;

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

(iii) une attestation ou une déclaration signée par l'exécuteur testamentaire ou le demandeur d'indemnité successoral, et par une autre personne qui connaissait personnellement la personne membre du groupe décédée :

A. confirmant qu'ils n'ont pas connaissance de quelque héritier ayant priorité de rang de la personne membre du groupe décédée conformément au paragraphe 13.02(4); et

B. soit :

(I) confirmant qu'ils n'ont pas connaissance de quelque héritier de rang égal de la personne membre du groupe décédée conformément au paragraphe 13.02(4), ou

(II) s'il existe un héritier de rang égal de la personne membre du groupe décédée conformément au paragraphe 13.02(4), énumérant les personnes ayant un rang égal; et

(iv) s'il existe des héritiers de la personne membre du groupe décédée qui ont un rang égal par rapport à l'exécuteur testamentaire ou au demandeur d'indemnité successoral conformément au paragraphe 13.02(4), le consentement signé de toutes ces personnes quant au pouvoir de l'exécuteur testamentaire ou du demandeur d'indemnité successoral, selon le cas, d'agir pour la succession de la personne membre du groupe décédée.

(4) Pour l'application de l'alinéa b), la priorité de rang des héritiers est établie conformément aux dispositions de la Loi sur les Indiens quant à la distribution des biens ab intestat, et cette priorité de rang des héritiers de la plus élevée à la plus basse s'établit comme suit :

- a) l'époux ou conjoint de fait survivant;
- b) les enfants;
- c) les petits-enfants;
- d) les parents;
- e) les frères et soeurs; et
- f) les enfants des frères et soeurs.

Les termes et expressions utilisés dans le présent paragraphe 13.02(4), mais qui ne sont pas définis dans la présente entente s'entendent au sens qui leur est attribué dans la Loi sur les Indiens.

13.03 Personne frappée d'incapacité

Si une personne membre du groupe qui a soumis un formulaire de réclamation à l'administrateur avant la date limite pour les réclamations, ou qui a été identifiée dans une confirmation du conseil de bande, est ou devient une personne frappée d'incapacité avant la réception de son indemnité, et que l'administrateur est avisé que cette personne membre du groupe est une personne frappée d'incapacité avant le paiement de son indemnité, l'administrateur paie au représentant personnel de la personne membre du groupe l'indemnité à laquelle elle aurait eu droit aux termes de la procédure de règlement des réclamations, et si l'administrateur n'en est pas ainsi avisé, l'administrateur paie l'indemnité payable à la personne membre du groupe. Si une personne membre du groupe est ou devient une personne frappée d'incapacité avant de soumettre un formulaire de réclamation à l'administrateur, le représentant personnel de la personne membre du groupe peut soumettre un formulaire de réclamation pour le compte de la personne membre du groupe avant la date limite pour les réclamations et l'indemnité à laquelle la personne membre du groupe aurait eu droit aux termes de la procédure de règlement des réclamations est payée au représentant personnel de la personne membre du groupe.

évaluateur, le comité de mise en oeuvre du règlement et ses membres et le CCPNEPS sont tenus indemnes et à couvert quant à l'ensemble des réclamations, des demandes reconventionnelles, des poursuites, des actions, des causes d'action, des demandes, des dommages, des pénalités, des préjudices, des compensations, des jugements, des dettes, des frais (y compris les honoraires et frais d'avocats) ou des autres responsabilités de quelque nature que ce soit en raison ou par suite d'un paiement ou d'un non-paiement à un à une personne membre du groupe décédée ou à une personne frappée d'incapacité ou pour son compte, ou à un exécuteur testamentaire, à un demandeur d'indemnité successorale, à la succession ou à un représentant personnel aux termes de la présente entente, et la présente entente constitue un moyen de défense péremptoire.

ARTICLE 14 - COMITÉ DE MISE EN OEUVRE DU RÈGLEMENT

14.01 Comité de mise en oeuvre du règlement

(2) Le comité de mise en oeuvre du règlement s'efforce de parvenir à un consensus. Si un consensus n'est pas possible, le comité de mise en oeuvre du règlement prend ses décisions à la majorité des voix. En cas de partage des voix, le président a voix prépondérante.

(3) Les tribunaux ou les parties, d'un commun accord, peuvent remplacer un membre du comité de mise en oeuvre du règlement, pour peu que la composition du comité de mise en oeuvre du règlement demeure conforme à celle prévue au paragraphe 14.01(1) ci-dessus.

(4) Le comité de mise en oeuvre du règlement est un organe de surveillance institué en vertu de la présente entente et investi des responsabilités suivantes :

- a) surveiller le travail de l'administrateur et la procédure de règlement des réclamations;
- b) recevoir et examiner les rapports de l'administrateur, y compris, notamment les rapports sur les frais d'administration;
- c) donner à l'administrateur ou au tiers évaluateur les directives qui peuvent alors être nécessaires conformément au mandat du comité de mise en oeuvre du règlement;
- d) recevoir et accepter ou rejeter les demandes de report de la date limite pour les réclamations, étant entendu qu'un report nécessite une ordonnance des tribunaux;
- e) proposer à l'approbation des tribunaux les protocoles qui peuvent être nécessaires à la mise en oeuvre de la présente entente;
- f) examiner les formulaires de réclamation dont il est saisi par l'administrateur; et
- g) traiter toute autre question soumise au comité de mise en oeuvre du règlement par les tribunaux ou l'un d'eux.

14.02 Décisions définitives et exécutoires

Les décisions du comité de mise en oeuvre du règlement seront définitives e exécutoires et ne sont pas susceptibles d'appel ou de révision.

14.3 Frais du comité de mise en oeuvre du règlement

Conformément au paragraphe b), le Canada assume les frais de participation au comité de mise en oeuvre du règlement des membres qui ne sont pas aussi membres du comité mixte. Les frais des membres du comité mixte sont payés conformément au paragraphe 15.01(8). Le Canada paie les débours raisonnables que tous les membres engagé pour participer au comité de mise en oeuvre du règlement.

ARTICLE 15 - COMITÉ MIXTE

15.01 Comité mixte

(1) Les tribunaux instituent un comité mixte qui est composé de trois (3) membres recommandés par les avocats du groupe et qui est investi des pouvoirs, des droits, des attributions et des responsabilités nécessaires à l'exécution des obligations qui lui incombent aux termes de la présente entente. Le comité mixte est composé d'un (1) représentant des avocats du groupe de Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP et de deux (2) représentants des avocats du groupe de McCarthy Tétrault S.E.N.C.R.L., s.r.l.

(2) Sous réserve du paragraphe 15.01, sur la recommandation du comité mixte, ou de leur propre chef, les tribunaux peuvent remplacer un membre du comité mixte dans l'intérêt véritable du groupe.

(3) Le comité mixte s'efforce raisonnablement de parvenir à un consensus. Si un consensus n'est pas possible, le comité mixte prend ses décisions à la majorité des voix.

(4) Le comité mixte représente les membres du groupe et agira dans l'intérêt véritable de l'ensemble des membres du groupe dans l'exercice de ses fonctions prévues dans la présente entente.

(5) Le comité mixte consulte le CCPNEPS et les membres du groupe, ou un sous- ensemble d'entre eux, conformément à la présente entente ou comme le comité mixte le juge approprié.

(6) Le comité mixte peut présenter les requêtes ou répondre aux requêtes ou engager les procédures qu'il juge nécessaires pour faire valoir les intérêts des membres du groupe.

(7) Le comité mixte peut répartir ses travaux entre ses membres et leurs cabinets d'avocats ou retenir les services d'autres conseillers juridiques, auquel cas les honoraires et débours de ces autres conseillers juridiques, ainsi que les taxes applicables, sont à la charge du comité mixte.

(8) Les frais et débours raisonnables du comité mixte sont payés conformément à l'article 18.02, sauf s'il n'y a pas suffisamment de fonds détenus en fiducie à l'égard des frais continus, auquel cas l'administrateur paie les frais et débours raisonnables du comité mixte et les débours sur Fonds en fiducie avec l'approbation des tribunaux.

(9) Si un membre du comité mixte estime que la majorité du comité mixte a pris une décision qui n'est pas dans l'intérêt véritable du groupe, le membre peut soumettre la décision à un arbitrage confidentiel et exécutoire pour déterminer, selon la prépondérance des probabilités, si la décision de la majorité n'est pas dans l'intérêt véritable du groupe. L'arbitre rend sa décision rapidement et sommairement et sans droit d'appel. Si les membres du comité mixte ne parviennent pas à s'entendre sur un arbitre, ils peuvent demander aux tribunaux d'en nommer un. Les frais de l'arbitrage sont à la charge du comité mixte.

(10) Le comité mixte se réunit tous les trimestres ou plus fréquemment au besoin.

ARTICLE 16 - FIDUCIAIRE ET FIDUCIE

16.01 Fiducie

Au plus tard trente (30) jours après la nomination du fiduciaire par les tribunaux, le Canada établit une seule fiducie

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

(la «Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre») d'un capital de dix dollars (10 $), que le fiduciaire détient conformément aux conditions de la présente entente.

16.02 Fiduciaire

Sur la recommandation du comité mixte, les tribunaux nomment le fiduciaire de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre, investi des pouvoirs, des droits, des attributions et des responsabilités que les tribunaux ordonnent. Sans que soit limitée la portée générale de ce qui précède, le fiduciaire est notamment investi des attributions et des responsabilités suivantes :

- a) détenir le Fonds en fiducie, le Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés et le Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations (chacun, un « Fonds») dans la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre;
- b) si le fiduciaire juge qu'il est dans l'intérêt véritable des membres du groupe d'investir les fonds de chaque Fonds (ou de l'un d'eux) en vue d'atteindre un taux de rendement maximal sans risque de perte important, eu égard à la capacité de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre et de chaque Fonds de respecter ses obligations financières;
- c) payer à l'administrateur et à toute autre personne visée à l'article 3.04 et au paragraphe 15.01(8) sur la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre au besoin, les montants alors nécessaires pour donner effet à quelque disposition de la présente entente, y compris le paiement des dommages-intérêts individuels, de l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés et des dommages-intérêts de Première Nation;
- d) retenir les services de professionnels pour l'aider dans l'exercice de ses attributions;
- e) faire preuve du même degré de soin, de diligence et de compétence dont ferait preuve une personne raisonnablement prudente dans des circonstances comparables;
- f) tenir les livres, registres et comptes nécessaires ou appropriés pour documenter l'actif détenu dans la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre et dans chaque Fonds, ainsi que chaque opération de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre et de chaque Fonds;
- g) prendre toutes les mesures raisonnables requises aux termes de la Loi de l'impôt sur le revenu, comme le prévoit la présente entente;
- h) faire rapport à l'administrateur et au Canada et au comité mixte, trimestriellement, sur l'actif détenu dans la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre et dans chaque Fonds à la fin de chaque trimestre, ou de façon intermédiaire, si une demande lui en est faite; et
- i) prendre les autres mesures qui sont accessoires à ce qui précède et exercer tous les pouvoirs qui sont nécessaires ou utiles à l'exercice des activités de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre ou à l'application des dispositions de la présente entente.

16.03 Frais des fiduciaires

Le Canada paie les honoraires, débours et autres frais du fiduciaire conformément à l'alinéa b).

16.04 Nature de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre

La Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre est établie aux fins suivantes :

- a) acquérir les fonds applicables payables par le Canada;
- b) détenir le Fonds en fiducie, le Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés et le Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations, en tant que fonds distincts dans la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre;

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- c) effectuer les décaissements nécessaires;
- d) investir des fonds dans des placements dans l'intérêt véritable des membres du groupe, comme le prévoit la présente entente; et
- e) prendre les autres mesures qui sont accessoires à ce qui précède et exercer tous les pouvoirs qui sont nécessaires ou utiles à l'application des dispositions de la présente entente.

16.05 Droits légaux

La propriété légale de l'actif de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre, y compris chaque Fonds, et le droit d'exercer les activités de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre, y compris les activités relatives à chaque Fonds, sont, sous réserve des restrictions et des autres conditions énoncées dans les présentes, dévolus exclusivement au fiduciaire, et les membres du groupe et autres bénéficiaires de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre n'ont pas le droit d'exiger ou d'imposer un partage, une division ou une distribution de quelque élément d'actif de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre, sauf dans le cadre d'une action visant à faire respecter les dispositions de la présente entente. Aucun membre du groupe ni aucun autre bénéficiaire de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre n'a ni n'est réputé avoir un droit de propriété sur l'actif de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre.

16.06 Dossiers

Le fiduciaire tient les livres, registres et comptes nécessaires ou appropriés pour documenter l'actif de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre et chaque opération de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre. Sans que soit limitée la portée générale de ce qui précède, le fiduciaire tient, à son bureau principal, des registres de toutes les opérations de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre et une liste des éléments d'actif détenus en fiducie, y compris chaque Fonds, et un registre du solde du compte de chaque Fonds de temps à autre.

16.07 Rapports trimestriels

Le fiduciaire remet à l'administrateur, au Canada et au comité mixte, dans les trente (30) jours qui suivent la fin de chaque trimestre civil, un rapport trimestriel indiquant les éléments d'actif détenus à la fin de ce trimestre dans la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre et dans chaque Fonds (y compris la durée, le taux d'intérêt ou le rendement et la date d'échéance de ceux-ci) et un relevé du solde du compte de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre au cours de ce trimestre.

16.08 Rapports annuels

L'auditeur remet à l'administrateur, au fiduciaire, au Canada, au comité mixte et aux tribunaux, dans les soixante (60) jours qui suivent la fin de chaque anniversaire de la date de capitalisation de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre, laquelle date est la fin de l'exercice de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre :

- a) les états financiers audités de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre, segmentés pour chaque Fonds, pour le dernier exercice terminé, avec le rapport de l'auditeur s'y rapportant; et
- b) un rapport présentant un sommaire des éléments d'actif détenus en fiducie à la fin de l'exercice pour chaque Fonds et les décaissements effectués par la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre au cours de l'exercice précédent.

16.09 Mode de paiement

Le fiduciaire a le pouvoir discrétionnaire exclusif de déterminer si une somme payée ou payable sur la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre est payée ou payable sur le revenu de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre ou sur le capital de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre.

16.10 Ajouts de capital

Tout revenu de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre qui n'a pas été versé au cours d'un exercice s'ajoute à son capital à la fin de cet exercice

16.11 Choix fiscaux

Pour chaque année d'imposition de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre, le fiduciaire produit les choix et désignations qu'il peut produire en vertu de la Loi de l'impôt sur le revenu et des dispositions équivalentes de la législation en matière d'impôt sur le revenu d'une province ou d'un territoire et prend toutes les autres mesures raisonnables de façon à ce que ni la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre ni aucune autre personne ne soient assujetties à l'impôt sur le revenu de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre, y compris, notamment le choix en vertu du paragraphe 104(13.1) de la Loi de l'impôt sur le revenu et des dispositions équivalentes de la législation en matière d'impôt sur le revenu d'une province ou d'un territoire pour chaque année d'imposition de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre et le montant à préciser dans le cadre de ce choix correspond au maximum autorisé en vertu de la Loi de l'impôt sur le revenu ou de la législation en matière d'impôt sur le revenu d'une province ou d'un territoire, selon le cas.

16.12 Impôt sur le revenu canadien

(1) Le Canada fait de son mieux pour exonérer de l'impôt fédéral tout revenu gagné par la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre, et le Canada tient compte des mesures qu'il a prises dans des circonstances analogues pour les conventions de règlements de recours collectifs visés à l'alinéa 81 g.3) de la Loi de l'impôt sur le revenu.

(2) Les parties conviennent que les paiements aux membres du groupe sont de la nature de dommages-intérêts pour préjudice personnel et ne constituent pas un revenu imposable et le Canada fait de son mieux pour obtenir une décision anticipée en matière d'impôt en ce sens, ou à défaut une interprétation technique ayant le même effet, dans l'un ou l'autre cas auprès de la Direction des décisions en impôt de l'Agence du revenu du Canada.

16.13 Conseillers en placement

Sur demande du fiduciaire, le comité mixte peut demander aux tribunaux de nommer des conseillers en placement pour donner au fiduciaire des conseils sur le placement des fonds détenus dans chaque Fonds de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre. Le fiduciaire paie les honoraires et frais raisonnables de tous les conseillers en placement sur le Fonds applicable de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre.

ARTICLE 17 - AUDITEUR

17.01 Nomination de l'auditeur

Sur la recommandation du comité mixte, les tribunaux nomment l'auditeur investi des pouvoirs, des droits, des attributions et des responsabilités que les tribunaux ordonnent. Sur la recommandation des parties, ou de leur propre chef, les tribunaux peuvent remplacer l'auditeur en tout temps. Sans que soit limitée la portée générale de ce qui précède, l'auditeur est notamment investi des attributions et des responsabilités suivantes :

- a) vérifier annuellement les comptes de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre conformément aux normes d'audit généralement reconnues;
- b) fournir les rapports prévus à l'article 16.08; et
- c) déposer les états financiers de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre, avec le rapport de l'auditeur s'y rapportant auprès des tribunaux et en remettre un exemplaire au Canada, au comité mixte, à l'administrateur et au fiduciaire dans les soixante (60) jours qui suivent la fin de chaque exercice de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre.

17.2 Paiement de l'auditeur

Le Canada paie les honoraires, débours et autres frais raisonnables de l'auditeur conformément à l'alinéa 3.04b).

ARTICLE 18 - FRAIS JURIDIQUES

18.01 Honoraires et frais des avocats du groupe

Sous réserve de l'approbation des tribunaux et dans les soixante (60) jours qui suivent la date de mise en oeuvre, le Canada paie aux avocats du groupe la somme de cinquante-trois millions de dollars (53 000 000 $), taxes applicables en sus, au titre de leurs honoraires et frais juridiques dans le cadre de la poursuite des actions jusqu'à la date de l'audition de l'approbation du règlement, et des conseils aux membres du groupe concernant l'entente et l'acceptation.

18.02 Frais continus

(1) Sous réserve de l'approbation des tribunaux, dans les soixante (60) jours qui suivent la date de mise en oeuvre, le Canada paie aux avocats du groupe la somme additionnelle de cinq millions de dollars (5 000 000 $), taxes applicables en sus, en fiducie (les «fonds détenus en fiducie à l'égard des frais continus») au titre de leurs honoraires et frais pour des services devant être rendus par les avocats du groupe et le comité mixte conformément à la présente entente, y compris la mise en oeuvre et l'administration de la présente entente, pour une période de quatre (4) ans après l'audition de l'approbation du règlement (les «frais continus»).

(2) Les avocats du groupe tiennent des registres appropriés et demandent l'approbation des tribunaux pour le paiement des frais continus sur les fonds détenus en fiducie à l'égard des frais continus.

(3) Les avocats du groupe déclarent semestriellement au Canada et aux tribunaux le solde des fonds détenus en fiducie à l'égard des frais continus.

(4) Les avocats du groupe demandent aux tribunaux d'ordonner le paiement des fonds détenus en fiducie à l'égard des frais continus qui demeurent en fiducie quatre (4) ans après l'audition de l'approbation du règlement.

18.03 Services juridiques continus

(1) Les avocats du groupe se partagent le travail de la prestation de services juridiques continus aux membres du groupe entre eux, ou par ailleurs selon les directives du comité mixte.

(3) Après la date de mise en oeuvre, la responsabilité de représenter les intérêts de du groupe dans son ensemble (à l'exclusion de l'aide apportée à un ou plusieurs membres du groupe en particulier qui leur est raisonnablement demandée) passe des avocats du groupe au comité mixte, et les avocats du groupe n'ont aucune autre obligation à cet égard.

(4) Il est entendu que le comité mixte et ses membres, ainsi que les avocats nommés par le comité mixte, reçoivent leurs honoraires, frais et taxes applicables conformément au paragraphe 15.01(8).

18.04 Choix d'un autre avocat

Aucune disposition de la présente entente n'empêche un membre du groupe de retenir à ses frais les services d'un autre avocat que les avocats du groupe, étant entendu, toutefois, que cet autre avocat n'a droit à aucun paiement en vertu du présent Article 18. Cet autre avocat n'a en outre pas le droit de recevoir quelque paiement de quelque nature de la part d'un membre du groupe relativement à la présente entente, que ce soit directement ou indirectement, à moins que le paiement ne soit approuvé par les tribunaux.

ARTICLE 19 - PROCÉDURE

GÉNÉRALE DE RÈGLEMENT DES DIFFÉRENDS

19.01 Renvoi initial au tiers évaluateur

(1) Sous réserve de l'article 19.03, en cas de différend quant à un droit ou à une obligation aux termes de la présente entente, sauf un différend concernant la procédure de règlement des réclamations ou un différend visé à l'article 9.07 (chacun de ces différends sauf un différend concernant la procédure de règlement des réclamations ou un différend visé à l'article 9.07, un «différend»), les parties déploient de bonne foi des efforts raisonnables pour régler le différend dans les trente (30) jours.

(2) Si un différend ne peut être résolu dans les trente (30) jours, le Canada, le comité mixte ou un membre du groupe peut le renvoyer au tiers évaluateur

(3) Le tiers évaluateur tranche le différend dont il est ainsi saisi sommairement et fournit les motifs de sa décision par écrit.

19.02 Renvoi devant les tribunaux

(1) Le Canada et le comité mixte peuvent interjeter appel d'une décision rendue par application du paragraphe 19.01(3) devant les tribunaux, et les tribunaux révisent la décision du tiers évaluateur selon une norme de décision raisonnable.

(2) Une décision des tribunaux peut être portée en appel conformément aux règles de chaque tribunal.

19.03 Exclusion des décisions relatives à la procédure de règlement des réclamations et des plans de mesures correctrices

Il est entendu que l'Article 19 ne s'applique pas aux différends concernant la procédure de règlement des réclamations, y compris, notamment l'admissibilité au groupe et l'indemnité payable à un membre du groupe, ni l'égard d'un plan de mesures correctrices, y compris, notamment son contenu ou la conformité du Canada, et que ces différends sont réglés conformément la présente entente.

ARTICLE 20 - RÉSILIATION

ET AUTRES CONDITIONS

20.01 Résiliation de l'entente

(1) Sauf comme il prévu au paragraphe 20.01(2), la présente entente demeure pleinement en vigueur jusqu'à ce que toutes les obligations qui y sont prévues soient honorées.

(2) Par dérogation à toute autre disposition contraire de la présente entente :

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- a) l'engagement demeure en vigueur et continue de s'appliquer après la résiliation de la présente entente, de même que l'article 9.06, l'article 9.07 et l'article 9.08 et la procédure de règlement des différends relatifs à l'engagement; et
- b) l'article 10.02 et l'article 10.03 demeurent en vigueur après la résiliation de la présente entente; et
- c) l'Article 21 demeure en vigueur après la résiliation de la présente entente.

20.2 Modifications

Sauf disposition expresse contraire dans la présente entente, des modifications ne peuvent être apportées à la présente entente qu'avec l'accord écrit des parties, et si les tribunaux ont rendu les ordonnances d'approbation du règlement, toute modification apportée à la présente entente ne prend effet qu'après avoir été approuvée par les tribunaux.

20.3 Aucune cession

- (1) Sauf disposition expresse contraire dans la présente entente, aucune somme payable aux termes de la présente entente ne peut faire l'objet d'une cession et toute pareille cession est nulle et sans effet.
- (2) Sauf ordonnance contraire d'un tribunal compétent et sous réserve du paragraphe 20.03(3) et de l'article 18.04, tout paiement auquel un demandeur d'indemnité a droit est versé au demandeur d'indemnité conformément aux directives que le demandeur d'indemnité donne à l'administrateur.
- (3) Les paiements à l'égard d'une personne membre du groupe décédée ou d'une personne frappée d'incapacité seront versés conformément à l'Article 13.

ARTICLE 21 -
CONFIDENTIALITÉ

21.01 Confidentialité

À moins que les parties n'en conviennent autrement, l'information donnée, créée ou obtenue dans le cadre de la mise en oeuvre de la présente entente est gardée confidentielle et ne saurait être utilisée à une autre fin que celle de la présente entente.

21.02 Destruction de l'information et des dossiers des membres du groupe

Deux (2) ans après avoir effectué le paiement des dommages-intérêts individuels, de l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés et des dommages-intérêts de Première Nation, l'administrateur détruit l'ensemble de l'information et des documents de tous les membres du groupe qu'il détient, à moins qu'un membre du groupe ou son exécuteur testamentaire ou demandeur d'indemnité successoral ne demande expressément la restitution de l'information le concernant dans le délai de deux (2) ans. Dès réception d'une demande en ce sens, l'administrateur transmet l'information concernant le membre du groupe de la manière qui lui est indiquée. Avant de détruire quelque information ou document conformément au présent article, l'administrateur prépare une analyse statistique anonymisée du groupe conformément à l'article 39 de la procédure de règlement des réclamations.

21.03 Confidentialité des négociations

À moins que les parties n'en conviennent autrement, l'engagement de confidentialité quant aux discussions et à toutes les communications, écrites ou verbales, dans le cadre et à l'égard des négociations menant à l'entente de principe et à la présente entente demeure en vigueur.

ARTICLE 22 -

COOPÉRATION22.01 Coopération quant à l'approbation et à la mise en oeuvre du règlement

Dès la signature de la présente entente, les représentants demandeurs dans les actions, les avocats du groupe et le Canada font de leur mieux pour obtenir l'approbation de la présente entente par les tribunaux et pour favoriser et faciliter la participation des membres du groupe à tous les aspects de la présente entente. Si la présente entente n'est pas approuvée par les tribunaux, les parties négocient de bonne foi pour remédier aux lacunes indiquées par les tribunaux.

22.2 Annonces publiques

Dès le prononcé des ordonnances d'approbation du règlement, les parties publient une déclaration publique conjointe annonçant le règlement selon un modèle dont les parties doivent convenir et, au moment convenu d'un commun accord, font des annonces publiques en faveur de la présente entente. À la demande raisonnable de l'une d'entre elles, les parties continuent de se prononcer publiquement en faveur de la présente entente.

Recours collectif introduit en vertu de la partie 5.1 des Règles des Cours fédérale, DORS/98-106

ENTENTE DE PRINCIPE (l'«ENTENTE»)

ATTENDU QUE les demandeurs ont introduit l'action intitulée Curve Lake First Nation and Chief Emily Whetung on her own behalf and on behalf of all members of Curve Lake First Nation and Neskantaga First Nation and Chief Christopher Moonias on his own behalf and on behalf of all members of Neskantaga First Nation v Attorney General of Canada, no dossier de la Cour 1-1673-19 devant la Cour fédérale le 11 octobre 2019 (l' «action de Curve Lake») et l'action intitulée Tataskweyak Cree Nation and Chief Doreen Spence on her own behalf and on behalf of all members of Tataskweyak Cree Nation v Attorney General of Canada, no de dossier de la Cour CI 19-01-24661 devant la Cour du Banc de la Reine du Manitoba le 20 novembre 2019 (l'«action de Tataskweyak» et, collectivement avec l'action de Curve Lake, les «actions»);

ET ATTENDU QUE la Cour du Banc de la Reine du Manitoba a attesté l'action de Tataskweyak à titre de recours collectif le 14 juillet 2020 et que la Cour fédérale a autorisé l'action de Curve Lake à titre de recours collectif le 8 octobre 2020;

ET ATTENDU QUE le «groupe dans les actions est défini comme suit :

a) Toutes les personnes qui :

i) sont membres d'une bande, au sens du paragraphe 2(1) de la Loi sur les Indiens, L.R.C. 1985, ch. 1 § 5 («Première Nation»). dont l'aliénation des terres est assujettie à cette loi ou à la Loi sur la gestion des terres des premières nations. L.C. 1999, ch. 24 (les «terres des Premières Nations»), et dont les terres des Premières Nations ont fait l'objet d'un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable (soit un avis d'ébullition de l'eau, un avis de non-consommation ou de nonutilisation ou un avis similaire) qui a duré au moins un an du 20 novembre 1995 au 20 juin 2021 («Premières Nations touchées»);

ii) n'étaient pas décédées avant le 20 novembre 2017; et

iii) ont résidé habituellement dans une Première Nation touchée alors qu'elle était visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable d'une durée d'au moins un an; et

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

b) la Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak, la Première Nation de Curve Lake, la Première Nation de Neskantaga et toute autre Première Nation qui choisit de se joindre à la présente action à titre de représentant;

Les «personnes exclues» sont des membres de la Tsuu T'ina Nation, de la Sucker Creek First Nation, de la Ennineskin Cree Nation, de la Tribu des Blood et de la Okanagan Indian Band, et Michael Darryl Isnardy.

ET ATTENDU QUE le groupe a subi d'énormes préjudices en étant privé d'eau potable salubre et que les personnes et les collectivités touchées en ont gravement souffert;

ET ATTENDU QUE le groupe a demandé un jugement sommaire sur la première question commune concernant l'existence et la portée de l'obligation du Canada de fournir de l'eau potable salubre aux membres du groupe;

ET ATTENDU QU'aucune personne membre du groupe ne s'est retirée des actions et que quelques cent vingt-deux (122) Premières Nations membres du groupe se sont jointes aux actions;

ET ATTENDU QUE le défendeur («Canada») reconnaît les difficultés auxquelles sont confrontés les membres du groupe et souhaite les aider à obtenir un accès courant à de l'eau potable salubre;

ET ATTENDU QUE le Canada est disposé à régler les actions aux conditions énoncées ci-après, sous réserve de la négociation d'une entente de règlement définitive (l'«entente de règlement»);

ET ATTENDU QUE la cheffe Doreen Spence, la Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak, la cheffe Emily Whetung la Première Nation de Curve Lake, l'ancien chef Christopher Moonias et la Première Nation de Neskantaga (collectivement, les «représentants demandeurs») sont disposés à régler les actions selon les modalités énoncées ci-après, sous réserve que ces dernières soient intégrées dans l'entente de règlement et recommandent aux Premières Nations membres du groupe d'accepter ces modalités:

PAR CONSÉQUENT, le Canada et les demandeurs négocient de bonne foi et déploient tous les efforts raisonnables pour signer l'entente de règlement au plus tard le 27 août 2021, sous réserve de l'accord des parties à une prolongation.

ARTICLE 1 GÉNÉRALITÉS

1.01 Définitions

1.02 Administration

(1) Les parties conviennent du choix de l'administrateur. Si les parties ne parviennent pas à une entente, toute partie peut présenter une requête pour obtenir des directives devant les tribunaux.

(2) L'administrateur est nommé par les tribunaux.

(3) Le Canada est seul responsable du paiement des honoraires et débours raisonnables de l'administrateur, y compris les taxes applicables.

1.03 Fonds en fiducie

(1) Dès que possible après sa nomination, l'administrateur doit établir un compte en fiducie portant intérêt à une Banque canadienne de l'annexe I (le «compte en fiducie»).

(2) Le Canada réglera le fonds en fiducie en versant un milliard quatre cent trente-huit millions de dollars (1 438 000 000 $) dans le compte en fiducie dans les soixante (60) jours suivant la date à laquelle les ordonnances approuvant l'entente de règlement deviennent définitives, compte tenu des appels.

(3) Si les avocats du groupe, de l'avis d'un actuaire expert, déterminent qu'il y a des fonds non affectés dans le fonds en fiducie (l' «excédent»), ces fonds sont distribués au profit direct ou indirect du groupe.

(4) Les avocats du groupe, suivant les conseils des membres du groupe ou d'un comité représentatif de ceux-ci, proposeront une répartition de l'excédent, qui pourra comprendre ce qui suit :

i) le transfert d'un maximum de quatre cents millions de dollars (400 000 000 $) au Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations;

ii) l'augmentation des dommages-intérêts individuels ou des dommages-intérêts de Première Nation;

iii) des dommages-intérêts individuels ou des dommages-intérêts de Première Nation pour les demandeurs en retard qui ont présenté des réclamations valides après la date limite pour les réclamations;

iv) l'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés si le Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés était insuffisant pour verser l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés pour toutes les réclamations valides; ou

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

v) de la programmation visant à promouvoir l'éducation, les pratiques culturelles ou spirituelles, l'étude ou la guérison relative aux avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme.

b) Les avocats du groupe présentent des requêtes pour obtenir des directives devant les tribunaux en vue de l'approbation de la distribution proposée de l'excédent.

(5) Il est entendu qu'il n'y aura pas de réversion au Canada des fonds en fiducie et que le Canada ne sera pas un bénéficiaire admissible de l'excédent.

1.04 Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations

(1) Les parties reconnaissent l'importance de fournir aux Premières Nations des fonds pour des projets liés à l'eau et aux eaux usées, au développement économique et aux activités culturelles. Les parties respectent l'autonomie des Premières Nations quant à l'utilisation des fonds.

(2) Dès que possible après sa nomination, l'administrateur doit établir un compte en fiducie portant intérêt à une Banque canadienne de l'annexe I (le «compte du Fonds de relance»).

(4) Si des fonds demeurent dans le compte du Fonds de relance après l'expiration de la date limite pour les réclamations et que l'administrateur a payé tous les dommages-intérêts de Première Nation (les «fonds excédentaires»), ces fonds sont distribués au profit direct ou indirect du groupe.

(5) Les avocats du groupe, suivant les conseils des membres du groupe, proposeront une répartition des fonds excédentaires, qui pourra comprendre ce qui suit :

i) l'augmentation des dommages-intérêts individuels ou des dommages-intérêts de Première Nation;

ii) des dommages-intérêts individuels ou des dommages-intérêts de Première Nation pour les demandeurs en retard qui ont présenté des réclamations valides après la date limite pour les réclamations;

iii) l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés si le Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés était insuffisant pour verser l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés pour toutes les réclamations valides; ou iv) de la programmation visant à promouvoir l'éducation, les pratiques culturelles ou spirituelles, l'étude ou la guérison relative aux avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme.

b) Les avocats du groupe présentent des requêtes pour obtenir des directives devant les tribunaux en vue de l'approbation de la distribution proposée des fonds excédentaires.

(6) Il n'y aura pas de réversion au Canada du Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations et le Canada ne sera pas un bénéficiaire admissible des fonds excédentaires.

1.05 Admissibilité

- (2) Dans les trente (30) jours suivant la réception d'une décision quant à l'admissibilité refusant l'adhésion au groupe, le demandeur et toute partie peuvent interjeter appel de la décision d'admissibilité.
- (3) La procédure d'appel à l'égard d'une décision quant à l'admissibilité est décidée par les parties.

ARTICLE 2 INDEMNISATION

RÉTROSPECTIVE

2.01 Calcul des dommages-intérêts des personnes membres du groupe

- (1) L'administrateur calculera les dommages-intérêts des personnes membres du groupe conformément à l'information présentée dans un formulaire de réclamation valide, une confirmation du conseil de bande ou tout autre renseignement qu'il juge pertinent, conformément à la formule énoncée ci-après (la «formule de calcul des dommages-intérêts individuels»).
- (2) Les personnes membres du groupe recevront des dommages-intérêts (les «dommages- intérêts individuels») :
- a) Si la personne membre du groupe n'avait pas encore atteint l'âge de 18 ans le 20 novembre 2013. pour chaque année, au cours de la période visée, durant laquelle elle résidait habituellement dans une réserve pendant qu'un ans concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme était en vigueur; ou
 - b) Si la personne membre du groupe avait atteint l'âge de 18 ans avant le 20 novembre 2013, pour chaque année du 20 novembre 2013 jusqu'à la fin de la période visée, durant laquelle elle résidait habituellement dans une réserve alors qu'un ans concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme était en vigueur.
- (3) Les dommages-intérêts individuels seront payés environ aux taux suivants, les taux réels devant être déterminés par les avocats du groupe sur avis d'un actuaire expert :
- a) Mille trois cents dollars (1 300 $) par année pour un ans d'ébullition de l'eau qui vise une Première Nation qui n'est pas une Première Nation éloignée;
 - b) Mille six cent cinquante (1 650 $) par année pour un ans de non-consommation qui vise une Première Nation qui n'est pas une Première Nation éloignée;
 - c) Deux mille dollars (2 000 $) par année pour un ans de non-utilisation qui vise une Première Nation qui n'est pas une Première Nation éloignée; et
 - d) Deux mille dollars (2 000 $) par année pour tout ans concernant la qualité de l'eau potable d'une Première Nation éloignée
- (4) Les dommages-intérêts individuels seront payés au prorata de toute partie d'une année pour laquelle ils sont exigibles.

2.02 Paiement des dommages-intérêts individuels des membres du groupe

- (1) Dans un délai raisonnable que les parties doivent fixer en consultation avec l'administrateur, l'administrateur doit verser à chaque personne membre du groupe les dommages-intérêts individuels des fonds en fiducie conformément à la formule de calcul des dommages-intérêts individuels.

2.02 Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés

- (1) En plus des dommages-intérêts individuels, les personnes membres du groupe peuvent indiquer sur leur formulaire de réclamation qu'ils réclament des dommages-intérêts pour des conditions médicales précises qui ont été causées par un ans concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme dans une réserve où elles résidaient habituellement (les «préjudices déterminés»). Il est entendu que le demandeur doit établir que le préjudice a été causé par l'utilisation d'eau, autre que l'eau de source, conformément à un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme ou par le manque d'eau propre pendant un an concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

(2) Les parties déterminent la liste des préjudices déterminés, ainsi que l'indemnité pour chaque préjudice déterminé (l'«indemnité pour préjudices déterminés»).

(3) L'administrateur doit établir un compte en fiducie portant intérêt à une Banque canadienne de l'annexe I (le «compte d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés»).

(4) Le Canada réglera le Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés en versant cinquante millions de dollars (50 000 000 $) dans le compte d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés dans les soixante (60) jours suivant la date à laquelle les ordonnances approuvant l'entente de règlement deviennent définitives, compte tenu des appels.

(5) Les parties conviennent de ce qui suit :

a) Les moyens de prouver un préjudice déterminé d'une manière non conflictuelle et culturellement sensible de manière à ne pas traumatiser de nouveau les demandeurs:

b) Un délai approprié pour que l'administrateur détermine la validité d'une demande d'indemnisation pour des préjudices déterminés (une «décision relative aux préjudices déterminés»); et

c) Un mécanisme d'appel et un calendrier appropriés;

(6) Les avocats du groupe aident les personnes membres du groupe ou leurs représentants, sur demande, à présenter une demande d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés ou à faire appel d'une décision relative aux préjudices déterminés sans frais pour le Canada ou la personne membre du groupe.

(7) Dans les quatre-vingt-dix (90) jours suivant la date limite pour les réclamations, l'administrateur doit déterminer s'il y a suffisamment de fonds dans le Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés pour payer l'indemnité pour chaque réclamation valide.

a) S'il y a suffisamment de fonds dans le Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés, l'administrateur doit verser à chaque membre du groupe l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés: ou

b) En cas d'insuffisance de fonds dans le Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés, l'administrateur verse aux personnes membres du groupe leur quote-part du Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés, proportionnelle à l'indemnisation pour les préjudices déterminés qui leur seraient dus.

(8) Il n'y a pas de réversion au Canada du Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés.

(9) Si des fonds restent dans le Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés après avoir payé toutes les demandes d'indemnisation pour les dommages déterminés, l'administrateur les verse au fonds en fiducie.

2.04 Calcul des dommages-intérêts de Première Nation membre du groupe

(2) Chaque Première Nation membre du groupe recevra une indemnité de base de cinq cent mille dollars (500 000 $) (l'«indemnité de base»).

2.5 Paiement des dommages-intérêts des Premières Nations membres du groupe

- (1) L'administrateur paie l'indemnité de base et les dommages-intérêts de Première Nation provenant du Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations.
- (2) L'administrateur paie l'indemnité de base à chaque Première Nation membre du groupe dans les quatre-vingt-dix (90) jours suivant l'approbation de l'entente de règlement par les tribunaux, y compris tous les appels, et à une Première Nation membre du groupe qui donne un avis d'acceptation aux avocats du groupe.
- (3) Tous les six (6) mois après que l'indemnité de base a été versée conformément au paragraphe 2.05(2), l'administrateur paie à la Première Nation membre du groupe les dommages-intérêts de Première Nation qui ont été accumulés à ce jour.

2.06 Aucune disposition relative aux préjudices continus

- (1) L'entente ne prévoit pas que des dommages-intérêts seront accordés aux membres du groupe à l'égard des avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme qui commencent ou se poursuivent après le 20 juin 2021, et les membres du groupe ne renoncent pas à quelque réclamation à l'égard de ces dommages-intérêts futurs.

2.7 Responsabilité du Canada

- (1) Les parties conviennent expressément qu'au moment de faire les paiements prévus dans l'entente de règlement, la responsabilité du Canada envers les personnes membres du groupe et les Premières Nations membres du groupe qui ont accepté l'entente de règlement pour les préjudices jusqu'au 20 juin 2021, en raison du défaut du Canada de fournir de l'eau potable propre, est terminée.
- (2) Les parties devront convenir d'un libellé de renonciation spécifique pour l'entente de règlement.

ARTICLE 3 RÉPARATION PROSPECTIVE

3.01 Plan d'action pour les Premières Nations membres du groupe devant être mis en oeuvre

- (1) Le Canada déploie tous les efforts raisonnables pour appuyer l'élimination des avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme qui concernent les membres du groupe, y compris en prenant les mesures énoncées dans le plan d'action, dans les délais prévus dans le projet.
- (2) Le plan d'action peut être modifié avec le consentement des parties, en plus d'être mis à jour régulièrement par le Canada au fur et à mesure que des progrès sont réalisés.
- (3) Aucune disposition de l'entente n'empêche le Canada de prendre des mesures supplémentaires au profit des membres du groupe, mesures qui ne sont pas prévues dans le plan d'action.

3.02 Engagement à prendre des mesures supplémentaires

- (1) En plus du plan d'action, le défendeur doit faire tous les efforts raisonnables pour veiller à ce que les personnes membres du groupe qui vivent sur les réserves aient régulièrement accès à l'eau potable à leur domicile, que ce soit à partir d'un réseau d'eau public ou privé approuvé par une résolution du conseil de bande, y compris les systèmes sur place, qui respecte les exigences les plus strictes entre les exigences fédérales ou les normes provinciales régissant la qualité de l'eau résidentielle (l'«engagement»). Il est entendu :
 - a) qu'un accès courant doit permettre toutes les utilisations habituelles et nécessaires de l'eau dans une maison canadienne située dans un endroit similaire, y compris, notamment l'eau potable, pour se laver et pour l'hygiène personnelle, pour la préparation d'aliments et pour laver la vaisselle, pour l'assainissement et pour la blanchisserie;

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

b) que l'engagement se limite aux efforts raisonnables du Canada, y compris la fourniture réelle de financement au titre des coûts, de formation, de planification et d'assistance technique;

c) que si, malgré les efforts raisonnables du Canada, un accès courant ne peut être obtenu, le Canada n'est pas tenu de garantir un accès courant au domicile d'une personne membre du groupe; et

d) que les facteurs qui peuvent être pris en compte dans la détermination des efforts raisonnables comprennent, notamment :

i) les points de vue de la Première Nation;

ii) les exigences fédérales ou les normes et protocoles provinciaux relatifs à l'eau;

iii) si de la surveillance et des essais sont effectués sur le réseau d'alimentation en eau; et iv) l'emplacement physique du domicile, y compris la proximité des réseaux d'alimentation en eau centralisés et l'éloignement.

(2) Le Canada doit dépenser au moins six milliards de dollars (6 000 000 000 $) jusqu'en 2030, comme le prévoit le Budget principal des dépenses de Services aux Autochtones Canada, au taux d'au moins quatre cents millions de dollars (400 000 000 $) par année, pour respecter l'engagement en finançant le coût réel de la construction, de la mise à niveau, de l'exploitation, de l'aménagement et de l'entretien de l'infrastructure de l'eau dans les réserves pour les Premières Nations (les «dépenses dans le cadre de l'engagement»).

a) Le Canada doit remettre aux avocats du groupe un état annuel de toutes les dépenses dans le cadre de l'engagement jusqu'en 2030.

b) Sur demande, le Canada remet à toute Première Nation membre du groupe un état des dépenses dans le cadre de l'engagement qu'il a reçu.

3.03 Abrogation et remplacement de la Loi sur la salubrité de l'eau potable des Premières Nations

(1) Le Canada fera tous les efforts raisonnables pour déposer une loi abrogeant la Loi sur la salubrité de l'eau potable des Premières Nations, L.C. 2013, ch. 21 (la «LSEPPN») au plus tard le 31 mars 2022.

(2) Le Canada fera tous les efforts raisonnables pour élaborer et déposer une loi remplaçant la LSEPPN (la «loi remplaçante»). en consultation avec les Premières Nations, et pour déposer cette loi au plus tard le 31 décembre 2022.

(3) La loi remplaçante vise les objectifs suivants :

a) Assurer la viabilité des réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau des Premières Nations, en fonction des prémisses suivantes :

i) Définir des normes minimales de qualité de l'eau pour les réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau des Premières Nations, compte tenu des normes qui s'appliquent directement aux collectivités des Premières Nations; et

ii) Définir des normes minimales de capacité pour l'approvisionnement en eau des collectivités des Premières Nations, quant au volume par personne membre de la collectivité;

b) Elaborer une approche transparente pour la construction, l'amélioration et la prestation de services d'approvisionnement en eau potable et de traitement des eaux usées pour les Premières Nations;

c) Confirmer le financement adéquat et durable des réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau et de traitement des eaux usées des Premières Nations; et

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

d) Appuyer la prise en charge volontaire de l'infrastructure d'approvisionnement en eau et de traitement des eaux usées par les Premières Nations.

(4) Indépendamment de son engagement de déposer la loi remplaçante, le Canada appuie l'élaboration d'initiatives en matière de gouvernance des Premières Nations, comme il est décrit à l'article 3.04, ci-après.

3.04 Comité consultatif des Premières Nations

(1) Le Canada fournit vingt millions de dollars (20 000 000 $) de financement jusqu'à l'exercice 2025/2026, pour la création du comité consultatif des Premières Nations sur l'eau potable salubre (le « CCPNEPS »).

(2) La composition du CCPNEPS est représentative de la diversité des collectivités, des langues, des genres, des territoires, des compétences, des connaissances et de l'expérience de la précarité de l'approvisionnement en eau des Premières Nations membres du groupe au Canada.

(3) Le CCPNEPS est investi des fonctions principales suivantes :

a) Travailler avec les Premières Nations membres du groupe à assurer une supervision et un encadrement et à faire des recommandations à Services aux Autochtones Canada propres à favoriser l'élaboration et la mise en oeuvre d'initiatives stratégiques prospectives, y compris notamment :

i) L'élaboration de la stratégie à long terme pour l'approvisionnement en eau et le traitement des eaux usées de Services aux Autochtones Canada dans les réserves des Premières Nations membres du groupe; et

ii) L'élaboration de la loi remplaçante:

b) Fournir à Services aux Autochtones Canada des conseils et des perspectives stratégiques propres à favoriser la viabilité à long terme pour de l'eau potable salubre dans les collectivités des Premières Nations: et

c) Appuyer l'établissement des besoins et des priorités du financement pour l'approvisionnement en eau et le traitement des eaux usées dans les collectivités des Premières Nations.

(4) Les parties établissent conjointement le mandat du CCPNEPS

3.05 Initiatives en matière de gouvernance des Premières Nations

(1) Le Canada fournit neuf millions de dollars (9 000 000 $) de financement aux Premières Nations pour qu'elles élaborent leurs propres règlements et initiatives en matière de gouvernance jusqu'à l'exercice 2025/2026 (le « Fonds pour la gouvernance de l'eau »).

(2) La capitalisation du Fonds pour la gouvernance de l'eau s'effectue jusqu'à la période indiquée, que la loi remplaçante soit ou non adoptée, notamment dans les délais prévus.

(4) Les parties établissent conjointement le mandat du Fonds pour la gouvernance de l'eau.

3.06 Accord sur les mesures requises

(1) Le Canada doit consulter sans délai chaque Première Nation membre du groupe qui l'avise que l'engagement n'est pas respecté ou qu'il cesse d'être respecté (chacune étant une « Première Nation insuffisamment desservie ») en vue de respecter l'engagement.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

(2) Le Canada doit déployer tous les efforts raisonnables pour parvenir à un accord avec la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie précisant les mesures qui sont nécessaires pour respecter l'engagement (un « accord de réparation »).

(3) Le Canada et la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie doivent se conformer à l'accord de réparation.

3.07 Règlement des différends concernant les mesures requises

(1) Si le Canada ne parvient pas à un accord de réparation avec une Première Nation insuffisamment desservie après six (6) mois, le Canada et la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie soumettent chacun leur projet d'accord de réparation à un processus de règlement des différends (la « procédure de règlement des différends relatifs à l'engagement »).

(2) La procédure de règlement des différends relatifs à l'engagement sera élaborée conjointement par les parties et intégrera les pratiques de règlement des différends autochtones.

[Cet espace a été volontairement laissé en blanc]

LES PARTIES CONVIENNENT DES MODALITÉS CI-DESSUS et elles négocieront de bonne foi et feront tous les efforts raisonnables pour signer l'entente de règlement au plus tard le 27 août 2021, ou à toute autre date dont les parties peuvent convenir.

LE PROCUREUR GÉNÉRAL DU CANADA

Défendeur

ORDONNANCE

LA PRESENTE REQUÊTE en autorisation, présentée par les demandeurs, a été entendue le 16 septembre 2020.

À LA LECTURE du dossier de requête des demandeurs et du consentement du défendeur.

1. LA COUR ORDONNE que ce recours soit et est autorisé par les présentes comme un recours collectif conformément aux Règles des cours fédérales, 334.16 et 334.17.

2. LA COUR ORDONNE ET DÉCLARE que le groupe est défini comme suit :

(a) Toutes les personnes autres que les personnes exclues :

(i) qui sont membres d'une bande au sens du paragraphe 2(1) de la Loi sur les Indiens, L.R.C. 1985, c. I-5 (« Première Nation »), dont la disposition des terres est assujettie à cette loi ou à la Loi sur la gestion des terres des premières nations, L.C. 1999, c. 24 (les « terres des Premières Nations »), et dont les terres des Premières Nations sont visées par un avis sur la qualité de l'eau potable (qu'il s'agisse d'un avis d'ébullition d'eau, d'un avis de ne pas boire ou d'un avis de non-utilisation ou d'un autre type d'avis) qui a duré au moins un an depuis le 20 novembre 1995 jusqu'à maintenant (les « Premières Nations touchées »).

(ii) qui n'étaient pas décédées avant le 20 novembre 2017; et

(iii) qui résidaient habituellement dans une Première Nation touchée alors visée par un avis sur la qualité de l'eau potable qui a duré au moins un an; et

Les « personnes exclues » sont les membres de la Nation des Tsuu T'ina, de la Première Nation de Sucker Creek, de la Nation des Cris d'Ermineskin, de la Tribu des Gens-du-Sang et de la bande indienne d'Okanagan, et Michael Daryl Isnardy.

3. LA COUR ORDONNE ET DÉCLARE que, jusqu'à ce que les réclamations invoquées dans le présent recours collectif soient entièrement et définitivement décidées, réglées, interrompues ou abandonnées, y compris l'épuisement de tous les droits d'appel, la permission de la Cour est requise pour introduire tout autre recours, instance ou procédure pour le compte d'un membre du groupe à l'égard des réclamations invoquées dans le présent recours, sauf les recours, instances ou procédures introduits pour le compte des membres du groupe qui se sont exclus du présent recours collectif de la manière prescrite ci-après.

4. LA COUR ORDONNE ET DÉCLARE que les questions communes suivantes soient et sont par les présentes autorisées aux fins de résolution pour le compte du groupe dans son ensemble:

- (a) Depuis le 20 novembre 1995 jusqu'à maintenant, le défendeur a-t-il un devoir ou une obligation envers les membres du groupe de prendre des mesures raisonnables pour leur fournir ou s'assurer qu'il leur soit fourni ou s'abstenir d'interdire un accès adéquat à de l'eau potable pour l'utilisation humaine?

5. LA COUR ORDONNE ET DÉCLARE qu'un sous-groupe soit et est par les présentes reconnu pour les membres de chaque Première Nation touchée, et la Première Nation elle-même, s'il s'agit d'une Nation participante:

6. LA COUR ORDONNE ET DÉCLARE que les questions communes suivantes soient et sont, par les présentes, autorisées aux fins de résolution pour le compte de chaque sous-groupe :

- (a) Si la réponse à la question commune 4(a) est « oui », le Canada a-t-il manqué à ses devoirs ou obligations envers les membres du sous-groupe?
- (b) Si la réponse à la question commune 6(a) est « oui », une violation de la Charte des droits et libertés (« Charte ») est-elle sauvée par l'art. 1 de la Charte?
- (c) Si la réponse à la question commune 6(a) est « oui », le manquement du défendeur a-t-il causé une entrave importante et déraisonnable à l'utilisation et à la jouissance de leurs terres par les membres du groupe ou leurs Premières Nations?

- (d) Si la réponse à la question commune 6(a) est « oui » et que la réponse à la question commune 6(b) est « non », les membres du sous-groupe peuvent-ils obtenir des dommages en vertu de l'art. 24(1) de la Charte?
- (e) La causalité des dommages subis par les membres du sous-groupe peut-elle être considérée comme une question commune?
- (f) La Cour peut-elle procéder à une évaluation globale de tout ou partie des dommages subis par les membres du sous-groupe?
- (g) La conduite du défendeur justifie-t-elle l'octroi de dommages-intérêts punitifs et, dans l'affirmative, de quel montant?
- (h) La Cour devrait-elle ordonner au défendeur de prendre des mesures pour fournir aux membres du sous-groupe ou s'assurer qu'il leur soit fourni ou s'abstenir d'interdire un accès adéquat à de l'eau potable?
- (i) Dans l'affirmative, quelles mesures devraient être ordonnées?

8. LA COUR ORDONNE ET DÉCLARE que McCarthy Tétrault S.E.N.C.R.L., s.r.l. et Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP sont nommés par les présentes avocats du groupe (les «avocats du groupe »).

9. LA COUR ORDONNE ET DÉCLARE que les demandeurs et le défendeur déploient des efforts raisonnables pour convenir de la nomination d'un administrateur aux fins de donner avis de l'autorisation du présent recours collectif (l'« administrateur »). Les parties avisent la Cour de la nomination de l'administrateur dans les soixante (60) jours suivant la date de la présente ordonnance, à défaut de quoi la Cour nomme un administrateur dûment qualifié.

10. LA COUR ORDONNE que les membres du groupe soient avisés que le présent recours a été autorisé en tant que recours collectif de la manière suivante, ce qui constitue et est par les présentes réputé constituer un avis adéquat :

- (a) l'avis simplifié figurant à l'annexe A et l'avis détaillé figurant à l'annexe B, ainsi que la traduction en français de ces documents sont affichés, tel que convenu par les parties, sur les sites Web respectifs des avocats du groupe, du défendeur et de l'administrateur;
- (b) l'administrateur publie l'avis simplifié dans les journaux indiqués à l'annexe C jointe aux présentes, en format 1/4 de page dans l'édition de fin de semaine de chaque journal, si possible;
- (c) l'administrateur distribue l'avis simplifié à tous les bureaux de la Première Nation de Curve Lake, de la Première Nation de Neskantaga et de l'Assemblée des Premières Nations;

Avis juridique

Êtes-vous membre d'une Première Nation qui a été visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme?

Une poursuite pourrait avoir une incidence sur vous et votre Première Nation. Veuillez lire ceci attentivement.

Vous pourriez être touché par un recours collectif en raison du manque d'accessibilité à l'eau potable propre sur les réserves des Premières Nations.

La Cour du Banc de la Reine du Manitoba et la Cour fédérale du Canada ont décidé qu'un recours collectif au nom d'un « groupe » de membres des Premières Nations et de membres d'une bande pouvait être intenté. Les membres d'une bande peuvent choisir de demeurer dans le groupe. Les Premières Nations peuvent choisir de se joindre ou non au groupe. Il n'y a pas d'argent disponible à l'heure actuelle et rien ne garantit que le recours collectif sera accueilli.

Les tribunaux ont nommé la Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak, la cheffe Doreen Spence, la Première Nation de Curve Lake, la cheffe Emily Whetung, la Première Nation de Neskantaga et le chef Christopher Moonias à titre de représentants demandeurs pour le groupe.

De quoi s'agit-il?

Le présent recours collectif allègue que le Canada a manqué à ses obligations en ne veillant pas à ce que les communautés des Premières Nations aient un accès adéquat à de l'eau potable salubre. Le recours collectif allègue que les membres de ces communautés et les communautés elles-mêmes ont subi des préjudices émotionnels, physiques, financiers et spirituels. Le recours collectif allègue que le Canada a manqué à ses obligations fiduciaires et à son devoir de diligence et a contrevenu à la Charte des droits et libertés. La Cour n'a pas statué sur la véracité de ces allégations. En l'absence de règlement, les demandeurs devront prouver leurs prétentions devant le tribunal.

Si vous avez des questions au sujet du présent recours collectif, vous pouvez communiquer avec M. Eric Khan au 1-800-538-0009 ou à l'adresse info@classaction2.com.

Qui représente le groupe?

Particuliers membres du groupe : Qui est inclus et qui est exclu?

Membres d'une bande inclus : Le groupe comprend les membres d'une bande (au sens de la Loi sur les Indiens) : a) dont la réserve était visée par un avis concernant l'eau potable (tel qu'un avis d'ébullition de l'eau, etc.) pendant au moins un an à un moment quelconque du 20 novembre 1995 jusqu'à maintenant; b) qui n'étaient pas décédés avant le 20 novembre 2017; et c) qui vivent habituellement dans leur réserve.

Membres d'une bande exclus : Les membres de la Nation des Tsuu T'ina, de la Première Nation de Sucker Creek, de la Nation des Cris d'Ermineskin, de la Tribu des Gens-du-Sang, de la bande indienne d'Okanagan et Michael Daryl Isnardy sont exclus de ce recours collectif.

Particuliers : Quelles sont vos options?

Demeurer dans le groupe : Pour demeurer dans le groupe, vous n'avez rien à faire. Si le groupe obtient de l'argent ou des avantages, les avocats du groupe donneront un avis sur la façon de réclamer votre part. Vous serez légalement lié par toutes les ordonnances et tous les jugements, et vous ne pourrez pas poursuivre le Canada au sujet des mêmes réclamations en droit.

Le fait de demeurer dans le groupe n'aura pas d'incidence sur le soutien reçu des organismes communautaires qui sont financés par un gouvernement.

S'exclure du groupe : Si vous ne souhaitez pas participer à ce recours collectif, vous devez vous en exclure. Si vous vous excluez, vous ne pouvez pas obtenir d'argent ni d'avantages de ce litige. Pour vous exclure, veuillez visiter [NDR : Insérer le site Web de l'administrateur pour ce recours] pour obtenir un coupon d'exclusion ou écrire à CA2 Inc., 9, avenue Prince Arthur, Toronto (Ontario) M5R 1B2 afin de demander votre exclusion du présent recours collectif. Indiquez vos nom, adresse, numéro de téléphone et apposez votre signature. Votre demande d'exclusion doit être envoyée au plus tard le [NDR : 90 jours à partir de la date de la première publication de l'avis].

Premières Nations : Quelles sont vos options?

Choisir de se joindre au groupe : Les Premières Nations qui souhaitent se joindre au groupe et faire valoir des réclamations au nom de leur communauté doivent prendre des mesures pour participer au recours. Pour participer au recours ou obtenir de plus amples renseignements, veuillez communiquer avec l'administrateur au 1-800-538-0009 ou à l'adresse info@classaction2.com. Les Premières Nations peuvent également communiquer avec l'avocate du groupe Stephanie Willsey (sans frais : 1-877-244-7711; swillsey@mccarthy.ca) ou l'avocat du groupe Kevin Hille 416-598-3694; khille@oktlaw.com). Votre demande de participation doit être envoyée au plus tard 120 jours avant la décision quant aux réclamations des membres du groupe.

Transmettre l'information aux personnes qui en ont besoin

Les représentants demandeurs et les avocats du groupe demandent aux travailleurs de la santé, aux travailleurs sociaux, aux dirigeants communautaires des Premières Nations, aux membres de la famille, aux aidants et aux amis des membres du groupe de bien vouloir transmettre l'information

aux membres du groupe qui auraient de la difficulté à lire ou à comprendre le présent avis. On peut obtenir de plus amples renseignements sur le présent recours sur le site Web ou en communiquant avec l'administrateur. Veuillez montrer le présent avis aux personnes qui pourraient être touchées par le présent recours ou à leurs aidants.

Annexe BÊtes-vous membre d'une Première Nation qui a été visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme?

Si vous avez répondu « OUI », un recours collectif pourrait avoir une incidence sur vos droits et les droits des Premières Nations

Un tribunal a autorisé le présent avis

- Vous pourriez être touché par un recours collectif visant l'accès à l'eau potable propre dans vos communautés des Premières Nations.
- La Cour du Banc de la Reine du Manitoba et la Cour fédérale du Canada ont décidé que des recours collectifs peuvent être introduits pour le compte d'un « groupe » de membres des Premières Nations et de membres d'une bande. Les membres d'une bande peuvent choisir de demeurer dans le groupe. Les Premières Nations peuvent choisir de se joindre ou non au groupe. Les tribunaux ont nommé la Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak, la cheffe Doreen Spence, la Première Nation de Curve Lake, la cheffe Emily Whetung, la Première Nation de Neskantaga et le chef Christopher Moonias à titre de représentants demandeurs pour le groupe.
- Les tribunaux n'ont pas statué si le Canada avait eu des comportements fautifs, et la question à savoir si le Canada a fait quelque chose de mal doit éventuellement être décidée par le tribunal. Il n'y a pas d'argent offert actuellement et rien ne garantit qu'il y en aura. Cependant, vos droits sont touchés et vous avez un choix à faire maintenant. Le présent avis vise à vous aider, vous et votre Première Nation, à faire ce choix.

RENSEIGNEMENTS DE BASE

1. Pourquoi le présent avis est-il remis?

Les tribunaux ont des recours collectifs « autorisés ». Cela signifie que les poursuites respectent les exigences relatives aux recours collectifs et peuvent être instruites. Si vous êtes inclus, vous pourriez avoir des droits légaux et des options avant que les tribunaux ne statuent sur le bien-fondé des réclamations intentées contre le Canada en votre nom. Le présent avis tente d'expliquer toutes ces démarches.

Le juge en chef Joyal de la Cour du banc de la Reine du Manitoba préside actuellement l'affaire Tataskweyak Cree Nation and Chief Doreen Spence v. Canada. Le juge Favel de la Cour fédérale du Canada préside actuellement l'affaire Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Nesktanaga First Nation, and Chief Christopher Moonias v. Canada. Les personnes qui intentent une poursuite sont appelées les demandeurs. Le Canada est le défendeur. Un lien vers la dernière version de la demande introductive d'instance (le document juridique énonçant les allégations contre le Canada) est disponible ici : <https://www.mccarthy.ca/fr/action-collective-concernant-les-avis-sur-la-qualite-de-leau-potable-des-premieres-nations>.

2. Quel est l'objet du présent recours?

Les présents recours collectifs allèguent que le Canada a manqué à ses obligations en ne veillant pas à ce que les communautés des Premières Nations aient un accès adéquat à de l'eau potable salubre. Les recours collectifs allèguent également que les membres de ces communautés et les communautés elles-mêmes ont subi des préjudices émotionnels, physiques, financiers et spirituels. Les recours collectifs allèguent que le Canada a manqué à ses obligations fiduciaires et à son devoir de diligence et a contrevenu à la Charte des droits et libertés. Les tribunaux n'ont pas statué (et le Canada n'a fait aucun aveu) quant à la véracité de l'une ou l'autre de ces affirmations. S'il n'y a pas de règlement avec le Canada, les demandeurs devront prouver leurs prétentions devant la Cour.

Si vous éprouvez des difficultés à comprendre cet enjeu ou si vous avez des questions au sujet du recours collectif, vous pouvez composer le 1-800-538-0009 pour obtenir de l'aide.

3. Pourquoi s'agit-il d'un recours collectif?

Dans un recours collectif, les « représentants demandeurs » (en l'espèce, la Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak, la cheffe Doreen Spence, la Première Nation de Curve Lake, la cheffe Emily Whetung, la Première Nation de Nesktanaga et le chef Christopher Moonias) ont poursuivi en justice au nom des particuliers membres d'une bande et de Premières Nations qui ont des revendications semblables. Tous ces particuliers membres d'une bande font partie du « groupe » ou sont des « membres du groupe », de même que les Premières Nations qui choisissent de se joindre au recours collectif. La Cour règle les questions pour tous les membres du groupe dans une même affaire, sauf (dans le cas des particuliers membres du groupe) pour ceux qui se retirent du groupe (option d'exclusion) et (dans le cas des Premières Nations) pour ceux qui ne se joignent pas au recours collectif (option de participation).

QUESTIONS? APPELEZ SANS FRAIS AU 1-800-538-0009 OU VISITEZ
HTTPS://CLASSACTION2.COM/

4. Qui est membre du groupe?

Le groupe comprend et exclut les personnes suivantes :

Toutes les personnes, sauf les « personnes exclues » :

- (i) qui sont membres d'une bande au sens du paragraphe 2(1) de la Loi sur les Indiens, L.R.C. 1985, c. I-5 (« Première Nation »), dont la disposition des terres est assujettie à cette loi ou à la Loi sur la gestion des terres des premières nations, L.C. 1999, c. 24 (les « terres des Premières Nations »), et dont les terres des Premières Nations sont visées par un avis sur la qualité de l'eau potable (qu'il s'agisse d'un avis d'ébullition d'eau, d'un avis de ne pas boire, d'un avis de non-utilisation ou d'un autre type d'avis) qui a duré au moins un an depuis le 20 novembre 1995 (les « Premières Nations touchées »);
- (ii) qui n'étaient pas décédées deux ans avant le début du présent recours (soit, au plus tard le 20 novembre 2017);
- (iii) qui résidaient habituellement dans une Première Nation touchée pendant qu'elle était visée par un avis sur la qualité de l'eau potable qui a duré au moins un an; et
- (iv) la Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak, la Première Nation de Curve Lake, la Première Nation de Neskantaga et toute autre Première Nation touchée qui choisit de se joindre au présent recours à titre de représentant (les « Nations participantes »).

Les « personnes exclues » sont des membres de la Nation des Tsun T'ina, de la Première Nation de Sucker Creek, de la Nation des Cris d'Ermineskin, de la Tribu des Gens-du-Sang, de la bande indienne d'Okanagan et de la bande indienne d'Okanagan et de Michael Daryi Isnardy.

5. Que veulent les demandeurs?

Les demandeurs réclament des sommes d'argent et d'autres avantages pour le groupe, notamment des infrastructures d'approvisionnement en eau. Les demandeurs réclament également des honoraires d'avocats et des frais de justice, majorés des intérêts.

6. Y a-t-il de l'argent offert maintenant pour les membres du groupe?

Il n'y a pas d'argent ni d'avantages à l'heure actuelle parce que la Cour n'a pas encore statué quant aux comportements fautifs du Canada et que les deux parties n'ont pas conclu de règlement. Rien ne garantit que des sommes d'argent ou des avantages seront obtenus. Si de l'argent ou d'autres avantages deviennent disponibles, un avis sera donné sur la façon de réclamer votre part.

VOS DROITS ET OPTIONS

Chaque particulier membre d'une bande doit décider s'il veut rester ou non dans le groupe, et doit le faire au plus tard le [NDR : 90 jours à partir de la première publication de l'avis]. Les

Premières Nations doivent décider de se joindre ou non au groupe au plus tard 120 jours avant que la Cour ne statue sur les réclamations des membres du groupe.

7. Que se passe-t-il si je ne fais rien? Que se passe-t-il si la Première Nation ne fait rien?

Particuliers membres d'une bande : Si vous ne faites rien, vous resterez automatiquement dans le recours collectif. Vous serez lié par toutes les ordonnances de la Cour, bonnes ou mauvaises. Si des sommes d'argent ou d'autres avantages sont attribués, vous pourriez avoir à prendre des mesures après avoir reçu un avis pour recevoir des avantages.

Premières Nations : Les Premières Nations doivent choisir de se joindre au recours collectif pour recevoir les avantages éventuels et être liées par toutes les ordonnances, bonnes ou mauvaises.

8. Que se passe-t-il si je ne veux pas me joindre au recours? Que se passe-t-il si une Première Nation souhaite se joindre au recours?

Particuliers membres d'une bande : Si vous ne souhaitez pas être partie à l'instance, vous devez vous retirer – c'est-à-dire choisir « l'option d'exclusion ». Si vous vous retirez, vous ne recevrez aucun avantage pouvant découler du recours collectif. Vous ne serez pas lié par des ordonnances de la Cour et vous conservez le droit de poursuivre le Canada en tant que particulier à l'égard des questions en l'espèce.

Pour vous exclure, envoyez une communication indiquant que vous souhaitez être retiré du groupe de Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Neskantaga First Nation and Chief Christopher Moonias v. Canada, dossier de la Cour n° CI-19-01-2466. Indiquez vos nom, adresse, numéro de téléphone et apposez votre signature. Vous pouvez également obtenir un formulaire d'exclusion à l'adresse [insérer le lien Web de l'administrateur]. Vous devez faire parvenir votre demande d'exclusion au plus tard le [NDR : 90 jours à partir de la première publication de l'avis] à : CA2 Inc., 9, avenue Prince Arthur, Toronto (Ontario) M5R 1B2 ou info@classaction2.com.

Composez le 1-800-538-0009 si vous avez des questions sur la façon de vous exclure du recours collectif.

Premières Nations : Les Premières Nations qui souhaitent se joindre au recours collectif et faire valoir des réclamations au nom de leur bande ou de leur communauté doivent prendre des mesures pour s'y joindre – c'est-à-dire choisir l'« option de participation ». Pour choisir l'option de participation ou pour obtenir de plus amples renseignements, veuillez communiquer avec l'administrateur au 1-800-538-0009 ou à l'adresse info@classaction2.com. Les Premières Nations peuvent également communiquer avec les avocats du groupe et demander l'avocate du groupe Stephanie Willsey (sans frais : 1-877-244-7711 ou swillsey@mccarthy.ca) ou l'avocat du groupe Kevin Hille à khille@oktlaw.com ou au 416-598-3694. Les demandes de participation des Premières Nations doivent être envoyées au plus tard 120 jours avant que la Cour ne statue sur les réclamations des membres du groupe.

9. Les particuliers membres d'une bande sont-ils représentés par un avocat dans ce recours?

Oui. La Cour a nommé McCarthy Tétrault S.E.N.C.R.L., s.r.l. et Oltinus Kleer Townshend LLP pour vous représenter, ainsi que d'autres membres du groupe, à titre d'« avocats du groupe ». Vous n'aurez pas à payer d'honoraires ou d'autres frais juridiques pour ces avocats. Si vous souhaitez être représenté par un autre avocat, vous pouvez en retenir un pour comparaître devant la Cour à vos propres frais.

10. Comment les avocats seront-ils payés?

Les avocats ne seront payés que s'ils obtiennent gain de cause ou concluent un règlement. La Cour doit également approuver leur demande de rémunération. Les honoraires et frais pourraient être déduits des sommes obtenues pour le groupe, ou payés séparément par le défendeur.

PROCÈS

11. Quand et comment la Cour tranchera-t-elle qui a raison?

Si le recours collectif n'est pas rejeté ou réglé, les demandeurs doivent prouver leurs réclamations dans le cadre d'une requête en jugement sommaire ou d'un procès qui aura lieu à Ottawa (Ontario). Au cours de la requête ou du procès, la Cour entendra tous les éléments de preuve de manière à ce qu'elle puisse rendre une décision sur la question de savoir qui des demandeurs ou du Canada a raison à propos des réclamations dans le recours collectif. Rien ne garantit que les demandeurs gagneront quelque somme d'argent ou avantage pour le groupe.

12. Est-ce que je recevrai de l'argent après le procès?

Si les demandeurs obtiennent de l'argent ou des avantages à la suite d'un procès ou d'un règlement, vous serez avisé de la façon d'en demander une part ou des autres options que vous avez à ce moment-là. Ces choses ne sont pas connues à l'heure actuelle. Des renseignements importants sur cette affaire seront affichés sur le site Web [NDR : insérer le site Web de l'administrateur] dès qu'ils seront disponibles.

Je comprends qu'en m'excluant de ce recours collectif, je confirme que je ne souhaite pas participer à ce recours collectif.

Je comprends que toute réclamation individuelle que je pourrais avoir doit être introduite dans un délai de prescription déterminé ou cette réclamation sera légalement interdite.

Je crois comprendre que l'annonce de ce recours collectif a suspendu l'écoulement du délai de prescription à partir du moment où le recours collectif a été déposé. Le délai de prescription recommencera à courir contre moi si je m'exclus de ce recours collectif.

Je comprends qu'en m'excluant, j'assume l'entière responsabilité de la reprise de la poursuite des démarches juridiques pertinentes relatives au délai de prescription pour protéger toute réclamation que je pourrais avoir.

LE PROCUREUR GÉNÉRAL DU CANADA

Défendeur

Poursuite en vertu des Règles des Cours fédérales, 334.16 et 334.17PLAN DE POURSUITE DE L'INSTANCE*POUR LES QUESTIONS COMMUNES, LES REQUÊTES EN AUTORISATION ET JUGEMENT SOMMAIRE

1. Le calendrier de consentement des parties est joint en annexe A. Le présent plan de poursuite de l'instance vise à traiter des requêtes des demandeurs en autorisation et jugement sommaire.
2. Si la requête en jugement sommaire est accueillie, un autre plan sera proposé pour régler les questions restantes, selon le résultat.
3. Sinon, si la requête en jugement sommaire n'est pas accueillie, les demandeurs proposeront un autre plan pour l'instruction des questions communes.
4. Les demandeurs demandent l'autorisation de la question commune suivante devant être résolue pour le compte de l'ensemble du groupe (la « question commune de l'étape 1 ») :
 - (a) Depuis le 20 novembre 1995 jusqu'à maintenant, le défendeur a-t-il un devoir ou une obligation envers les membres du groupe de prendre des mesures raisonnables pour leur fournir ou s'assurer qu'il leur soit fourni ou s'abstenir d'interdire un accès adéquat à de l'eau potable pour l'utilisation humaine?

5. Si le défendeur consent à l'autorisation d'un recours collectif, les demandeurs négocieront avec le défendeur pour résoudre les questions communes. En cas d'échec des négociations, les demandeurs exigeront la remise d'une défense, après quoi ils remettront un dossier à l'appui d'une requête en jugement sommaire sur la question commune de l'étape 1. Lors d'une conférence préparatoire à l'instruction qui suit la remise du dossier des demandeurs, ils demanderont à la Cour de décider que cette affaire est appropriée pour un jugement sommaire et de fixer une date d'audition de leur requête.

6. Si le défendeur s'oppose à l'autorisation d'un recours collectif, les demandeurs exigeront que le défendeur présente une défense. Les demandeurs produiront alors un dossier à l'appui des requêtes en autorisation et jugement sommaire sur la question commune de l'étape 1. Lors d'une conférence préparatoire à l'instruction qui suit la remise du dossier des demandeurs, ils demanderont à la Cour de décider que cette affaire est appropriée pour un jugement sommaire et de fixer le calendrier d'audition de leur requête en jugement sommaire ainsi que l'audition de leur requête en autorisation.

7. Lors de la requête en autorisation, les demandeurs demanderont également l'autorisation des questions communes suivantes devant être résolues pour le compte de chaque sous-groupe de la Première Nation touchée, soit les membres de cette Première Nation et la Première Nation elle-même, si elle est une Première Nation participante (les « questions communes de l'étape 2 ») :

- (a) Si la réponse à la question commune 4(a) est « oui », le Canada a-t-il manqué à ses devoirs ou obligations envers les membres du sous-groupe?
- (b) Si la réponse à la question commune 7(a) est « oui », une violation de la Charte des droits et libertés (« Charte ») est-elle sauvée par l'art. 1 de la Charte?
- (c) Si la réponse à la question commune 7(a) est « oui », le manquement du défendeur a-t-il causé une entrave importante et déraisonnable à l'utilisation et à la jouissance de leurs terres par les membres du groupe ou leurs Premières Nations?

- (d) Si la réponse à la question commune 7(a) est « oui » et que la réponse à la question commune 7(b) est « non », les membres du sous-groupe peuvent-ils obtenir des dommages en vertu de l'art. 24(1) de la Charte?
- (e) La causalité des dommages subis par les membres du sous-groupe peut-elle être considérée comme une question commune?
- (f) La Cour peut-elle procéder à une évaluation globale de tout ou partie des dommages subis par les membres du sous-groupe?
- (g) La conduite du défendeur justifie-t-elle l'octroi de dommages-intérêts punitifs et, dans l'affirmative, de quel montant?
- (h) La Cour devrait-elle ordonner au défendeur de prendre des mesures pour fournir aux membres du sous-groupe ou s'assurer qu'il leur soit fourni ou s'abstenir d'interdire un accès adéquat à de l'eau potable?
- (i) Dans l'affirmative, quelles mesures devraient être ordonnées?

8. Si la question commune de l'étape 1 est tranchée en faveur des demandeurs, les parties concluront un plan de communication de la preuve pour gérer la production, en temps opportun, par le défendeur des documents pertinents à l'égard des questions communes de l'étape 2 pour chaque sous-groupe des Premières Nations touchées.

9. Au moment d'évaluer la production des documents du défendeur, les demandeurs décideront s'il y a lieu de présenter des requêtes en jugement sommaire sur les questions communes de l'étape 2 pour certains ou la totalité des sous-groupes des Premières Nations touchées, ou s'il y a lieu de prévoir une instruction sur ces questions communes.

NOTIFICATION DE L'AUTORISATION ET PROCÉDURE D'EXCLUSION

10. Lors de la requête en autorisation, les demandeurs demanderont à la Cour de fixer la forme et le contenu de la notification de l'autorisation de ce recours (l'« avis d'autorisation »), le moment et la manière de fournir l'avis d'autorisation (le « programme d'avis ») et d'indiquer une date d'exclusion comme étant trois (3) mois suivant la date de l'ordonnance d'autorisation (la « date d'exclusion »), et une date de participation comme étant six (6) mois avant le début de la détermination des questions communes de l'étape 2.

11. Si une requête en jugement sommaire est entendue avec une requête en autorisation, les demandeurs demanderont au tribunal de rendre d'abord sa décision sur l'autorisation, d'ordonner la délivrance d'un avis si un recours collectif est autorisé, puis de rendre sa décision sur la question commune de l'étape 1 après la date d'exclusion.

12. Les demandeurs demanderont à la Cour d'ordonner au défendeur de payer les frais du programme d'avis, y compris les frais de l'administrateur.

13. Les demandeurs demanderont une ordonnance pour la distribution de l'avis d'autorisation comme suit :

- (a) afficher l'avis sur les sites Web respectifs des avocats du groupe, du défendeur et de l'administrateur;
- (b) publier l'avis dans les journaux désignés;
- (c) distribuer l'avis à tous les bureaux de la Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak et de l'Assemblée des Premières Nations;
- (d) faire parvenir l'avis à tout membre du groupe qui le demande et aux chefs de chaque Première Nation qui a le droit d'adhérer au groupe, ainsi qu'à chaque bureau d'une bande;
- (e) établir une ligne de soutien nationale sans frais, afin de fournir de l'aide aux membres du groupe, aux familles, aux tuteurs, aux gardiens ou aux autres personnes qui font des demandes pour leur propre compte ou pour le compte de membres du groupe;
- (f) et par tout autre avis que la Cour ordonne.

ÉTAPES DE POURSUITE DE L'INSTANCE APRÈS LA DÉTERMINATION DES QUESTIONS COMMUNES FAVORABLES AU GROUPE

Avis de résolution des questions communes

15. Les demandeurs demanderont à la Cour de régler la forme et le contenu de l'avis de résolution des questions communes de l'étape 1 et de l'étape 2 (le « plan d'avis de résolution ») et la manière dont les membres du groupe déposeront des réclamations (les « formulaires de réclamation ») avant une date fixée avec l'administrateur. Les demandeurs demanderont également à la Cour de régler un processus approprié pour déterminer les questions individuelles restantes.

Évaluation des dommages

16. Si les questions communes sont résolues en faveur des demandeurs, les demandeurs proposent deux (2) méthodes d'évaluation et de distribution des dommages-intérêts pour les membres du groupe comme suit :

- (a) l'ensemble des dommages-intérêts dont chaque particulier membre d'un groupe peut se prévaloir au prorata ou au prorata au sein d'un sous-groupe;
- (b) l'ensemble des dommages-intérêts dont les Premières Nations participantes peuvent se prévaloir sur une base communautaire; et

17. À la suite de la détermination de l'ensemble des dommages-intérêts, y compris les dommages-intérêts punitifs, des dommages-intérêts supplémentaires peuvent être accordés dans le cadre d'instances individuelles.

Évaluation du nombre de demandeurs

18. Après l'expiration du délai de remise des formulaires de réclamation, l'administrateur calcule le nombre total de demandeurs aux fins de tout partage au prorata des dommages-intérêts globaux.

19. Les parties peuvent également retenir les services d'un actuaire pour aider à déterminer la taille du groupe et les caractéristiques démographiques du groupe.

Distribution de dommages-intérêts punitifs globaux

20. Si la Cour accorde des dommages-intérêts globaux au groupe ou à un sous-groupe, le montant total des dommages-intérêts sera attribué au groupe d'une manière que déterminera la Cour dans un délai fixé par la Cour à partir de l'avis de résolution.

Fonds non distribués

21. Toute somme non distribuée sera distribuée cy-près selon les directives de la Cour. Les demandeurs proposent que les montants résiduels soient distribués cy-près à des organismes communautaires qui aident les Premières Nations touchées à mettre en place des infrastructures d'approvisionnement en eau.

Résolution des questions individuelles

22. Dans les trente (30) jours qui suivent la délivrance du jugement sur les questions communes, les parties se réunissent pour régler un protocole visant à résoudre des questions individuelles. Si les parties ne parviennent pas à s'entendre sur un tel protocole, les demandeurs doivent demander des directives à la Cour dans les soixante (60) jours.

EXIGENCES DIVERSES DU PLAN DE POURSUITE DE L'INSTANCE

Financement

23. Les avocats du groupe ont conclu une entente avec les représentants demandeurs à l'égard des honoraires d'avocats et débours juridiques. Cette entente prévoit que les avocats du groupe ne recevront pas de paiement pour leur travail tant que le recours collectif n'aura pas reçu une suite favorable ou que les frais n'auront pas été recouverts du défendeur.

24. Les honoraires des avocats du groupe sont soumis à l'approbation du tribunal.

Administration des réclamations

25. L'administrateur assurera l'administration des réclamations pour tout règlement ou jugement obtenu. L'administrateur distribuera l'avis conformément au plan d'avis de résolution. Si un règlement est réalisé et qu'un fonds de règlement est fourni, ou si un jugement donne lieu à une attribution en faveur des membres du groupe, l'administrateur administrera les paiements prélevés sur le fonds aux demandeurs selon la procédure indiquée ci-dessus, après approbation et/ou modification par la Cour.

Site Web du recours collectif

26. De temps à autre, les avocats du groupe afficheront les actes de procédure et les documents de cour pertinents, les derniers documents et résumés des derniers développements et faits nouveaux, les délais prévus, la foire aux questions et les réponses et les coordonnées des avocats du groupe pour les renseignements des membres du groupe.

Gestion des conflits

27. Les avocats du groupe et les demandeurs ont pris les mesures appropriées pour établir qu'il n'existe aucun conflit d'intérêts entre les membres du groupe, et qu'aucun tel conflit n'est prévu. En cas de conflit, McCarthy Tétrault S.E.N.C.R.L., s.r.l. représentera un sous-groupe et Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP, l'autre. Si un conflit survenait entre les Premières Nations et leurs membres, ce qui n'est pas prévu étant donné leur intérêt commun, McCarthy Tétrault S.E.N.C.R.L., s.r.l. représentera les membres et Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP représentera les Premières Nations.

Droit applicable

28. La législation applicable est la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982, la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, la Charte des droits et libertés, la Loi sur la salubrité de l'eau potable des Premières Nations, L.C. 2013, c. 21, la Loi sur les Indiens, L.R.C. 1985, c. I-5, Loi sur la gestion des terres des Premières Nations, L.C. 1999, c. 24, La Loi sur les Cours fédérales, L.R.C. 1985, c. F-7 ainsi que les règlements applicables, la common law et le droit canadien.

Coordination des instances

29. Le 14 juillet 2020, la Cour du banc de la Reine du Manitoba a autorisé un recours collectif connexe dans l'affaire intitulée Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada, dossier de la Cour n° 19-01-24661 (l'« action de Tataskweyak »). Les représentants demandeurs dans l'action de Tataskweyak se sont engagés à travailler en collaboration avec les demandeurs pour faire valoir leurs intérêts communs. Aux termes du Protocole judiciaire canadien de gestion de recours collectifs multijuridictionnels et la remise d'un avis de recours collectif, les demandeurs demanderont à la Cour fédérale et à la Cour du banc de la Reine du Manitoba de convoquer des conférences conjointes de gestion des instances, selon le cas, afin d'assurer la coordination entre les deux instances et de favoriser l'efficacité. Afin d'assurer la cohérence des résultats, les demandeurs peuvent demander à la Cour fédérale et à la Cour du banc de la Reine du Manitoba de se réunir pour entendre toute requête en jugement sommaire ou en vue d'un procès de l'action de Tataskweyak et du présent recours.

LE PROCUREUR GÉNÉRAL DU CANADA

Défendeur

Procédure en vertu de la Loi sur les recours collectifs, CPLM c. C. 130ORDONNANCE

LA PRÉSENTE MOTION en attestation, présentée par les demandeurs, a été entendue le 14 juillet 2020 au 408 York Ave à Winnipeg, au Manitoba.

À LA LECTURE du dossier de motion des demandeurs et du consentement du défendeur, ET SUR AVIS que les parties consentent à la présente ordonnance.

1. LA COUR ORDONNE que ce recours soit et est autorisé par les présentes comme un recours collectif conformément à la Loi sur les recours collectifs, CPLM c. C. 130.

2. LA COUR ORDONNE ET DÉCLARE que le groupe est défini comme suit :

(a) Toutes les personnes autres que les personnes exclues :

premières nations, L.C. 1999, c. 24 (les « terres des Premières Nations »), et dont les terres des Premières Nations sont visées par un avis sur la qualité de l'eau potable (qu'il s'agisse d'un avis d'ébullition d'eau, d'un avis de ne pas boire ou d'un avis de non-utilisation ou d'un autre type d'avis) qui a duré au moins un an depuis le 20 novembre 1995 jusqu'à maintenant (les « Premières Nations touchées »);

- (ii) qui n'étaient pas décédées avant le 20 novembre 2017; et
- (iii) qui résidaient habituellement dans une Première Nation touchée alors visée par un avis sur la qualité de l'eau potable qui a duré au moins un an; et

- (b) La Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak et toute autre Première Nation touchée qui a choisi de se joindre au présent recours à titre de représentant (les « Nations participantes »).

Les « personnes exclues » sont les membres de la Nation des Tsuu T'ina, de la Première Nation de Sucker Creek, de la Nation des Cris d'Ermineau, de la Tribu des Gens-du-Sang et de la bande indienne d'Okanagan, et Michael Daryl Isnardy.

3. LA COUR ORDONNE ET DÉCLARE que, jusqu'à ce que les réclamations invoquées dans le présent recours collectif soient entièrement et définitivement décidées, réglées, interrompues ou abandonnées, y compris l'épuisement de tous les droits d'appel, la permission de la Cour est requise pour introduire tout autre recours, instance ou procédure pour le compte d'un membre du groupe à l'égard des réclamations invoquées dans le présent recours, sauf les recours, instances ou procédures introduits pour le compte des membres du groupe qui se sont exclus du présent recours collectif de la manière prescrite ci-après.

4. LA COUR ORDONNE ET DÉCLARE que les questions communes suivantes soient et sont par les présentes autorisées aux fins de résolution pour le compte du groupe dans son ensemble:

- (a) Depuis le 20 novembre 1995 jusqu'à maintenant, le défendeur a-t-il un devoir ou une obligation envers les membres du groupe de prendre des mesures raisonnables pour leur fournir ou s'assurer qu'il leur soit fourni ou s'abstenir d'interdire un accès adéquat à de l'eau potable pour l'utilisation humaine?

5. LA COUR ORDONNE ET DÉCLARE qu'un sous-groupe soit et est par les présentes reconnu pour les membres de chaque Première Nation touchée, et la Première Nation elle-même, s'il s'agit d'une Nation participante;

6. LA COUR ORDONNE ET DÉCLARE que les questions communes suivantes soient et sont, par les présentes, autorisées aux fins de résolution pour le compte de chaque sous-groupe :

- (a) Si la réponse à la question commune 4(a) est « oui », le Canada a-t-il manqué à ses devoirs ou obligations envers les membres du sous-groupe?
- (b) Si la réponse à la question commune 6(a) est « oui », une violation de la Charte des droits et libertés (« Charte ») est-elle sauvée par l'art. 1 de la Charte?
- (c) Si la réponse à la question commune 6(a) est « oui », le manquement du défendeur a-t-il causé une entrave importante et déraisonnable à l'utilisation et à la jouissance de leurs terres par les membres du groupe ou leurs Premières Nations?
- (d) Si la réponse à la question commune 6(a) est « oui » et que la réponse à la question commune 6(b) est « non », les membres du sous-groupe peuvent-ils obtenir des dommages en vertu de l'art. 24(1) de la Charte?
- (e) La causalité des dommages subis par les membres du sous-groupe peut-elle être considérée comme une question commune?
- (f) La Cour peut-elle procéder à une évaluation globale de tout ou partie des dommages subis par les membres du sous-groupe?
- (g) La conduite du défendeur justifie-t-elle l'octroi de dommages-intérêts punitifs et, dans l'affirmative, de quel montant?

- (h) La Cour devrait-elle ordonner au défendeur de prendre des mesures pour fournir aux membres du sous-groupe ou s'assurer qu'il leur soit fourni ou s'abstenir d'interdire un accès adéquat à de l'eau potable?
- (i) Dans l'affirmative, quelles mesures devraient être ordonnées?

7. LA COUR ORDONNE ET DÉCLARE que la cheffe Doreen Spence et la Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak sont nommées par les présentes représentants demandeurs du groupe.

8. LA COUR ORDONNE ET DÉCLARE que McCarthy Tétrault S.E.N.C.R.L. s.r.l. et Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP sont nommés par les présentes avocats du groupe (les «avocats du groupe »).

9. LA COUR ORDONNE ET DÉCLARE que les demandeurs et le défendeur déploient des efforts raisonnables pour convenir de la nomination d'un administrateur aux fins de donner avis de l'attestation du présent recours collectif (l'«administrateur »). Les parties avisent la Cour de la nomination de l'administrateur dans les soixante (60) jours suivant la date de la présente ordonnance, à défaut de quoi la Cour nomme un administrateur d'import qualification.

10. LA COUR ORDONNE que les membres du groupe soient avisés que le présent recours a été attesté en tant que recours collectif de la manière suivante, ce qui constitue et est par les présentes réputé constituer un avis adéquat :

- (a) l'avis simplifié figurant à l'annexe A et l'avis détaillé figurant à l'annexe B, ainsi que la traduction en français de ces documents sont affichés, tel que convenu par les parties, sur les sites Web respectifs des avocats du groupe, du défendeur et de l'administrateur;
- (b) l'administrateur publie l'avis simplifié dans les journaux indiqués à l'annexe C jointe aux présentes, en format 1/4 de page dans l'édition de fin de semaine de chaque journal, si possible;
- (c) l'administrateur distribue l'avis simplifié à tous les bureaux de la Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak et de l'Assemblée des Premières Nations;

- (d) l'administrateur transmet l'avis simplifié et l'avis détaillé à tout membre du groupe qui en fait la demande;
- (e) l'administrateur transmet l'avis simplifié et l'avis détaillé aux chefs de chaque Première Nation touchée indiquée conformément au paragraphe 12 ci-après, à l'exception des personnes exclues;
- (f) l'administrateur transmet l'avis simplifié et l'avis détaillé au bureau de la bande ou à un bureau analogue de chaque Première Nation touchée indiquée conformément au paragraphe 12 ci-après, à l'exception des personnes exclues, en demandant qu'ils soient affichés dans un endroit bien visible;
- (g) l'administrateur établit une ligne de soutien nationale sans frais, afin de fournir de l'aide aux membres du groupe, aux familles, aux tuteurs, aux gardiens ou aux autres personnes qui font des demandes de renseignements pour leur propre compte ou pour le compte de membres du groupe.

11. LA COUR ORDONNE que le défendeur soit responsable du coût de la remise d'un avis d'attestation d'un recours collectif tel qu'il est énoncé au paragraphe 10 ci-dessus.

12. LA COUR ORDONNE que, dans les 30 jours qui suivent la date de la présente ordonnance, les demandeurs et le défendeur échangent une liste de leurs meilleurs renseignements sur les noms des Premières Nations qui peuvent participer au groupe, et ces listes constituent le moyen d'établir les Premières Nations qui ont droit à un avis direct aux fins des paragraphes 10(e) et (f) ci-dessus.

13. LA COUR ORDONNE qu'un membre du groupe puisse se retirer du présent recours collectif en remettant un coupon de retrait signé, dont un modèle est joint à l'annexe D, ou une autre demande de retrait signée et lisible, dans les cent vingt (120) jours qui suivent la date à laquelle l'avis est publié pour la première fois conformément au paragraphe 10(b) ci-dessus (la «date limite de retrait »), à l'administrateur. L'avis simplifié et l'avis détaillé doivent indiquer la date limite de retrait et l'adresse de l'administrateur aux fins de la réception des coupons de retrait.

14. LA COUR ORDONNE qu'aucun membre du groupe ne puisse se retirer du présent recours collectif après la date limite de retrait, sauf avec l'autorisation de la Cour.

15. LA COUR ORDONNE que l'administrateur signifie aux parties et dépose auprès de la Cour, dans les soixante (60) jours suivant l'expiration de la date limite de retrait, une déclaration sous serment énumérant toutes les personnes qui ont fait leur choix de se retirer du recours collectif, le cas échéant.

16. LA COUR ORDONNE qu'une Première Nation touchée puisse participer au présent recours collectif en mandatant les avocats du groupe au moins cent vingt (120) jours avant le règlement de l'une ou l'autre des questions communes (la « date limite de participation »), aux avocats du groupe, à l'adresse indiquée au paragraphe 11 ci-dessus.

17. LA COUR ORDONNE qu'aucun membre du groupe ne puisse participer au présent recours collectif après la date limite de participation, sauf avec l'autorisation de la Cour.

18. LA COUR ORDONNE que les avocats du groupe signifient aux parties et déposent auprès de la Cour, dans les soixante (60) jours suivant l'expiration de la date limite de participation, une liste de toutes les Premières Nations touchées qui ont choisi de participer au recours collectif.

19. LA COUR DÉCLARE que le plan de poursuite de l'instance joint aux présentes à l'appendice 1 est une méthode pratique pour faire avancer le recours collectif pour le compte du groupe.

20. LA COUR ORDONNE que chaque partie supporte ses propres frais de la motion en attestation du présent recours collectif.

Avis juridique

Êtes-vous membre d'une Première Nation qui a été visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme?

Une poursuite pourrait avoir une incidence sur vous et votre Première Nation. Veuillez lire ceci attentivement.

Vous pourriez être touché par un recours collectif en raison du manque d'accessibilité à l'eau potable propre sur les réserves des Premières Nations.

La Cour du Banc de la Reine du Manitoba et la Cour fédérale du Canada ont décidé qu'un recours collectif au nom d'un « groupe » de membres des Premières Nations et de membres d'une bande pouvait être intenté. Les membres d'une bande peuvent choisir de demeurer dans le groupe. Les Premières Nations peuvent choisir de se joindre ou non au groupe. Il n'y a pas d'argent disponible à l'heure actuelle et rien ne garantit que le recours collectif sera accueilli.

Les tribunaux ont nommé la Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak, la cheffe Doreen Spence, la Première Nation de Curve Lake, la cheffe Emily Whetung, la Première Nation de Neskantaga et le chef Christopher Moonias à titre de représentants demandeurs pour le groupe.

De quoi s'agit-il?

Le présent recours collectif allègue que le Canada a manqué à ses obligations en ne veillant pas à ce que les communautés des Premières Nations aient un accès adéquat à de l'eau potable salubre. Le recours collectif allègue que les membres de ces communautés et les communautés elles-mêmes ont subi des préjudices émotionnels, physiques, financiers et spirituels. Le recours collectif allègue que le Canada a manqué à ses obligations fiduciaires et à son devoir de diligence et a contrevenu à la Charte des droits et libertés. La Cour n'a pas statué sur la véracité de ces allégations. En l'absence de règlement, les demandeurs devront prouver leurs prétentions devant le tribunal.

Si vous avez des questions au sujet du présent recours collectif, vous pouvez communiquer avec M. Eric Khan au 1-800-538-0009 ou à l'adresse info@classaction2.com.

Qui représente le groupe?

Particuliers membres du groupe : Qui est inclus et qui est exclu?

Membres d'une bande inclus : Le groupe comprend les membres d'une bande (au sens de la Loi sur les Indiens) : a) dont la réserve était visée par un avis concernant l'eau potable (tel qu'un avis d'ébullition de l'eau, etc.) pendant au moins un an à un moment quelconque du 20 novembre 1995 jusqu'à maintenant; b) qui n'étaient pas décédés avant le 20 novembre 2017; et c) qui vivent habituellement dans leur réserve.

Membres d'une bande exclus : Les membres de la Nation des Tsuu T'ina, de la Première Nation de Sucker Creek, de la Nation des Cris d'Ermineskin, de la Tribu des Gens-du-Sang, de la bande indienne d'Okanagan et Michael Daryl Isnardy sont exclus de ce recours collectif.

Particuliers : Quelles sont vos options?

Demeurer dans le groupe : Pour demeurer dans le groupe, vous n'avez rien à faire. Si le groupe obtient de l'argent ou des avantages, les avocats du groupe donneront un avis sur la façon de réclamer votre part. Vous serez légalement lié par toutes les ordonnances et tous les jugements, et vous ne pourrez pas poursuivre le Canada au sujet des mêmes réclamations en droit.

Le fait de demeurer dans le groupe n'aura pas d'incidence sur le soutien reçu des organismes communautaires qui sont financés par un gouvernement.

Se retirer du groupe : Si vous ne souhaitez pas participer à ce recours collectif, vous devez vous en retirer. Si vous vous retirez, vous ne pouvez pas obtenir d'argent ni d'avantages de ce litige. Pour vous retirer, veuillez visiter [NDR : Insérer le site Web de l'administrateur pour ce recours] pour obtenir un coupon de retrait ou écrire à CA2 Inc., 9, avenue Prince Arthur, Toronto (Ontario) M5R 1B2 afin de demander votre retrait du présent recours collectif. Indiquez vos nom, adresse, numéro de téléphone et apposez votre signature. Votre demande de retrait doit être envoyée au plus tard le [NDR : 120 jours à partir de la date de la première publication de l'avis].

Premières Nations : Quelles sont vos options?

Choisir de se joindre au groupe : Les Premières Nations qui souhaitent se joindre au groupe et faire valoir des réclamations au nom de leur communauté doivent prendre des mesures pour participer au recours. Pour participer au recours ou obtenir de plus amples renseignements, veuillez communiquer avec l'administrateur au 1-800-538-0009 ou à l'adresse info@classaction2.com. Les Premières Nations peuvent également communiquer avec l'avocate du groupe Stephanie Willsey (sans frais : 1-877-244-7711; swillsey@mccarthy.ca) ou l'avocat du groupe Kevin Hille 416-598-3694; khille@oktlaw.com). Votre demande de participation doit être envoyée au plus tard 120 jours avant la décision quant aux réclamations des membres du groupe.

Transmettre l'information aux personnes qui en ont besoin

Les représentants demandeurs et les avocats du groupe demandent aux travailleurs de la santé, aux travailleurs sociaux, aux dirigeants communautaires des Premières Nations, aux membres de la famille, aux aidants et aux amis des membres du groupe de bien vouloir transmettre l'information

aux membres du groupe qui auraient de la difficulté à lire ou à comprendre le présent avis. On peut obtenir de plus amples renseignements sur le présent recours sur le site Web ou en communiquant avec l'administrateur. Veuillez montrer le présent avis aux personnes qui pourraient être touchées par le présent recours ou à leurs aidants.

Annexe BÊtes-vous membre d'une Première Nation qui a été visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme?

Si vous avez répondu « OUI », un recours collectif pourrait avoir une incidence sur vos droits et les droits des Premières Nations

Un tribunal a autorisé le présent avis

- Vous pourriez être touché par un recours collectif visant l'accès à l'eau potable propre dans vos communautés des Premières Nations.
- La Cour du Banc de la Reine du Manitoba et la Cour fédérale du Canada ont décidé que des recours collectifs peuvent être introduits pour le compte d'un « groupe » de membres des Premières Nations et de membres d'une bande. Les membres d'une bande peuvent choisir de demeurer dans le groupe. Les Premières Nations peuvent choisir de se joindre ou non au groupe. Les tribunaux ont nommé la Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak, la cheffe Doreen Spence, la Première Nation de Curve Lake, la cheffe Emily Whetung, la Première Nation de Neskantaga et le chef Christopher Moonias à titre de représentants demandeurs pour le groupe.
- Les tribunaux n'ont pas statué si le Canada avait eu des comportements fautifs et la question à savoir si le Canada a fait quelque chose de mal doit éventuellement être décidée par le tribunal. Il n'y a pas d'argent offert actuellement et rien ne garantit qu'il y en aura. Cependant, vos droits sont touchés et vous avez un choix à faire maintenant. Le présent avis vise à vous aider, vous et votre Première Nation, à faire ce choix.

RENSEIGNEMENTS DE BASE

1. Pourquoi le présent avis est-il remis?

Les tribunaux ont des recours collectifs « attestés ». Cela signifie que les poursuites respectent les exigences relatives aux recours collectifs et peuvent être instruites. Si vous êtes inclus, vous pourriez avoir des droits légaux et des options avant que les tribunaux ne statuent sur le bien-fondé des réclamations intentées contre le Canada en votre nom. Le présent avis tente d'expliquer toutes ces démarches.

Le juge en chef Joyal de la Cour du banc de la Reine du Manitoba préside actuellement l'affaire Tataskweyak Cree Nation and Chief Doreen Spence v. Canada. Le juge Favel de la Cour fédérale du Canada préside actuellement l'affaire Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whening, Nesktanaga First Nation, and Chief Christopher Moonias v. Canada. Les personnes qui intentent une poursuite sont appelées les demandeurs. Le Canada est le défendeur. Un lien vers la dernière version de la demande introductive d'instance (le document juridique énonçant les allégations contre le Canada) est disponible ici : <https://www.mccarthy.ca/fr/action-collective-concernant-les-avis-sur-la-qualite-de-leau-potable-des-premieres-nations>.

2. Quel est l'objet du présent recours?

Les présents recours collectifs allèguent que le Canada a manqué à ses obligations en ne veillant pas à ce que les communautés des Premières Nations aient un accès adéquat à de l'eau potable salubre. Les recours collectifs allèguent également que les membres de ces communautés et les communautés elles-mêmes ont subi des préjudices émotionnels, physiques, financiers et spirituels. Les recours collectifs allèguent que le Canada a manqué à ses obligations fiduciaires et à son devoir de diligence et a contrevenu à la Charte des droits et libertés. Les tribunaux n'ont pas statué (et le Canada n'a fait aucun aveu) quant à la véracité de l'une ou l'autre de ces affirmations. S'il n'y a pas de règlement avec le Canada, les demandeurs devront prouver leurs prétentions devant la Cour.

Si vous éprouvez des difficultés à comprendre cet enjeu ou si vous avez des questions au sujet du recours collectif, vous pouvez composer le 1-800-538-0009 pour obtenir de l'aide.

3. Pourquoi s'agit-il d'un recours collectif?

Dans un recours collectif, les « représentants demandeurs » (en l'espèce, la Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak, la cheffe Doreen Spence, la Première Nation de Curve Lake, la cheffe Emily Whening, la Première Nation de Nesktanaga et le chef Christopher Moonias) ont poursuivi en justice au nom des particuliers membres d'une bande et de Premières Nations qui ont des revendications semblables. Tous ces particuliers membres d'une bande font partie du « groupe » ou sont des « membres du groupe », de même que les Premières Nations qui choisissent de se joindre au recours collectif. La Cour règle les questions pour tous les membres du groupe dans une même affaire, sauf (dans le cas des particuliers membres du groupe) pour ceux qui se retirent du groupe (option de retrait) et (dans le cas des Premières Nations) pour ceux qui ne se joignent pas au recours collectif (option de participation).

HTTPS://CLASSACTION2.COM/

4. Qui est membre du groupe?

Le groupe comprend et exclut les personnes suivantes :

Toutes les personnes, sauf les « personnes exclues » :

- (i) qui sont membres d'une bande au sens du paragraphe 2(1) de la Loi sur les Indiens, L.R.C. 1985, c. I-5 (« Première Nation »), dont la disposition des terres est assujettie à cette loi ou à la Loi sur la gestion des terres des premières nations, L.C. 1999, c. 24 (les « terres des Premières Nations »), et dont les terres des Premières Nations sont visées par un avis sur la qualité de l'eau potable (qu'il s'agisse d'un avis d'ébullition d'eau, d'un avis de ne pas boire, d'un avis de non-utilisation ou d'un autre type d'avis) qui a duré au moins un an depuis le 20 novembre 1995 (les « Premières Nations touchées »);
- (ii) qui n'étaient pas décédées deux ans avant le début du présent recours (soit, au plus tard le 20 novembre 2017);
- (iii) qui résidaient habituellement dans une Première Nation touchée pendant qu'elle était visée par un avis sur la qualité de l'eau potable qui a duré au moins un an; et
- (iv) la Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak, la Première Nation de Curve Lake, la Première Nation de Neskantaga et toute autre Première Nation touchée qui choisit de se joindre au présent recours à titre de représentant (les « Nations participantes »).

Les « personnes exclues » sont des membres de la Nation des Tsuu T'ina, de la Première Nation de Sucker Creek, de la Nation des Cris d'Ermineskin, de la Tribu des Gens-du-Sang, de la bande indienne d'Okanagan et de la bande indienne d'Okanagan et de Michael Daryl Isnardy.

5. Que veulent les demandeurs?

Les demandeurs réclament des sommes d'argent et d'autres avantages pour le groupe, notamment des infrastructures d'approvisionnement en eau. Les demandeurs réclament également des honoraires d'avocats et des frais de justice, majorés des intérêts.

6. Y a-t-il de l'argent offert maintenant pour les membres du groupe?

Il n'y a pas d'argent ni d'avantages à l'heure actuelle parce que la Cour n'a pas encore statué quant aux comportements fautifs du Canada et que les deux parties n'ont pas conclu de règlement. Rien ne garantit que des sommes d'argent ou des avantages seront obtenus. Si de l'argent ou d'autres avantages deviennent disponibles, un avis sera donné sur la façon de réclamer votre part.

VOS DROITS ET OPTIONS

Chaque particulier membre d'une bande doit décider s'il veut rester ou non dans le groupe, et doit le faire au plus tard le [NDR : 120 jours à partir de la première publication de l'avis]. Les

Premières Nations doivent décider de se joindre ou non au groupe au plus tard 120 jours avant que la Cour ne statue sur les réclamations des membres du groupe.

7. Que se passe-t-il si je ne fais rien? Que se passe-t-il si la Première Nation ne fait rien?

Particuliers membres d'une bande : Si vous ne faites rien, vous resterez automatiquement dans le recours collectif. Vous serez lié par toutes les ordonnances de la Cour, bonnes ou mauvaises. Si des sommes d'argent ou d'autres avantages sont attribués, vous pourriez avoir à prendre des mesures après avoir reçu un avis pour recevoir des avantages.

Premières Nations : Les Premières Nations doivent choisir de se joindre au recours collectif pour recevoir les avantages éventuels et être liées par toutes les ordonnances, bonnes ou mauvaises.

8. Que se passe-t-il si je ne veux pas me joindre au recours? Que se passe-t-il si une Première Nation souhaite se joindre au recours?

Particuliers membres d'une bande : Si vous ne souhaitez pas être partie à l'instance, vous devez vous retirer – c'est-à-dire choisir « l'option de retrait ». Si vous vous retirez, vous ne recevrez aucun avantage pouvant découler du recours collectif. Vous ne serez pas lié par des ordonnances de la Cour et vous conservez le droit de poursuivre le Canada en tant que particulier à l'égard des questions en l'espèce.

Pour vous retirer, envoyez une communication indiquant que vous souhaitez être retiré du groupe de Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whiting, Neskantaga First Nation and Chief Christopher Moontas v. Canada, dossier de la Cour n° CI-19-01-2466. Indiquez vos nom, adresse, numéro de téléphone et apposez votre signature. Vous pouvez également obtenir un formulaire de retrait à l'adresse [insérer le lien Web de l'administrateur]. Vous devez faire parvenir votre demande de retrait au plus tard le [NDR : 120 jours à partir de la première publication de l'avis] à CA2 Inc., 9, avenue Prince Arthur, Toronto (Ontario) M5R 1B2 ou info@classaction2.com.

Composez le 1-800-538-0009 si vous avez des questions sur la façon de vous retirer du recours collectif.

Premières Nations : Les Premières Nations qui souhaitent se joindre au recours collectif et faire valoir des réclamations au nom de leur bande ou de leur communauté doivent prendre des mesures pour s'y joindre – c'est-à-dire choisir l'« option de participation ». Pour choisir l'option de participation ou pour obtenir de plus amples renseignements, veuillez communiquer avec l'administrateur au 1-800-538-0009 ou à l'adresse info@classaction2.com. Les Premières Nations peuvent également communiquer avec les avocats du groupe et demander l'avocate du groupe Stephanie Willsey (sans frais : 1-877-244-7711 ou swillsey@mccarthy.ca) ou l'avocat du groupe Kevin Hille à khille@oktlaw.com ou au 416-598-3694. Les demandes de participation des Premières Nations doivent être envoyées au plus tard 120 jours avant que la Cour ne statue sur les réclamations des membres du groupe.

9. Les particuliers membres d'une bande sont-ils représentés par un avocat dans ce recours?

Oui. La Cour a nommé McCarthy Tétrault S.E.N.C.R.L., s.r.l. et Oltinus Kleer Townshend LLP pour vous représenter, ainsi que d'autres membres du groupe, à titre d'« avocats du groupe ». Vous n'aurez pas à payer d'honoraires ou d'autres frais juridiques pour ces avocats. Si vous souhaitez être représenté par un autre avocat, vous pouvez en retenir un pour comparaître devant la Cour à vos propres frais.

10. Comment les avocats seront-ils payés?

Les avocats ne seront payés que s'ils obtiennent gain de cause ou concluent un règlement. La Cour doit également approuver leur demande de rémunération. Les honoraires et frais pourraient être déduits des sommes obtenues pour le groupe, ou payés séparément par le défendeur.

PROCÈS

11. Quand et comment la Cour tranchera-t-elle qui a raison?

Si le recours collectif n'est pas rejeté ou réglé, les demandeurs doivent prouver leurs réclamations dans le cadre d'une motion de jugement sommaire ou d'un procès qui aura lieu à Ottawa (Ontario). Au cours de la motion ou du procès, la Cour entendra tous les éléments de preuve de manière à ce qu'elle puisse rendre une décision sur la question de savoir qui des demandeurs ou du Canada a raison à propos des réclamations dans le recours collectif. Rien ne garantit que les demandeurs gagneront quelque somme d'argent ou avantage pour le groupe.

12. Est-ce que je recevrai de l'argent après le procès?

Si les demandeurs obtiennent de l'argent ou des avantages à la suite d'un procès ou d'un règlement, vous serez avisé de la façon d'en demander une part ou des autres options que vous avez à ce moment-là. Ces choses ne sont pas connues à l'heure actuelle. Des renseignements importants sur cette affaire seront affichés sur le site Web [NDR : insérer le site Web de l'administrateur] dès qu'ils seront disponibles.

PLAN DE POURSUITE DE L'INSTANCE

POUR LES QUESTIONS COMMUNES, LES MOTIONS EN ATTESTATION ET DE JUGEMENT SOMMAIRE

1. Le calendrier de consentement des parties, tel qu'il est ordonné par la Cour, est joint en annexe A. Le présent plan de poursuite de l'instance vise à traiter des motions des demandeurs en attestation et de jugement sommaire.
2. Si les motions sont accueillies, un autre plan sera proposé pour régler les questions restantes, selon le résultat.
3. Sinon, si la motion de jugement sommaire n'est pas accueillie, les demandeurs proposeront un autre plan pour l'instruction des questions communes.

4. Dans le cadre de la motion en attestation, les demandeurs demanderont l'attestation de la question commune suivante devant être résolue pour le compte de l'ensemble du groupe (la «question commune de l'étape 1 ») :

- (a) Depuis le 20 novembre 1995 jusqu'à maintenant, le défendeur a-t-il un devoir ou une obligation envers les membres du groupe de prendre des mesures raisonnables pour leur fournir ou s'assurer qu'il leur soit fourni ou s'abstenir d'interdire un accès adéquat à de l'eau potable pour l'utilisation humaine?

5. Si le défendeur consent à l'attestation d'un recours collectif, les demandeurs négocieront avec le défendeur pour résoudre les questions communes. En cas d'échec des négociations, les demandeurs exigeront la remise d'une défense, après quoi ils remettront un dossier à l'appui d'une motion de jugement sommaire sur la question commune de l'étape 1. Lors d'une conférence préparatoire à l'instruction qui suit la remise du dossier des demandeurs, ils demanderont à la Cour de décider que cette affaire est appropriée pour un jugement sommaire et de fixer une date d'audition de leur motion.

6. Si le défendeur s'oppose à l'attestation d'un recours collectif, les demandeurs exigeront que le défendeur présente une défense. Les demandeurs produiront alors un dossier à l'appui des motions en attestation et de jugement sommaire sur la question commune de l'étape 1. Lors d'une conférence préparatoire à l'instruction qui suit la remise du dossier des demandeurs, ils demanderont à la Cour de décider que cette affaire est appropriée pour un jugement sommaire et de fixer le calendrier d'audition de leur motion de jugement sommaire ainsi que l'audition de leur motion en attestation.

7. Lors de la motion en attestation, les demandeurs demanderont également l'attestation des questions communes suivantes devant être résolues pour le compte de chaque sous-groupe de la Première Nation touchée, soit les membres de cette Première Nation et la Première Nation elle-même, si elle est une Première Nation participante (les «questions communes de l'étape 2 ») :

- (a) Si la réponse à la question commune 4(a) est « oui », le Canada a-t-il manqué à ses devoirs ou obligations envers les membres du sous-groupe?
- (b) Si la réponse à la question commune 7(a) est « oui », une violation de la Charte des droits et libertés («Charte») est-elle sauvée par l'art. 1 de la Charte?

- (c) Si la réponse à la question commune 7(a) est « oui », le manquement du défendeur a-t-il causé une entrave importante et déraisonnable à l'utilisation et à la jouissance de leurs terres par les membres du groupe ou leurs Premières Nations?
- (d) Si la réponse à la question commune 7(a) est « oui » et que la réponse à la question commune 7(b) est « non », les membres du sous-groupe peuvent-ils obtenir des dommages en vertu de l'art. 24(1) de la Charte?
- (e) La causalité des dommages subis par les membres du sous-groupe peut-elle être considérée comme une question commune?
- (f) La Cour peut-elle procéder à une évaluation globale de tout ou partie des dommages subis par les membres du sous-groupe?
- (g) La conduite du défendeur justifie-t-elle l'octroi de dommages-intérêts punitifs et, dans l'affirmative, de quel montant?
- (h) La Cour devrait-elle ordonner au défendeur de prendre des mesures pour fournir aux membres du sous-groupe ou s'assurer qu'il leur soit fourni ou s'abstenir d'interdire un accès adéquat à de l'eau potable?
- (i) Dans l'affirmative, quelles mesures devraient être ordonnées?

8. Si la question commune de l'étape 1 est tranchée en faveur des demandeurs, les parties concluront un plan de communication de la preuve pour gérer la production, en temps opportun, par le défendeur des documents pertinents à l'égard des questions communes de l'étape 2 pour chaque sous-groupe des Premières Nations touchées.

9. Au moment d'évaluer la production des documents du défendeur, les demandeurs décideront s'il y a lieu de présenter des motions de jugement sommaire sur les questions communes.

de l'étape 2 pour certains ou la totalité des sous-groupes des Premières Nations touchées, ou s'il y a lieu de prévoir une instruction sur ces questions communes.

NOTIFICATION DE L'ATTESTATION ET PROCÉDURE DE RETRAIT

10. Lors de la motion en attestation, les demandeurs demanderont à la Cour de fixer la forme et le contenu de la notification de l'attestation de ce recours (l'« avis d'attestation »), le moment et la manière de fournir l'avis d'attestation (le « programme d'avis ») et d'indiquer une date de retrait comme étant trois (3) mois suivant la date de l'ordonnance d'attestation (la « date de retrait »), et une date de participation comme étant six (6) mois avant le début de la détermination des questions communes de l'étape 2.

11. Si une motion de jugement sommaire est entendue avec une motion en attestation, les demandeurs demanderont au tribunal de rendre d'abord sa décision sur l'attestation, d'ordonner la délivrance d'un avis si un recours collectif est attesté, puis de rendre sa décision sur la question commune de l'étape 1 après la date de retrait.

12. Les demandeurs demanderont à la Cour d'ordonner au défendeur de payer les frais du programme d'avis, y compris les frais de l'administrateur.

13. Les demandeurs demanderont une ordonnance pour la distribution de l'avis d'attestation comme suit :

- (a) afficher l'avis sur les sites Web respectifs des avocats du groupe, du défendeur et de l'administrateur;
- (b) publier l'avis dans les journaux désignés;
- (c) distribuer l'avis à tous les bureaux de la Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak et de l'Assemblée des Premières Nations;
- (d) faire parvenir l'avis à tout membre du groupe qui le demande et aux chefs de chaque Première Nation qui a le droit d'adhérer au groupe, ainsi qu'à chaque bureau d'une bande;
- (e) établir une ligne de soutien nationale sans frais, afin de fournir de l'aide aux membres du groupe, aux familles, aux tuteurs, aux gardiens ou aux autres personnes qui font des demandes pour leur propre compte ou pour le compte de membres du groupe;

(f) et par tout autre avis que la Cour ordonne.

14. Les demandeurs demanderont à la Cour d'approuver les formulaires de retrait et de participation devant être utilisés par les membres du groupe qui souhaitent se retirer du recours collectif ou y participer, ce qui exigera que le membre du groupe fournisse suffisamment de renseignements pour établir qu'il est membre du groupe.

ÉTAPES DE POURSUITE DE L'INSTANCE APRÈS LA DÉTERMINATION DES QUESTIONS COMMUNES FAVORABLES AU GROUPE

Avis de résolution des questions communes

15. Les demandeurs demanderont à la Cour de régler la forme et le contenu de l'avis de résolution des questions communes de l'étape 1 et de l'étape 2 (le « plan d'avis de résolution ») et la manière dont les membres du groupe déposeront des réclamations (les « formulaires de réclamation ») avant une date fixée avec l'administrateur. Les demandeurs demanderont également à la Cour de régler un processus approprié pour déterminer les questions individuelles restantes.

Évaluation des dommages

16. Si les questions communes sont résolues en faveur des demandeurs, les demandeurs proposent deux (2) méthodes d'évaluation et de distribution des dommages-intérêts pour les membres du groupe comme suit :

- (a) l'ensemble des dommages-intérêts dont chaque particulier membre d'un groupe peut se prévaloir au prorata ou au prorata au sein d'un sous-groupe;
- (b) l'ensemble des dommages-intérêts dont les Premières Nations participantes peuvent se prévaloir sur une base communautaire; et

17. À la suite de la détermination de l'ensemble des dommages-intérêts, y compris les dommages-intérêts punitifs, des dommages-intérêts supplémentaires peuvent être accordés dans le cadre d'instances individuelles.

Évaluation du nombre de demandeurs

18. Après l'expiration du délai de remise des formulaires de réclamation, l'administrateur calcule le nombre total de demandeurs aux fins de tout partage au prorata des dommages-intérêts globaux.

Distribution de dommages-intérêts punitifs globaux

19. Si la Cour accorde des dommages-intérêts globaux au groupe ou à un sous-groupe, le montant total des dommages-intérêts sera attribué au groupe d'une manière que déterminera la Cour dans un délai fixé par la Cour à partir de l'avis de résolution.

Fonds non distribués

20. Toute somme non distribuée sera distribuée à cy-près selon les directives de la Cour. Les demandeurs proposent que les montants résiduels soient distribués cy-près à des organismes communautaires qui aident les Premières Nations touchées à mettre en place des infrastructures d'approvisionnement en eau.

Résolution des questions individuelles

21. Dans les trente (30) jours qui suivent la délivrance du jugement sur les questions communes, les parties se réunissent pour régler un protocole visant à résoudre des questions individuelles. Si les parties ne parviennent pas à s'entendre sur un tel protocole, les demandeurs doivent demander des directives à la Cour dans les soixante (60) jours.

EXIGENCES DIVERSES DU PLAN DE POURSUITE DE L'INSTANCEFinancement

22. Les avocats du groupe ont conclu une entente avec les représentants demandeurs à l'égard des honoraires d'avocats et débours juridiques. Cette entente prévoit que les avocats du groupe ne recevront pas de paiement pour leur travail tant que le recours collectif n'aura pas reçu une suite favorable ou que les frais n'auront pas été recouverts du défendeur.

23. Les honoraires des avocats du groupe sont soumis à l'approbation du tribunal en vertu de la Loi sur les recours collectifs.

Administration des réclamations

24. L'administrateur assurera l'administration des réclamations pour tout règlement ou jugement obtenu. L'administrateur distribuera l'avis conformément au plan d'avis de résolution. Si un règlement est réalisé et qu'un fonds de règlement est fourni, ou si un jugement donne lieu à une attribution en faveur des membres du groupe, l'administrateur administrera les paiements prélevés sur le fonds aux demandeurs selon la procédure indiquée ci-dessus, après approbation et/ou modification par la Cour.

Site Web du recours collectif

25. De temps à autre, les avocats du groupe afficheront les actes de procédure et les documents de cour pertinents, les derniers documents et résumés des derniers développements et faits nouveaux, les délais prévus, la foire aux questions et les réponses et les coordonnées des avocats du groupe pour les renseignements des membres du groupe.

Gestion des conflits

26. Les avocats du groupe et les demandeurs ont pris les mesures appropriées pour établir qu'il n'existe aucun conflit d'intérêts entre les membres du groupe, et qu'aucun tel conflit n'est prévu. En cas de conflit, McCarthy Tétrault S.E.N.C.R.L., s.r.l. représentera un sous-groupe et Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP, l'autre. Si un conflit survenait entre les Premières Nations et leurs membres, ce qui n'est pas prévu étant donné leur intérêt commun, McCarthy Tétrault S.E.N.C.R.L., s.r.l. représentera les membres et Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP représentera les Premières Nations.

Droit applicable

27. La législation applicable est la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982, la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, la Charte des droits et libertés, la Loi sur la salubrité de l'eau potable des Premières Nations, L.C. 2013, c. 21, la Loi sur les Indiens, L.R.C. 1985, c. I-5, Loi sur la gestion des terres des Premières Nations, L.C. 1999, c. 24, La Loi sur les recours collectifs, CPLM c C130 ainsi que les règlements applicables, la common law et le droit manitobain.

MODÈLE DE RÉOLUTION D'ACCEPTATION DU CONSEIL DE BANDE

Voir ci-joint

[Nom de la Première Nation]Résolution du conseil de bande

En ce qui concerne l'entente de règlement dans le cadre des actions collectives portant sur les avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable sur les terres des Premières Nations

ATTENDU QUE le 11 octobre 2019, certains demandeurs ont introduit l'action intitulée Curve Lake First Nation and Chief Emily Whetung on her own behalf and on behalf of all members of Curve Lake First Nation and Neskantaga First Nation and Chief Christopher Moonias on his own behalf and on behalf of all members of Neskantaga First Nation c. Attorney General of Canada, portant le numéro de dossier T-1673-19 devant la Cour fédérale (l'« action devant la Cour fédérale »);

ATTENDU QUE le 20 novembre 2019, certains demandeurs ont introduit l'action intitulée Tataskweyak Cree Nation and Chief Doreen Spence on her own behalf and on behalf of all members of Tataskweyak Cree Nation c. Attorney General of Canada, portant le numéro de dossier CI-19-01-24661 devant la Cour du banc de la Reine du Manitoba (l'« action au Manitoba »), et conjointement avec l'action devant la Cour fédérale, les « actions »);

ATTENDU QUE les actions ont été attestées ou autorisées par les tribunaux respectifs comme des recours collectifs;

ATTENDU QUE le procureur général du Canada et les demandeurs dans les actions ont négocié une entente de règlement (l'« entente de règlement ») à l'égard des actions;

ATTENDU QUE l'entente de règlement prévoit qu'une Première Nation membre du groupe visé dans les actions (le « groupe ») peut donner à l'administrateur désigné par les tribunaux en vertu de l'entente de règlement (l'« administrateur ») un avis d'acceptation par cette Première Nation de l'entente de règlement et ainsi avoir droit à certaines indemnités et à certains avantages aux termes de l'entente de règlement dont peuvent se prévaloir les membres de cette Première Nation;

ATTENDU QUE [nom de la Première Nation] est membre du groupe et que le [nom du conseil de bande] (le « conseil ») souhaite confirmer et approuver l'acceptation de l'entente de règlement par [nom de la Première Nation] en adoptant la présente résolution du conseil de bande à une réunion dûment constituée convoquée à cette fin;

IL EST PAR LES PRÉSENTES RÉSOLU CE QUI SUIT :

1. Le conseil enjoint au chef [Nom du chef], au nom de la [Nom de la Première Nation] et lui donne l'autorisation, par les présentes, d'approuver et d'accepter l'entente de règlement, dont une copie a été examinée par les signataires ci-après au nom du conseil, et il enjoint en outre à ce signataire autorisé et lui donne l'autorisation, par les présentes, de remettre à l'administrateur une copie signée de la présente résolution du conseil de bande pour confirmer l'acceptation de l'entente de règlement par [Nom de la Première

Nation]. Le conseil reconnaît et confirme par les présentes qu'aucune autre mesure n'est requise par le conseil pour accepter l'entente de règlement.

2. Le conseil ordonne et donne l'autorisation, par les présentes, au chef, au nom de la [Nom de la Première Nation], de temps à autre, de signer et de remettre la présente résolution ainsi que les autres documents et instruments et de prendre toutes les mesures raisonnablement nécessaires pour exécuter l'entente de règlement et y donner effet, y compris, s'il le juge approprié, pour confirmer la résidence des personnes membres du groupe dans une réserve de la [Nom de la Première Nation] alors qu'un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme était en vigueur dans cette réserve pendant la période visée par l'entente de règlement.
3. Ces résolutions peuvent être signées par le chef et les membres du conseil en autant d'exemplaires pouvant se révéler nécessaire, sous forme originale ou électronique, dont chacun sera réputé être un original, et dont la totalité seront réputés constituer ensemble une seule et même résolution.

Les signataires suivants attestent et garantissent qu'un quorum du conseil a signé la présente résolution du conseil de bande, comme en font foi leurs signatures ci-dessous.

DU CONSEIL DE BANDE

Voir ci-joint.

[Nom de la Première Nation]

Confirmation du conseil de bande

En ce qui concerne l'entente de règlement dans le cadre des actions collectives portant sur les avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable sur les terres des Premières Nations

Il y a lieu de se reporter à l'entente de règlement (l'« entente de règlement ») intervenue en date du [•] septembre 2021 entre le procureur général du Canada (le « Canada »), la Première Nation de Curve Lake et la cheffe Emily Whetung, pour son propre compte et pour le compte de tous les membres de la Première Nation de Curve Lake, la Première Nation de Neskantaga et le chef Wayne Moonias et l'ancien chef Christopher Moonias, pour leur propre compte et pour le compte de tous les membres de la Première Nation de Neskantaga, et la Nation des cris de Tataskweyak et la cheffe Doreen Spence, pour son propre compte et pour le compte de tous les membres de la Nation des cris de Tataskweyak. Les termes clés utilisés mais non définis dans la présente confirmation du conseil de bande ont le sens qui leur est donné dans l'entente de règlement.

Conformément à l'entente de règlement, une Première Nation membre du groupe peut fournir à l'administrateur une déclaration identifiant les personnes membres du groupe qui résidaient habituellement dans une réserve de cette Première Nation membre du groupe entre le 20 novembre 1995 et le 20 juin 2021 alors qu'un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme était en vigueur dans cette réserve (collectivement, les « membres du groupe visés »). Un « résident habituel » s'entend d'une personne qui a vécu dans la réserve plus longtemps qu'elle n'a vécu ailleurs, ou d'une personne qui était âgée de dix-huit (18) ans ou moins au moment visé et qui vivait habituellement dans une réserve touchée, mais qui vivait ailleurs pendant une partie de l'année pour fréquenter un établissement d'enseignement. Les membres du groupe visé doivent avoir résidé habituellement dans la réserve pendant au moins un an au cours d'une période au cours de laquelle un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme était en vigueur.

FAIT le _____ 202__.

[insérer le nom]

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- b) les coordonnées du bureau du conseil de bande ou du bureau analogue des Premières Nations visées au paragraphe a);
 - c) les réserves touchées et les dates auxquelles les avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable d'une durée d'au moins un (1) an étaient en vigueur pour chaque Première Nation visée au paragraphe a);
 - d) si l'avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable visé au paragraphe c) était un avis d'ébullition de l'eau, un avis de ne pas boire ou un avis de non-utilisation; et
 - e) si les Premières Nations visées au paragraphe a) sont des Premières Nations éloignées ou non éloignées.
- 2. Immédiatement après la réception de la liste, l'administrateur envoie un formulaire de réclamation à chaque bureau du conseil de bande ou bureau analogue indiqué à l'alinéa 1.b) avec une demande de remise d'une copie du formulaire de réclamation aux membres de cette Première Nation. L'administrateur envoie les formulaires de réclamation par courriel ou, si aucune adresse de courrier électronique n'est fournie, par courrier postal si une adresse est fournie. Si un courriel n'est pas distribué ou ne peut l'être, l'administrateur envoie le formulaire de réclamation par courrier postal. Si le courrier postal n'est pas distribué ou ne peut l'être, l'administrateur n'a aucune autre obligation de s'efforcer de fournir une copie du formulaire de réclamation à cette Première Nation.
- 3. Immédiatement après la réception de la liste, l'administrateur déploie tous les efforts raisonnables pour conserver un agent de liaison communautaire de chaque Première Nation figurant sur la liste, ou d'un conseil tribal approprié, afin de déployer tous les efforts raisonnables pour :
- a) fournir des formulaires de réclamation aux membres de cette Première Nation;
 - b) encourager les membres admissibles de cette Première Nation à soumettre leurs formulaires de réclamation;
 - c) aider les membres de cette Première Nation à remplir et à soumettre leurs formulaires de réclamation, notamment en les mettant en contact avec l'administrateur; aviser les Premières Nations membres du groupe qu'elles doivent donner un avis d'acceptation si elles souhaitent participer à l'entente; et
 - d) aviser les Premières Nations membres du groupe qu'elles peuvent soumettre une confirmation du conseil de bande, si elles le souhaitent.
- 1. L'administrateur met le formulaire de réclamation à la disposition du public sur son site Web et le fait parvenir par courriel ou par la poste à toute personne qui en fait la demande.
- 2. L'administrateur inclut dans l'envoi postal une enveloppe affranchie et le formulaire de réclamation.
- 3. L'administrateur tient à jour une base de données de tous les formulaires de réclamation et confirmations du conseil de bande qu'il reçoit. Si les parties reçoivent des formulaires de réclamation ou des confirmations du conseil de bande, elles les transmettent immédiatement à l'administrateur.
- 4. À la réception d'un formulaire de réclamation ou d'une confirmation du conseil de bande, l'administrateur examine le formulaire de réclamation ou la confirmation du conseil de bande, selon le cas, pour déterminer s'il est complet et, s'il est incomplet, il fait tous les efforts raisonnables pour communiquer avec le demandeur d'indemnité ou la Première Nation membre du groupe, selon le cas, afin d'obtenir d'autres renseignements, pour remplir le formulaire de réclamation ou la confirmation du conseil de bande. Toutefois, l'administrateur aura le pouvoir discrétionnaire d'accepter des irrégularités mineures et, s'il accepte un formulaire de réclamation ou une confirmation du conseil de bande comportant des irrégularités mineures, il n'est pas tenu de communiquer avec le demandeur d'indemnité ou la Première Nation membre du groupe pour obtenir de plus amples renseignements. Les demandeurs d'indemnité et les Premières Nations membres du groupe disposent de quatre-vingt-dix (90) jours à compter de la date à laquelle ils sont contactés pour remédier à toute irrégularité décelée, à défaut de quoi l'administrateur leur indiquera par écrit, selon le cas, son refus d'accepter le formulaire de réclamation ou la confirmation du conseil de bande et le motif de son refus. Malgré ce qui précède, l'administrateur peut accepter la partie incomplète d'une confirmation du conseil de bande qui contient suffisamment de renseignements pour prendre une décision quant à l'admissibilité.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

8. Dans les cas d'omissions ou d'erreurs mineures dans un formulaire de réclamation ou une confirmation du conseil de bande, l'administrateur doit coniger ces omissions ou erreurs s'il dispose aisément du renseignement nécessaire pour corriger l'erreur ou l'omission.

9. Chaque demandeur d'indemnité peut seulement soumettre un (1) formulaire de réclamation à l'égard de toutes ses réclamations, tanis qu'un exécuter testamentaire, un demandeur d'indemnité successoral ou un représentant personnel peut seulement présenter un (1) formulaire de réclamation pour le compte d'un demandeur d'indemnité concerné.

DÉCISIONS QUANT À L'ADMISSIBILITÉ CONCERNANT LES PERSONNES MEMBRES DU GROUPE

10 Immédiatement après la réception d'un formulai ne de réclamation de règlement, l'administrateur prend une décision quant à l'admissibilité conformément à l'entente en fonction du formulaire de réclamation, de la liste, de toute confirmation du conseil de bande pertinente, de tout autre renseignement reçu des parties et de tout autre renseignement qu'il juge approprié
Immédiatement après la réception d'une confirmation du conseil de bande, l'administrateur prend les décisions quant à l'admissibilité conformément à l'entente (y compris le paragraphe 7.02(2)) à l'égard des demandeurs d'indemnité qui y sont indiqués, en fonction de la confirmation du conseil de bande, des formulaires de réclamation reçus à l'égard des demandeurs d'indemnité qui sont indiqués dans la confirmation du conseil de bande, de la liste, de tout autre renseignement reçu des part es et de tout autre renseignement que l'administrateur juge approprié.

11. Si un formulaire de réclamation ou une confirmation du conseil de bande indique que le demandeur d'indemnité résidait habituellement dans une réserve qui figure sur la liste depuis au moins un (1) an et qui était visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long ferme, mais que le demandeur d'indemnité est membre d'une Première Nation qui n'est pas une Première Mation touchée, le demandeur d'indemnité peut néanmoins être inclus dans le groupe. Si un formulaire de réclamation ou une confirmation du conseil de bande indique que le demandeur d'indemnité était habituellement résident dans une réserve qui ne figure pas sur la liste, et que l'administrateur n'en a pas encore tenu compte, alors l'administrateur :

- a) consulte le comité de mise en-oeuvre du règlement avant de déterminer si le ncm de la réserve devrait être ajouté sur la liste au motif qu'elle était visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme pendant la période visée et. si c'est le cas, lorsque la période la réserve était visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme; et
- b) peut demander d'autres renseignements ou preuves avant de prendre une décision quant à l'admissibilité.

12. Si l'administrateur juge que le demandeur d'indemnité n'est pas une personne membre du groupe, il informe sans délai le demandeur d'indemnité :

- a) de la décision de l'administrateur;
- b) des motifs de la décision de l'administrateur selon lesquels le demandeur d'indemnité n'est pas une personne membre du groupe; et

c) de sa possibilité d'interjeter appel devant le tiers évaluateur de la décision de l'administrateur conformément à la présente procédure de règlement des réclamations et à l'entente.

INDEMNITÉ POUR LES PERSONNES MEMBRES DU GROUPE

13. Si l'administrateur prend une décision quant à l'admissibilité selon laquelle un demandeur d'indemnité est une personne membre du groupe conformément à l'entente, l'administrateur quantifie le montant payable à cette personne membre du groupe sur le Fonds en fiducie conformément à l'article 3.01 et à l'ANNEXE G de l'entente, l'administrateur demande ces fonds au fiduciaire, le fiduciaire fournit ces fonds à l'administrateur et l'administrateur paie ces fonds conformément à l'entente.

14. Lorsque l'administrateur verse une indemnité conformément à l'article 3.01 de l'entente et à l'article 13 de la présente ANNEXE F, l'administrateur informe également la personne membre du groupe :

a) du mode de calcul de la somme payée; et

b) de sa possibilité d'interjeter appel devant le tiers évaluateur de la quantification de l'administrateur de la somme payable conformément à la présente procédure de règlement des réclamations et à l'entente.

INDEMNITÉ POUR PRÉJUDICES DÉTERMINÉS

15. Sur demande raisonnable, les avocats du groupe aident un demandeur d'indemnité à soumettre sa réclamation d'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés ou à formuler son appel d'une décision relative à un préjudice déterminé sans frais supplémentaires pour le demandeur d'indemnité, et les honoraires des avocats du groupe sont payables conformément à l'article 18.02 de l'entente.

16. Une personne membre du groupe confirmée est admissible à une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés si elle satisfait aux critères énoncés à l'article 3.02 de l'entente.

17. Un demandeur d'indemnité peut, à son gré, soumettre, au soutien de sa réclamation d'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés, à l'administrateur la totalité ou une partie des éléments suivants avec son formulaire de réclamation :

a) les dossiers médicaux du préjudice et sa cause;

b) les autres dossiers, y compris les dossiers écrits, les photographies et les vidéos, concernant le préjudice et sa cause;

c) une déclaration écrite; et

d) témoignage oral.

18. Il est entendu que la procédure de règlement des réclamations portant sur des préjudices déterminés n'est pas censée être traumatisante et que l'article 17 de la présente Error! Reference source not found, n'empêche pas un demandeur d'indemnité d'établir son admissibilité à une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés en se fondant uniquement sur son formulaire de réclamation.

19. Si un demandeur d'indemnité réclame une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés, mais que l'administrateur détermine que ce demandeur d'indemnité n'a pas droit à une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés lorsque les préjudices qui y sont décrits ne sont pas prévus dans la grille d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés, l'administrateur se conforme sans délai à l'article 7.04 de l'entente.

20. Si un demandeur d'indemnité réclame une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés, mais que l'administrateur détermine que le demandeur d'indemnité n'a pas droit à une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés concernant les préjudices qui y sont décrits pour un motif autre que celui selon lequel le préjudice n'est pas prévu dans la grille d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés, l'administrateur informe sans délai le demandeur d'indemnité :

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- a) de la décision de l'administrateur;
- b) des motifs de la décision de l'administrateur selon lesquels le demandeur d'indemnité n'a pas droit à une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés; et
- c) de sa possibilité d'interjeter appel devant le tiers évaluateur de la décision de l'administrateur conformément à la présente procédure de règlement des réclamations et à l'entente.

21. Si l'administrateur établit qu'une personne membre du groupe confirmée a droit à une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés, il quantifie le montant payable à cette personne membre du groupe confirmée sur le fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés conformément à l'article 8.02 de l'entente et à l'Error! Reference source not found.

22. Le paiement de l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés sera effectué conformément à l'article 8.02 de l'entente. L'administrateur demande ces fonds au fiduciaire, le fiduciaire fournit ces fonds à l'administrateur et l'administrateur paie ces fonds conformément à l'entente.

23. Lorsque l'administrateur verse une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés à une personne membre du groupe confirmée, conformément à l'article 8.02 de l'entente et à la présente Error! Reference source not found., l'administrateur doit également informer la personne membre du groupe confirmée :

- a) du mode de calcul de la somme payée; et
- b) de sa possibilité d'interjeter appel devant le tiers évaluateur de la quantification de l'administrateur de la somme payable conformément à la présente procédure de règlement des réclamations et à l'entente.

DOMMAGES-INTÉRÊTS DE PREMIÈRE NATION MEMBRE DU GROUPE

24. Dès la réception d'une acceptation, l'administrateur détermine si la Première Nation est admissible à titre de Première Nation membre du groupe. L'inscription sur la liste constitue une preuve concluante que la Première Nation est admissible à titre de Première Nation membre du groupe. Si la Première Nation ne figure pas sur la liste, l'administrateur :

- a) consulte le comité de mise en oeuvre du règlement avant de déterminer si la Première Nation est admissible à titre de Première Nation membre du groupe; et
- b) peut demander des renseignements ou des preuves supplémentaires avant de décider si une Première Nation est admissible à titre de Première Nation membre du groupe.

25. Si l'administrateur établit qu'une Première Nation n'est pas une Première Nation membre du groupe par application de l'article 24 de la présente Error! Reference source not found., il informe sans délai la Première Nation :

- a) de la décision de l'administrateur;
- b) des motifs de la décision de l'administrateur selon lesquels la Première Nation n'est pas une Première Nation membre de groupe; et
- c) de sa possibilité d'interjeter appel devant le tiers évaluateur de la décision de l'administrateur conformément à la présente procédure de règlement des réclamations et à l'entente.

26. Si l'administrateur établit qu'une Première Nation qui a remis une acceptation est une Première Nation membre de groupe, il paie l'indemnité de base et les dommages- intérêts de Première Nation conformément à l'article 8.03 de l'entente. L'administrateur demande ces fonds au fiduciaire, le fiduciaire fournit ces fonds à l'administrateur et l'administrateur paie ces fonds conformément à l'entente.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

27. Chaque fois que l'administrateur verse des dommages-intérêts de Première Nation à une Première Nation membre de groupe, il informe la Première Nation membre de groupe :

- a) de la manière dont il a calculé la somme payée; et
- b) de sa possibilité d'interjeter appel devant le tiers évaluateur de la quantification de l'administrateur conformément à la présente procédure de règlement des réclamations et à l'entente.

APPEL

28. Lorsqu'un demandeur d'indemnité, une personne membre du groupe, une Première Nation ou une Première Nation membre du groupe, selon le cas (un «appelant»), souhaite interjeter appel d'une décision de l'administrateur, l'appelant fournit à l'administrateur, dans les soixante (60) jours de la réception de la décision de l'administrateur, une déclaration écrite indiquant la décision qu'il souhaite porter en appel et les motifs pour lesquels il estime que l'administrateur a erré.

29. L'administrateur transmet sans délai les documents qu'il reçoit par application de l'article 23 de la présente annexe au tiers évaluateur pour que ce dernier tranche l'affaire.

30. Lorsqu'il examine un appel, le tiers évaluateur peut consulter l'appelant, l'administrateur et le comité de mise en oeuvre du règlement. Le tiers évaluateur peut notamment demander des preuves à l'appelant et à l'administrateur.

31. Le tiers évaluateur tranche l'appel dans les meilleurs délais.

32. Dès qu'il rend sa décision, le tiers évaluateur informe sans délai l'appelant et l'administrateur :

- a) de la décision du tiers évaluateur; et b) des motifs de la décision du tiers évaluateur.

33. La décision du tiers évaluateur est définitive et n'est pas susceptible d'appel ou de révision.

34. Il est entendu qu'une personne membre du groupe ne peut interjeter appel devant le tiers évaluateur d'une réclamation d'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés lorsque l'administrateur juge que le préjudice qui y est décrit n'est pas prévu dans la grille d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés. L'article 7.04 de l'entente reçoit plutôt application.

GÉNÉRALITÉS

35. À moins d'indication contraire dans l'entente ou dans la présente procédure de règlement des réclamations, la norme de preuve dans tous les cas est la prépondérance des probabilités en fonction de l'entente, et le tiers évaluateur applique une norme de contrôle de la décision correcte en fonction de l'entente. Il est entendu que, pour que l'administrateur ou le tiers évaluateur conclue qu'un demandeur d'indemnité ou une Première Nation est admissible à une indemnité conformément à l'entente et sauf indication contraire dans la présente entente ou la présente procédure de règlement des réclamations, l'administrateur ou le tiers évaluateur doit conclure qu'il est plus que probable que le demandeur d'indemnité ou la Première Nation soit admissible à une indemnité selon les renseignements dont dispose l'administrateur ou le tiers évaluateur.

36. Pour déterminer si i) un demandeur d'indemnité est une personne membre du groupe et est admissible à une indemnité en vertu de l'entente ou ii) une Première Nation est une Première Nation membre du groupe, l'administrateur et le tiers évaluateur peuvent :

- a) demander des renseignements supplémentaires à un demandeur d'indemnité, à une Première Nation ou aux parties; et
- b) interroger un demandeur d'indemnité ou un représentant d'une Première Nation.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

37. Les parties peuvent apporter des modifications à la présente procédure de règlement des réclamations si elles y consentent pour des changements de procédures, comme la prorogation de délai, et l'adoption de protocoles et de procédures, sans obtenir l'approbation du tribunal, pour autant que ces modifications n'aient pas d'incidence importante sur les droits et recours énoncés dans la procédure de règlement des réclamations. Les parties obtiennent l'approbation des tribunaux quant aux changements de fond apportés à la présente procédure de règlement des réclamations.

38. L'administrateur fournit une ligne d'assistance bilingue (français et anglais) sans frais pour aider les demandeurs d'indemnité, les membres de leur famille, leurs tuteurs ou d'autres personnes qui formulent des demandes de renseignements pour le compte des demandeurs d'indemnité.

39. Après la distribution des fonds indiqués ci-dessous conformément à la présente entente :

- a) le Fonds en fiducie, y compris tout excédent du Fonds en fiducie;
- b) le fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés; et
- c) le Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations, l'administrateur demande à être libéré et dépose devant les tribunaux un rapport conformément à l'article 21.02 de l'entente, contenant des renseignements au mieux de sa connaissance concernant ce qui suit :

- d) le nombre total de personnes membres du groupe et de Premières Nations membres du groupe;
- e) le nombre de demandeurs d'indemnité qui ont soumis un formulaire de réclamation et le nombre de personnes qui ont reçu des dommages-intérêts individuels;
- f) le nombre de demandeurs d'indemnité qui ont réclamé une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés et le nombre de demandeurs d'indemnité qui ont reçu une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés;
- g) le nombre de Premières Nations membres du groupe qui ont remis l'acceptation de l'entente;
- h) les montants distribués aux membres du groupe ou pour le compte de membres du groupe, à titre de dommages-intérêts individuels, d'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés ou de dommages-intérêts de Première Nation, et une description de la façon dont les montants ont été distribués;
- i) le nombre de réclamations par Première Nation et les sommes payées par celle-ci; et
- j) les coûts associés aux travaux de l'administrateur.

40. Une partie ou l'administrateur peut proposer qu'une partie du rapport visée à l'article 39 de la présente annexe soit placée sous scellés.

41. Dès qu'il est libéré de ses fonctions d'administrateur, l'administrateur conserve sur support papier ou électronique tous les documents se rapportant à une réclamation pendant deux (2) ans, après quoi il doit détruire ces documents.

Symptômes de référence en santé mentale

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Dépression majeure 	A. Au moins cinq des symptômes suivants étaient présents au cours d'une même période de deux semaines et représentent un changement sur le plan du fonctionnement : au moins un de ces symptômes est (1) une humeur dépressive ou (2) une perte d'intérêt ou de plaisir. Ne pas inclure les symptômes qui sont manifestement attribuables à une autre condition médicale. <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Humeur dépressive présente pendant la plus grande partie de la journée, presque tous les jours, qu'elle soit signalée par la personne (p. ex., en indiquant qu'elle se sent triste, vide, désespérée) ou observée par les autres (p. ex., en signalant l'avoir vue pleurer). (Remarque : Chez l'enfant et l'adolescent, il peut s'agir d'une humeur irritable.) 2. Diminution marquée de l'intérêt ou du plaisir relatif à toutes ou presque toutes les activités pendant la plus grande partie de la journée, presque tous les jours (signalée par la personne ou observée par les autres). 3. Perte de poids significative non attribuable à un régime ou gain de poids important (p. ex., changement de poids dépassant les 5 % en un mois), ou appétit accru ou réduit presque tous les jours. (Remarque : Chez l'enfant, prendre en compte la non-survenance d'une augmentation de poids attendue.) 4. Insomnie ou hypersomnie presque tous les jours. 5. Agitation ou ralentissement sur le plan psychomoteur presque tous les jours (observable par les autres, et non seulement un sentiment subjectif de fébrilité ou de ralentissement). 6. Fatigue ou perte d'énergie presque tous les jours. 7. Sentiment de dévalorisation ou de culpabilité excessive ou inappropriée (et potentiellement délirante) presque tous les jours (pas seulement se faire grief ou se sentir coupable d'être malade). 8. Diminution de l'aptitude à penser ou à se concentrer, ou indécision, presque tous les jours (signalée par la personne ou observée par les autres). 9. Pensées de mort récurrentes (pas seulement une peur de mourir), idées suicidaires récurrentes sans plan précis ou tentative de suicide ou plan précis pour se suicider. B. Les symptômes causent une souffrance cliniquement significative ou une altération du fonctionnement social, professionnel ou dans d'autres domaines importants. C. L'épisode n'est pas imputable aux effets physiologiques d'une substance ou d'une autre affection médicale.

L'utilisation récurrente du sédatif, de l'hypnotique ou de l'anxiolytique entraîne le manquement à d'importantes obligations au travail, à l'école ou à la maison (p. ex., absences répétées ou mauvais rendement au travail; absences, suspensions ou expulsions de l'école; ou négligence à l'égard d'un enfant ou du ménage). 6. Utilisation persistante du sédatif, de l'hypnotique ou de l'anxiolytique malgré le fait que ses effets causent ou exacerbent des problèmes sociaux ou interpersonnels persistants ou récurrents (p. ex., disputes conjugales à propos des conséquences de l'intoxication; altercations physiques). 7. La participation à des activités sociales, professionnelles ou récréatives importantes est abandonnée ou réduite en raison de l'utilisation du sédatif, de l'hypnotique ou de l'anxiolytique. 8. Utilisation récurrente du sédatif, de l'hypnotique ou de l'anxiolytique dans des situations où il pose un danger physique (p. ex., conduite automobile ou contrôle de machinerie). 9. Utilisation persistante du sédatif, de l'hypnotique ou de l'anxiolytique bien que la personne soit consciente d'avoir un problème physique ou psychologique persistant ou récurrent qui est susceptible d'avoir été causé ou exacerbé par cette substance. 10. Tolérance, comme définie par l'un des éléments suivants : <ol style="list-style-type: none"> a. Besoin de quantités de plus en plus grandes du sédatif, de l'hypnotique ou de l'anxiolytique pour s'intoxiquer ou obtenir l'effet souhaité. b. Effet notablement réduit avec l'utilisation continue de la même quantité de sédatif, d'hypnotique ou d'anxiolytique. Remarque : Ce critère n'est pas considéré comme satisfait pour les personnes qui utilisent un sédatif, un hypnotique ou un anxiolytique sous supervision médicale. <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 11. Sevrage, comme manifesté par l'un des éléments suivants : <ol style="list-style-type: none"> a. Le syndrome de sevrage caractéristique d'un sédatif, d'un hypnotique ou d'un anxiolytique (voir les critères A et B

	établis pour le sevrage d'un sédatif, d'un hypnotique ou d'un anxiolytique). b. Le sédatif, l'hypnotique ou l'anxiolytique (ou une substance qui s'en rapproche fortement, comme l'alcool) sont pris pour soulager ou éviter les symptômes de sevrage.
• Etat de stress post-traumatique	Remarque : Les critères suivants s'appliquent aux adultes, aux adolescents et aux enfants âgés de plus de six ans. Pour les enfants de six ans et moins, voir les critères correspondants ci-dessous. A. Exposition à la mort, à des blessures graves ou à de la violence sexuelle, ou encore à leur potentialité, d'au moins une des façons suivantes : <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Vivre directement le ou les événements traumatiques. 2. Être témoin en personne du ou des événements alors qu'ils sont vécus par d'autres. 3. Apprendre que le ou les événements traumatiques ont été vécus par un membre de la famille proche ou un ami proche. En cas du décès ou de la mise en danger mortel d'un membre de la famille ou d'un ami, le ou les événements doivent avoir été violents ou accidentels. 4. Vivre une exposition répétée ou extrême aux détails pénibles du ou des événements traumatiques (p. ex., des premiers intervenants qui recueillent des restes humains, ou des policiers qui sont exposés à répétition aux détails de la maltraitance d'enfants). Remarque : Le critère A4 ne s'applique pas à l'exposition par l'intermédiaire de médias électroniques, de la télévision, de films ou de photos, à moins qu'elle ne soit liée au travail. B. Présence d'au moins un des symptômes intrusifs suivants associés à ou aux événements traumatiques, pourvu qu'ils soient apparus après la survenance de ce dernier : <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Souvenirs pénibles récurrents, involontaires, et envahissants du ou des événements traumatiques. Remarque : Chez l'enfant âgé de plus de six ans, il peut s'agir d'un jeu répétitif dans lequel des thèmes ou des aspects du ou des événements traumatiques sont exprimés. <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 2. Rêves répétitifs pénibles dont le contenu ou l'affect sont liés à ou aux événements traumatiques. Remarque : Chez l'enfant, il peut s'agir de rêves effrayants sans contenu reconnaissable. <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 3. Réactions dissociatives (p. ex., flashbacks) dans lesquelles la personne se sent ou agit comme si le ou les événements traumatiques se reproduisaient. (De telles réactions peuvent survenir sur un continuum, l'expression la plus sérieuse étant une perte totale de conscience de l'environnement actuel.) Remarque : Chez l'enfant, des reconstitutions du traumatisme peuvent se produire dans le jeu. <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 4. Détresse psychologique intense ou prolongée à l'exposition à des indices internes ou externes évoquant un aspect du ou des événements traumatiques ou y ressemblant.

	5. Réactions physiologiques marquées à des indices internes ou externes évoquant un aspect du ou des événements traumatiques ou y ressemblant. C. Évitement persistant des stimuli associés à ou aux événements traumatiques, pourvu qu'il soit apparu après la survenance de ces derniers, comme en témoigne au moins une des manifestations suivantes : <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Évitement ou tentatives d'évitement de souvenirs, de pensées ou de sentiments pénibles concernant le ou les événements traumatiques ou y étant étroitement associés. 2. Évitement ou tentatives d'évitement de rappels externes (personnes, lieux, conversations, activités, objets, situations) qui éveillent des souvenirs, des pensées ou des sentiments pénibles concernant le ou les événements traumatiques ou y étant étroitement associés. D. Altérations négatives de cognitions et d'humeurs associées à ou aux événements traumatiques, pourvu qu'elles soient apparues ou se soient aggravées après la survenance de ce dernier, comme en témoignent au moins deux des manifestations suivantes : <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Incapacité de se rappeler un aspect important du ou des événements traumatiques (typiquement en raison d'une amnésie dissociative, et non d'autres facteurs comme une blessure à la tête ou la consommation d'alcool ou de drogues). 2. Croyances ou attentes négatives persistantes et exagérées à propos de soi-même, des autres ou du monde (p. ex., « Je suis mauvais », « On ne peut faire confiance à personne », « Le monde est complètement dangereux », « Mon système nerveux entier est définitivement ruiné »). 3. Cognitions persistantes et déformées concernant la cause ou les conséquences du ou des événements traumatiques qui amènent la personne à se blâmer ou à blâmer autrui. 4. État émotionnel négatif persistant (p. ex., peur, horreur, colère, culpabilité ou honte). 5. Diminution marquée de l'intérêt envers des activités significatives ou de la participation à celles-ci. 6. Sentiment de détachement ou d'éloignement des autres. 7. Incapacité persistante de ressentir des émotions positives (p. ex., bonheur, satisfaction ou sentiments affectueux). E. Altérations marquées de l'éveil et de la réactivité associées à ou aux événements traumatiques, pourvu qu'elles soient apparues ou se soient aggravées après la survenance de ce dernier, comme en témoignent au moins deux des manifestations suivantes : <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Comportement irritable et crises de colère (avec peu ou pas de provocation), généralement sous forme d'agression verbale ou physique envers des personnes ou des objets. 2. Comportement imprudent ou autodestructeur. 3. Hypervigilance. 4. Réaction de sursaut exagérée.

• Phobie spécifique	A. Peur marquée d'un objet ou une situation en particulier (p. ex., le fait de voler, les hauteurs, les animaux, les aiguilles, le sang). Remarque : Chez l'enfant, l'anxiété peut s'exprimer par des pleurs, des crises de colère, ou le fait de demeurer figé ou de s'accrocher. B. L'exposition à l'objet ou à la situation phobogène provoque presque toujours une réaction anxieuse immédiate. C. Les situations phobogènes sont évitées ou endurées avec une peur ou une anxiété intense. D. La peur ou l'anxiété est disproportionnée par rapport à la menace réelle posée par la situation sociale et au contexte socioculturel. E. La peur, l'anxiété ou l'évitement sont persistants, généralement pendant six mois ou plus. F. La peur, l'anxiété ou l'évitement causent une souffrance cliniquement significative ou une altération du fonctionnement social, professionnel ou dans d'autres domaines importants. G. La peur, l'anxiété ou l'évitement ne s'explique pas mieux par les symptômes d'un autre trouble mental, par exemple la peur, l'anxiété et l'évitement liés à certaines situations accompagnées de symptômes semblables à la panique ou autrement incapacitants (comme en cas d'agoraphobie); les objets et situations liés à une obsession (comme en cas de trouble obsessionnel compulsif); le rappel d'événements traumatisants (comme en cas d'état de stress post-traumatique); la séparation du foyer ou de figures d'attachement (comme en cas de trouble d'anxiété de séparation) ou les situations sociales (comme en cas de trouble d'anxiété sociale).

• Anxiété généralisée	A. Anxiété et soucis excessifs (attente avec appréhension) survenant plus d'un jour sur deux pendant au moins six mois au sujet d'un certain nombre d'événements ou d'activités (tels le travail ou le rendement scolaire). B. La personne éprouve de la difficulté à contrôler cette préoccupation. C. L'anxiété et les soucis sont associés à au moins trois des six symptômes suivants (dont au moins certains ont été présents la plupart du temps au cours des six derniers mois) : Remarque : Un seul item est requis chez l'enfant. <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Agitation ou sensation d'être survolté ou à bout. 2. Fatigabilité. 3. Difficulté de concentration ou de mémoire. 4. Irritabilité. 5. Tension musculaire. 6. Troubles du sommeil (difficultés à s'endormir ou à rester endormi, ou sommeil agité et non satisfaisant). D. L'anxiété, les soucis ou les symptômes physiques entraînent une souffrance cliniquement significative ou une altération du fonctionnement social, professionnel ou dans d'autres domaines importants. E. La perturbation n'est pas due aux effets physiologiques directs d'une substance (p. ex., une drogue utilisée par les toxicomanes ou un médicament) ou d'une autre condition médicale (p. ex., hyperthyroïdie). F. La perturbation ne s'explique pas mieux par un autre trouble mental (p. ex., l'anxiété ou la préoccupation ne concernent pas seulement les attaques de panique comme en cas de trouble panique; l'évaluation négative comme en cas d'anxiété sociale [phobie sociale]; la contamination ou d'autres obsessions comme en cas de trouble obsessionnel compulsif; la séparation de figures d'attachement comme en cas de trouble d'anxiété de séparation; le rappel d'événements traumatiques comme en cas de stress post-traumatique; la prise de poids comme en cas d'anorexie mentale; les plaintes de problèmes physiques comme en cas de trouble à symptomatologie somatique; les défauts physiques comme en cas de trouble de dysmorphie corporelle; les maladies graves comme en cas de crainte excessive d'avoir une maladie; ou la teneur de croyances délirantes comme en cas de schizophrénie ou de trouble délirant).

Partie 6 : Indemnité pour préjudices déterminés

Cette partie est facultative.

Admissibilité à des fins d'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés

Vous avez droit à une indemnité supplémentaire si vous avez subi l'un des préjudices déterminés indiqués dans la liste ci-dessous. Pour recevoir une somme d'argent à l'égard de ces préjudices, vous devez établir que le préjudice déterminé a été causé par :

1. une utilisation d'eau traitée ou d'eau du robinet conformément à un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme; ou
2. un accès restreint à de l'eau traitée ou à de l'eau du robinet en raison d'un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme.

Liste des préjudices déterminés :

Vous pouvez établir votre réclamation au moyen du présent formulaire de réclamation ou au moyen de documents ou de dossiers supplémentaires concernant le préjudice déterminé ou la cause de celui-ci, comme des dossiers médicaux. Si vous souhaitez faire une déclaration orale au sujet de votre préjudice déterminé et de la cause de celui-ci, veuillez communiquer avec l'administrateur [•].

Vous devez remplir une déclaration supplémentaire devant un témoin à la fin du présent formulaire de réclamation pour être admissible à l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés.

La réclamation d'une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés est facultative. Vous pourriez être admissible à une indemnité simplement pour avoir vécu un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme dans une réserve. Si vous ne réclamez pas d'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés maintenant, vous n'aurez pas d'autre possibilité de le faire.

Les avocats du groupe peuvent vous aider à réclamer une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés. Ce service est sans frais. Veuillez communiquer avec [•].

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

Les préjudices déterminés admissibles à une indemnité sont graves et les symptômes doivent persister pendant au moins un mois. L'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés est versée en plus des dommages-intérêts individuels pour les difficultés de tous les jours en raison d'un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme. Souhaitez-vous réclamer une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés? ANNEXE K PROCÉDURE DE RÈGLEMENT DES DIFFÉRENDS RELATIFS À L'ENGAGEMENT (ET APPENDICES)

Voir ci-joint.

1. Régler les différends ensemble : Procédure de règlement des différends relatifs à l'engagement

1.1. Dispositions générales

- 1.1.1. La présente annexe s'applique aux différends qui surviennent entre le Canada et les Premières Nations insuffisamment desservies portant sur le respect par le Canada de ses engagements aux termes de l'entente et sur les plans proposés pour respecter les engagements (collectivement, les « différends »).
- 1.1.2. Le Canada et le groupe partagent les mêmes objectifs :
- 1.1.2.1. coopérer l'un avec l'autre pour veiller au respect constant de l'engagement;
 - 1.1.2.2. tendre à un consensus et à l'harmonie;
 - 1.1.2.3. convenir de plans pour respecter l'engagement de façon rapide et précise (« plans de réparation »);
 - 1.1.2.4. cibler rapidement les différends et les régler de la façon la plus rapide et la moins coûteuse possible;
 - 1.1.2.5. résoudre les différends de façon non accusatoire, collaborative et informelle;
 - 1.1.2.6. résoudre les différends d'une façon qui reflète et incorpore les traditions et les protocoles juridiques de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie;
 - 1.1.2.7. trouver le processus pour résoudre les différends dans les communautés des Premières Nations insuffisamment desservies et mettre en œuvre ces processus d'une façon qui est accessible à ces communautés et qui les respecte.
- 1.1.3. Sauf indication contraire, le Canada et toute Première Nation insuffisamment desservie peuvent convenir de modifier une exigence procédurale contenue dans la présente annexe, qui s'applique à un différend en particulier.
- 1.1.4. Le Canada et le groupe souhaitent et prévoient que la plupart des différends seront résolus grâce à des discussions informelles sans qu'il soit nécessaire que la présente annexe soit utilisée.
- 1.1.5. Sauf indication contraire dans la présente entente, les différends qui ne sont pas résolus de façon informelle se poursuivront jusqu'à ce qu'ils soient résolus, en suivant les étapes suivantes :
- 1.1.5.1. Étape un : efforts formels et sans aide pour arriver à une entente sur un plan de redressement entre le Canada et la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie, dans des négociations collaboratives en conformité avec l'appendice K-1;

- 1.1.5.2. Étape deux : efforts structurés pour arriver à une entente entre le Canada et la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie dans le cadre d'une médiation, en conformité avec l'appendice K-2;
 - 1.1.5.3. Étape trois : décision définitive dans le cadre de procédures arbitrales en conformité avec l'appendice K-3.
- 1.1.6. Sauf indication contraire dans la présente entente, personne ne peut faire passer un différend à l'étape trois (arbitrage final) sans d'abord passer par les étapes un et deux, comme il est prévu dans la présente annexe.
- 1.1.7. Rien dans la présente annexe n'empêche le Canada ou une Première Nation insuffisamment desservie d'entreprendre des procédures arbitrales urgentes à tout moment :
- 1.1.7.1. pour traiter une perte urgente d'accès régulier à l'eau;
 - 1.1.7.2. obtenir une mesure provisoire ou interlocutoire qui est autrement offerte en attendant la résolution du différend aux termes de la présente annexe, et l'arbitre a le pouvoir d'entendre ces audiences de façon urgente et d'autoriser cette mesure provisoire ou interlocutoire.

1.2. Étape un : négociations collaboratives

- 1.2.1. Si un différend n'est pas résolu par des discussions informelles et qu'une Première Nation insuffisamment desservie souhaite invoquer la présente annexe, cette Première Nation insuffisamment desservie remettra un avis au Canada, demandant le début de négociations collaboratives.
- 1.2.2. À la réception de l'avis, le Canada et la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie participent aux négociations collaboratives.
- 1.2.3. Les négociations collaboratives doivent être menées selon les conditions suivantes :
 - 1.2.3.1. de bonne foi;
 - 1.2.3.2. créer un espace sécuritaire et respectueux pour les membres de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie participante;
 - 1.2.3.3. promouvoir la compréhension mutuelle et la transparence à l'égard des questions soulevées dans le différend, en prenant les mesures suivantes : le Canada fournira des renseignements suffisants et expliquera suffisamment ces questions d'une façon qui est accessible aux membres de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie;
 - 1.2.3.4. permettre et promouvoir l'utilisation des langues indigènes;

- 1.2.3.5. être situées dans la communauté de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie et être accessibles à leurs membres;
- 1.2.3.6. respecter les traditions et les protocoles juridiques de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie, y compris :
 - 1.2.3.6.1. l'attribution des sièges;
 - 1.2.3.6.2. l'ordre de prise de parole;
 - 1.2.3.6.3. les prières, discours et reconnaissances;
 - 1.2.3.6.4. l'échange de cadeaux;
 - 1.2.3.6.5. la sagesse des aînés;
 - 1.2.3.6.6. l'importance des enseignements traditionnels;
 - 1.2.3.6.7. l'expérience de la communauté;
 - 1.2.3.6.8. la compréhension par la communauté des questions dans le différend;
 - 1.2.3.6.9. les protocoles de prise de décision de la communauté.
- 1.2.4. Les négociations collaboratives se terminent dans les circonstances décrites à l'appendice K-1.

1.3. Étape deux : médiation

- 1.3.1. Dans les quinze (15) jours suivant la fin des négociations collaboratives qui n'ont pas réglé le différend, une Première Nation insuffisamment desservie peut demander le début d'un processus simplifié en remettant un avis décrivant le différend et comprenant les plans de redressement du Canada et de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie.
- 1.3.2. Dans les trente (30) jours suivant la livraison d'un avis, le Canada et la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie impliqués dans le différend (les « parties participantes ») auront recours à la médiation pour essayer de régler le différend.
- 1.3.3. Les parties dressent une liste de médiateurs disponibles pour faciliter les négociations qui connaissent ce qui suit :
 - 1.3.3.1. les conditions de vie dans les réserves des Premières Nations;
 - 1.3.3.2. les langues, les coutumes et les traditions juridiques des Premières Nations.

1.3.4. Le médiateur et les parties participantes doivent engager le processus simplifié de la façon suivante :

- 1.3.4.1. créer un espace sécuritaire et respectueux pour les membres de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie participante;
- 1.3.4.2. promouvoir la compréhension mutuelle et la transparence à l'égard des questions soulevées dans le différend, en prenant les mesures suivantes : le Canada fournira des renseignements suffisants et expliquera suffisamment ces questions d'une façon qui est accessible aux membres de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie;
- 1.3.4.3. permettre et promouvoir l'utilisation des langues indigènes dans le cadre de ce processus;
- 1.3.4.4. être situées dans la communauté de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie et être accessibles à leurs membres;
- 1.3.4.5. respecter les traditions et les protocoles juridiques de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie, y compris :
 - 1.3.4.5.1. l'attribution des sièges;
 - 1.3.4.5.2. l'ordre de prise de parole;
 - 1.3.4.5.3. les prières, discours et reconnaissances;
 - 1.3.4.5.4. l'échange de cadeaux;
 - 1.3.4.5.5. la sagesse des aînés;
 - 1.3.4.5.6. l'importance des enseignements traditionnels;
 - 1.3.4.5.7. l'expérience de la communauté;
 - 1.3.4.5.8. la compréhension par la communauté des questions dans le différend;
 - 1.3.4.5.9. les protocoles de prise de décision de la communauté

1.3.5. La Première Nation insuffisamment desservie peut désigner un gardien du savoir ou un aîné à titre de représentant pour fournir au médiateur des renseignements sur les traditions et les protocoles juridiques.

1.3.6. La Première Nation peut élaborer des lignes directrices énonçant ses traditions et protocoles juridiques à utiliser par le médiateur et les parties.

1.3.7. Les parties participantes peuvent demander un rapport du médiateur.

1.3.8. Une médiation se termine dans les circonstances décrites à l'appendice K-2.

1.4. Étape trois : arbitrage

1.4.1. Après la fin des négociations collaboratives à l'étape précédente ou d'un processus simplifié exigé, le différend sera réglé, à la livraison d'un avis d'arbitrage conforme à l'appendice K-3, par arbitrage en conformité avec cet appendice.

1.4.2. Voici ce qui doit accompagner l'avis d'arbitrage :

1.4.2.1. tout plan de redressement préparé par les parties participantes;

1.4.2.2. tout rapport d'évaluation neutre;

1.4.2.3. le rapport du médiateur que les parties ont accepté peut être fourni à l'arbitre.

1.4.3. Les parties dressent une liste des arbitres disponibles pour entendre l'arbitrage des différends.

1.4.4. Les arbitres indiqués sur la liste des arbitres doivent connaître ce qui suit :

1.4.4.1. les conditions de vie dans les réserves des Premières Nations;

1.4.4.2. les langues, les coutumes et les traditions juridiques des Premières Nations.

1.4.5. L'arbitre doit tenir compte des plans de redressement proposés et des efforts raisonnables du Canada à veiller à l'accès régulier comme défini dans l'engagement. Les facteurs pertinents comprennent :

1.4.5.1. les avis de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie, notamment :

1.4.5.1.1. l'importance physique, sociale et culturelle de l'eau;

1.4.5.1.2. les traditions juridiques de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie se rapportant à l'utilisation et à la protection de l'eau et à son accès;

1.4.5.1.3. les effets historiques et permanents du manque d'accès à l'eau de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie;

1.4.5.1.4. les efforts précédents déployés par le Canada pour veiller à l'accès régulier à l'eau;

1.4.5.1.5. les besoins urgents en eau de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie;

1.4.5.2. les exigences fédérales ou les normes et protocoles provinciaux relatifs à l'eau;

1.4.5.3. la surveillance et l'examen du réseau d'aqueduc;

1.4.5.4. l'emplacement physique de la résidence, y compris la proximité à des réseaux d'aqueduc centralisé et la distance.

1.4.6. L'arbitre doit mener les procédures d'arbitrage de la manière suivante :

1.4.6.1. créer un espace sécuritaire et respectueux pour les membres de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie participante;

1.4.6.2. promouvoir la compréhension mutuelle et la transparence à l'égard des questions soulevées dans le différend;

1.4.6.3. permettre et promouvoir l'utilisation des langues indigènes dans le cadre de ce processus;

1.4.6.4. être situées dans la communauté de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie et être accessibles à leurs membres;

1.4.6.5. respecter les traditions et les protocoles juridiques de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie, y compris :

1.4.6.5.1. l'attribution des sièges;

1.4.6.5.2. l'ordre de prise de parole;

1.4.6.5.3. les prières, discours et reconnaissances;

1.4.6.5.4. l'échange de cadeaux;

1.4.6.5.5. l'admissibilité et la pertinence de la preuve, notamment :

1.4.6.5.5.1. la sagesse des aînés;

1.4.6.5.5.2. les enseignements traditionnels;

1.4.6.5.5.3. l'expérience de la communauté;

1.4.6.5.5.4. la compréhension par la communauté des questions dans le différend;

1.4.6.5.5.5. les protocoles de prise de décision de la communauté.

1.4.7. La Première Nation insuffisamment desservie peut recommander un gardien du savoir ou un aîné comme représentant, qui peut, à la discrétion de l'arbitre, siéger avec l'arbitre pour fournir des renseignements sur les traditions et les protocoles juridiques.

1.4.8. La Première Nation peut élaborer des lignes directrices énonçant ses traditions et protocoles juridiques à utiliser par l'arbitre et les parties.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- 1.4.9. Après avoir passé en revue les plans de redressement proposé et entendu les parties participantes, l'arbitre rend une décision arbitrale de la façon suivante :
- 1.4.9.1. ordonner la mise en œuvre du plan de redressement de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie s'il est raisonnable dans toutes les circonstances;
 - 1.4.9.2. ordonner la mise en œuvre du plan de redressement du Canada s'il est raisonnable et que le plan de redressement de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie n'est pas raisonnable; ou
 - 1.4.9.3. remettre aux parties participantes des directives dans le cas où aucun des plans de redressement n'est raisonnable.
- 1.4.10. Une décision arbitrale, comme définie à l'appendice K-3, est définitive et lie toutes les parties participantes, qu'une partie participante ait participé ou non à l'arbitrage.
- 1.4.11. Les parties doivent conserver un registre public des décisions arbitrales à utiliser par le Canada, les Premières Nations insuffisamment desservies et les arbitres.

Procédures de résolution des différends

DISPOSITIONS GÉNÉRALES

(1) Si, dans les circonstances énoncées à l'article 9.07 de l'entente, une Première Nation insuffisamment desservie souhaite invoquer le processus de résolution des différends énoncé dans la présente annexe relativement à un différend applicable (chacun, un « différend »), la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie peut remettre au Canada un avis de négociation, et les parties doivent régler le différend en utilisant la procédure énoncée dans la présente annexe.

(2) Le terme « annexe » désigne la présente Error! Reference source not found. : Règlement des différends.

Appendice K-1 négociations collaboratives

Appendice K-2 médiation

Appendice K-3 arbitrage

APPENDICE K-1 Négociations collaboratives

DISPOSITIONS GÉNÉRALES

(3) Les négociations collaboratives commencent à la date de livraison d'un avis écrit par une Première Nation insuffisamment desservie demandant le début de négociations collaboratives (un « avis de négociation »).

AVIS

- (4) Un avis de négociation comprendra ce qui suit :
- a) le nom des parties participantes;
 - b) un sommaire des détails du différend;
 - c) une description des efforts déployés jusqu'à ce jour pour régler le différend;
 - d) le nom des personnes qui ont déployé ces efforts;
 - e) tout autre renseignement qui aidera les parties participantes.

REPRÉSENTATION

(5) Une partie participante peut participer aux négociations collaboratives avec ou sans conseiller juridique ou autre conseiller.

(6) Au début de la première réunion de négociation, chaque partie participante informera les autres parties participantes de toute limite quant au pouvoir de ses représentants.

PROCESSUS DE NÉGOCIATION

(7) Les parties participantes conviendront de leur première réunion de négociations collaboratives dans les vingt et un (21) jours suivant le début des négociations collaboratives.

(8) Avant la première réunion de négociation prévue, les parties participantes essaieront de convenir de toute question procédurale qui facilitera les négociations collaboratives.

(9) Les parties participantes essaieront réellement de régler le différend en :

- a) déterminant les intérêts sous-jacents;
- b) isolant les points d'entente et de désaccord;
- c) explorant d'autres solutions;
- d) envisageant des compromis;
- e) prenant toute autre mesure qui aidera au règlement du différend.

(10) Aucune transcription ni aucun enregistrement des négociations collaboratives ne sera conservé, mais cela n'empêche pas une personne de prendre des notes des négociations.

CONFIDENTIALITÉ

(11) Pour aider au règlement d'un différend, les négociations collaboratives ne seront pas ouvertes au public, mais le présent paragraphe n'empêche pas un chef des Premières Nations insuffisamment desservies et ses représentants d'y assister.

(12) Les parties et toutes les personnes assureront la confidentialité de ce qui suit :

- a) tous les renseignements oraux et écrits communiqués lors des négociations collaboratives;
- b) le fait que les renseignements ont été communiqués.

(13) Les négociations collaboratives ne porteront pas atteinte aux droits des parties participantes, et aucun renseignement communiqué dans les négociations collaboratives ne peut être utilisé en dehors des négociations collaboratives.

DROIT DE SE RETIRER

(14) Une partie participante peut se retirer des négociations collaboratives à tout moment.

FIN DES NÉGOCIATIONS COLLABORATIVES

(15) Les négociations collaboratives prennent fin à la survenance de l'un des événements suivants :

- a) l'expiration d'un délai de soixante (60) jours;

- b) une partie participante se retire des négociations collaboratives aux termes du paragraphe (14);
- c) les parties participantes conviennent par écrit de mettre fin aux négociations collaboratives, ou
- d) les parties participantes signent une convention écrite pour régler le différend.

FRAIS

(16) Le Canada doit payer les frais raisonnables des négociations collaboratives menées aux termes du présent appendice en conformité avec l'article 9.08 de l'entente.

APPENDICE K-2

Médiation

GÉNÉRALITÉ

(17) Une médiation peut commencer à tout moment après la conclusion des négociations collaboratives, conformément à l'appendice K-1, lorsqu'une Première Nation insuffisamment desservie remet un avis écrit exigeant le début d'une médiation (un « avis de médiation »).

(18) La médiation commence à la date à laquelle les parties participantes directement impliquées dans le différend ont convenu par écrit de commencer la médiation conformément à l'alinéa 1.3.2 de l'annexe.

AVIS

- (19) Un avis de médiation comprendra les éléments suivants :
- a) le nom des parties participantes;
 - b) un sommaire des détails du différend;
 - c) une description des efforts déployés à ce jour pour régler le différend;
 - d) le nom des personnes qui ont déployé ces efforts;
 - e) tout autre renseignement qui aidera les parties participantes.

NOMINATION D'UN MÉDIATEUR

(20) Une médiation sera menée par un médiateur choisi par la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie à partir de la liste de médiateurs établie conformément à l'annexe.

(21) Sous réserve des limites convenues par les parties participantes, un médiateur peut faire appel à des services administratifs ou d'autres services de soutien raisonnables ou nécessaires.

DEMANDE DE RETRAIT

(22) Une partie participante peut donner en tout temps au médiateur et aux autres parties participantes un avis écrit, motivé ou non, demandant au médiateur de se retirer de la médiation au motif que la partie participante a des doutes légitimes quant à l'indépendance ou l'impartialité du médiateur.

(23) À la réception d'un avis écrit conformément au paragraphe (22), le médiateur se retirera immédiatement de la médiation.

FIN DE LA NOMINATION

(24) La nomination d'un médiateur prend fin si :

- a) le médiateur doit se retirer conformément au paragraphe (23);
- b) le médiateur se retire de sa charge pour quelque raison que ce soit;
- c) les parties participantes conviennent de la cessation.

(25) Si la nomination d'un médiateur prend fin, un médiateur de remplacement sera nommé conformément au paragraphe (20).

REPRÉSENTATION

(26) Une partie participante peut assister à une médiation avec ou sans conseiller juridique ou autre conseiller.

(27) Si un médiateur est un avocat, il n'agira pas à titre de conseiller juridique d'une partie participante.

(28) Au début de la première réunion de médiation, chaque partie participante informera le médiateur et les parties participantes des limites quant au pouvoir de ses représentants.

DÉROULEMENT DE LA MÉDIATION

(29) Les parties participantes :

- a) essaieront réellement de régler le conflit en :
 - (i) déterminant les intérêts sous-jacents;
 - (ii) isolant les points d'entente et de désaccord;
 - (iii) explorant d'autres solutions;
 - (iv) envisageant des compromis;
- b) coopéreront pleinement avec le médiateur et prêteront rapidement attention à toutes les communications du médiateur et y répondront.

(30) Le médiateur mène une médiation fondée sur les traditions et les protocoles juridiques autochtones tels qu'ils sont énoncés à l'annexe, et peut prendre toute autre mesure qu'il juge nécessaire et appropriée pour aider les parties participantes à régler le différend de manière équitable, efficace et rentable.

(31) Dans les sept (7) jours suivant la nomination d'un médiateur, chaque partie participante peut remettre un sommaire écrit au médiateur des faits pertinents, des questions en litige et de son point de vue à cet égard, et le médiateur remettra des copies des sommaires à chaque partie participante à l'issue de la période de sept jours.

(32) Le médiateur peut mener une médiation dans le cadre de réunions conjointes ou d'un caucus privé convoqué aux endroits qu'il désigne après avoir consulté les parties participantes.

(33) Les renseignements divulgués par une partie participante à un médiateur lors d'un caucus privé ne seront pas divulgués par le médiateur à une autre partie participante sans le consentement de la partie participante divulgateuse.

(34) Aucune transcription ni aucun enregistrement d'une réunion de médiation ne sera conservé, mais il n'est pas interdit à une personne de prendre des notes des négociations.

CONFIDENTIALITÉ

(35) Pour aider au règlement d'un différend, les médiations ne seront pas ouvertes au public, mais le présent paragraphe n'empêche pas un chef de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie ni ses représentants d'y assister.

(36) Les parties et toutes les personnes assureront la confidentialité de ce qui suit :

- a) tous les renseignements oraux et écrits communiqués lors de la médiation;
- b) le fait que ces renseignements ont été communiqués.

(37) Les parties participantes n'invoqueront ni ne produiront comme preuve dans une procédure, qu'elle porte ou non sur l'objet de la médiation, tout renseignement oral ou écrit divulgué dans le cadre de la médiation ou en découlant, notamment :

- a) tout document d'autres parties participantes produit au cours de la médiation qui n'est pas autrement produit ou qui ne peut être produit dans le cadre de cette procédure;
- b) les points de vue exprimés, les suggestions ou les propositions faites en vue d'un éventuel règlement du différend;
- c) les admissions faites par une partie participante dans le cadre de la médiation, sauf stipulation contraire de la partie participante admettant le différend;
- d) les recommandations de règlement faites par le médiateur;

- e) le fait qu'une partie participante ait manifesté sa volonté de faire ou d'accepter une proposition ou une recommandation de règlement.

(38) Un médiateur, ou toute personne qu'il engage ou emploie, ne peut être contraint, dans le cadre d'une procédure, à témoigner sur des renseignements oraux ou écrits qu'il a acquis ou toute opinion qu'il a formé à la suite de la médiation, et toutes les parties participantes s'opposeront à toute tentative d'assignation de cette personne ou de présentation de ces renseignements.

(39) Un médiateur, ou toute personne qu'il engage ou emploie, est disqualifié comme consultant ou expert dans toute procédure relative au différend, y compris toute procédure impliquant des personnes qui ne sont pas des parties participantes à la médiation.

RENOI DE QUESTIONS À D'AUTRES PROCESSUS

(40) Au cours d'une médiation, les parties participantes peuvent convenir de renvoyer des questions particulières du différend à des enquêteurs indépendants, à des groupes d'experts ou à d'autres processus pour obtenir des avis ou des conclusions qui pourraient les aider à résoudre le différend, et dans ce cas, les parties participantes préciseront :

- a) le mandat du processus;
- b) le délai dans lequel le processus sera terminé,
- c) la façon dont les coûts du processus seront répartis entre les parties participantes.

(41) Le délai précisé pour la conclusion d'une médiation sera prolongé de quinze (15) jours suivant la réception des conclusions ou des avis rendus dans le cadre d'un processus décrit au paragraphe (40).

DROIT DE SE RETIRER

(42) Une partie participante peut se retirer d'une médiation à tout moment en donnant avis de son intention au médiateur.

(43) Avant qu'un retrait soit effectif, la partie participante qui se retire devra :

- a) parler au médiateur;
- b) divulguer les motifs de son retrait;
- c) donner au médiateur l'occasion de discuter des conséquences d'un retrait.

FIN DE LA MÉDIATION

(44) Une médiation prend fin à la survenance de l'un des événements suivants :

- a) sous réserve du paragraphe (41), l'expiration d'un délai de soixante (60) jours suivant la nomination du dernier médiateur désigné pour aider

- les parties à résoudre le différend, ou d'un délai plus long convenu par les parties participantes;
- b) les parties participantes ont convenu par écrit de mettre fin à la médiation ou de ne pas nommer de médiateur de remplacement conformément au paragraphe (25);
 - c) une partie participante se retire de la médiation conformément au paragraphe (42);
 - d) les parties participantes signent une convention écrite pour régler le différend

RECOMMANDATION DU MÉDIATEUR

(45) Si une médiation prend fin sans accord entre les parties participantes, celles-ci peuvent demander conjointement au médiateur de formuler une recommandation non contraignante écrite en vue d'un règlement, mais le médiateur peut refuser la demande sans motif.

(46) Dans les quinze (15) jours suivant la présentation de la recommandation du médiateur conformément au paragraphe (45), les parties participantes rencontreront le médiateur pour tenter de régler le différend.

FRAIS

(47) Sous réserve du paragraphe (40), le Canada doit payer les frais raisonnables des médiations menées aux termes du présent appendice en conformité avec l'article 9.08 de l'entente.

APPENDICE K-3 Arbitrage

DÉFINITIONS

- (48) Dans le présent appendice :
- a) « cour » s'entend de la cour supérieure de la province où se trouve la réserve de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie sous-jacente au différend;
 - b) « demandeur » s'entend de la partie participante qui a remis l'avis d'arbitrage;
 - c) « décision arbitrale » s'entend d'une décision de l'arbitre sur le fond du différend qui lui est soumis, et comprend :
 - (i) une sentence provisoire;
 - (ii) un octroi d'intérêt;
 - d) « convention d'arbitrage » comprend

- (i) l'obligation de renvoyer les différends à l'arbitrage conformément à l'annexe;
 - (ii) un accord des parties participantes pour soumettre un différend à l'arbitrage;
- e) « arbitre » s'entend d'un arbitre unique nommé conformément au présent appendice;
- f) « défendeur » s'entend d'une autre partie participante que le demandeur;

(49) Une mention dans le présent appendice, autre qu'au paragraphe (96) ou (118)a), d'une demande s'applique à une demande reconventionnelle, et une mention dans le présent appendice d'une défense s'applique à une défense reconventionnelle.

(50) Malgré toute disposition contraire dans l'annexe, les parties participantes ne peuvent modifier les paragraphes (63) ou (108) du présent appendice.

COMMUNICATIONS

(51) Sauf en ce qui concerne les détails administratifs, les parties participantes ne communiqueront pas avec l'arbitre :

- a) oralement, sauf en présence de toutes les autres parties participantes;
- b) par écrit, sans envoyer immédiatement une copie de cette communication à toutes les autres parties participantes.

ÉTENDUE DE L'INTERVENTION JUDICIAIRE

(52) Dans les questions régies par le présent appendice :

- a) aucun tribunal n'interviendra sauf dans les cas prévus au présent appendice ou à l'annexe;
- b) aucune procédure arbitrale d'un arbitre, ni aucune ordonnance, décision ou décision arbitrale rendue par un arbitre ne sera portée en appel, remise en question, révisée ou limitée par une procédure prévue par une loi, sauf dans la mesure prévue par le présent appendice.
- c) dans la mesure où la loi le permet, les parties participantes renoncent à tout droit d'appel, de question, de révision ou de limitation de la procédure arbitrale d'un arbitre, ou d'une ordonnance, d'une décision ou d'une décision arbitrale rendue par un arbitre.

DÉBUT DE LA PROCÉDURE ARBITRALE

(53) La procédure arbitrale à l'égard d'un différend commence au moment de la remise de l'avis d'arbitrage par le demandeur aux défendeurs (l'« avis d'arbitrage »).

AVIS D'ARBITRAGE

(54) Un avis d'arbitrage sera envoyé par écrit et contient les renseignements suivants :

- a) un énoncé de l'objet ou des questions du différend;
- b) l'exigence que le différend soit soumis à l'arbitrage;
- c) la réparation demandée;
- d) les qualifications privilégiées des arbitres.

(55) L'avis d'arbitrage peut comprendre le nom des arbitres proposés, y compris les renseignements précisés au paragraphe (58).

ARBITRE

(56) Dans chaque arbitrage, il y aura un arbitre.

NOMINATION DES ARBITRES

(57) Les parties participantes feront des efforts de bonne foi pour s'entendre sur l'arbitre parmi les arbitres figurant sur la liste. Si les parties participantes ne parviennent pas à s'entendre sur l'arbitre dans les quinze (15) jours suivant le début de l'arbitrage, elles demanderont aux tribunaux ou à l'une ou l'autre d'entre elles de nommer un arbitre sur la liste des arbitres.

(58) En nommant un arbitre, les tribunaux tiendront compte de ce qui suit :

- a) toutes les qualifications exigées de l'arbitre, telles qu'elles sont énoncées dans l'avis d'arbitrage ou convenues par écrit par les parties participantes;
- b) toute autre considération susceptible d'assurer la nomination d'un arbitre indépendant et impartial.

CESSATION DU MANDAT ET REMPLACEMENT DE L'ARBITRE

(59) Le mandat d'un arbitre prend fin :

- a) si l'arbitre se retire de sa charge pour quelque raison que ce soit;
- b) par accord des parties participantes ou conformément à un tel accord.

(60) Si le mandat d'un arbitre prend fin, un arbitre de remplacement sera nommé conformément au paragraphe (57).

MESURES PROVISOIRES ORDONNÉES PAR LE TRIBUNAL D'ARBITRAGE

(61) Sauf si les parties participantes en conviennent autrement, l'arbitre peut, à la demande d'une partie participante, ordonner à cette dernière de prendre toute mesure provisoire de protection qu'il juge nécessaire à l'égard de l'objet du différend.

ÉGALITÉ DE TRAITEMENT DES PARTIES

(62) Les parties participantes seront traitées sur un pied d'égalité et chaque partie participante aura pleinement l'occasion de présenter ses arguments.

DÉTERMINATION DES RÈGLES DE PROCÉDURE

(63) Sous réserve de l'annexe et du présent appendice, les parties participantes peuvent convenir de la procédure à suivre par l'arbitre dans le déroulement de la procédure.

(64) À défaut d'une entente conformément au paragraphe (63), l'arbitre, sous réserve de l'annexe et du présent appendice, peut mener l'arbitrage de la manière qu'il juge appropriée compte tenu des traditions et des protocoles juridiques autochtones de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie.

(65) L'arbitre n'est pas tenu d'appliquer les règles juridiques de la preuve et peut déterminer l'admissibilité, la pertinence, le caractère substantiel et le poids de toute preuve. Conformément à l'annexe, l'arbitre tiendra dûment compte des traditions et des protocoles juridiques autochtones de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie pour déterminer la présentation et l'admission de la preuve.

(67) L'arbitre peut prolonger ou abréger une période :

- a) figurant dans le présent appendice, sauf la période précisée au paragraphe (109);
- b) établie par l'arbitre.

RÉUNION PRÉALABLE À L'AUDIENCE

(68) Dans les dix (10) jours suivant la nomination de l'arbitre, celui-ci convoquera une réunion préalable à l'audience des parties participantes afin de parvenir à un accord et de rendre les ordonnances nécessaires sur les questions suivantes :

- a) toute question de procédure découlant du présent appendice;
- b) la procédure et les protocoles communautaires à suivre dans le cadre de l'arbitrage;
- c) tout aîné ou gardien du savoir qui siègera avec l'arbitre et le conseillera sur le protocole communautaire et le droit autochtone;
- d) les délais de prise de mesures en arbitrage;
- e) le calendrier des audiences ou des réunions, le cas échéant;
- f) les demandes préliminaires ou les objections.

- g) toute autre question qui aidera l'arbitrage à procéder de façon efficace et expéditive.

(69) L'arbitre préparera et distribuera rapidement aux parties participantes un registre écrit de toutes les affaires traitées, ainsi que des décisions et des ordonnances prises, à la réunion préparatoire à l'audience.

(70) La réunion préalable à l'audience peut se dérouler par téléconférence ou vidéoconférence.

LIEU DE L'ARBITRAGE

(71) Dans la mesure du possible, l'arbitrage doit avoir lieu dans la réserve de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie ou à proximité de celle-ci.

(72) Un arbitre peut

- a) avec le consentement des parties participantes, se réunir à tout autre endroit qu'il estime indiqué pour entendre des témoins, des experts ou les parties participantes;
- b) se rendre à n'importe quel endroit pour examiner des documents, des effets ou d'autres biens personnels, ou pour voir des endroits physiques.

LANGUE

(73) Dans la mesure du possible, l'arbitrage favorisera l'utilisation de la langue autochtone de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie.

(74) Le Canada assume les frais de traduction des présentations orales et des procédures, ainsi que des documents que l'arbitre peut ordonner dans les circonstances d'un différend particulier.

DÉCLARATIONS ET DÉFENSE

(75) Dans les vingt et un (21) jours suivant la nomination de l'arbitre, la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie, à titre de demandeur, remettra son plan de redressement et une déclaration écrite au Canada, le défendeur, énonçant les faits à l'appui de sa revendication ou de sa position, les points en litige et le redressement ou la réparation demandés.

(76) Dans les quinze (15) jours suivant la réception de la déclaration du demandeur, le défendeur remettra à toutes les parties participantes une déclaration écrite énonçant sa défense ou sa position à l'égard de ces détails.

(77) Chaque partie participante joindra à sa déclaration une liste de documents :

- a) sur lesquels la partie participante a l'intention de s'appuyer;
- b) qui décrit chaque document par nature, date, auteur, destinataire et sujet.

(78) Les parties participantes peuvent modifier ou compléter leurs déclarations, y compris la liste des documents, à moins que l'arbitre ne juge inapproprié de permettre la modification, le complément ou les actes de procédure supplémentaires en ce qui concerne :

- a) le retard à le faire;
- b) tout préjudice subi par les autres parties participantes.

(79) Les parties participantes remettront des copies de tous les documents modifiés, complétés ou nouveaux livrés conformément au paragraphe (78) à toutes les parties participantes.

DIVULGATION

(80) L'arbitre peut ordonner à une partie participante de produire, dans un délai précis, tout document :

- a) qui n'a pas été inscrit conformément au paragraphe (77);
- b) dont la partie participante en a la garde ou le contrôle;
- c) que l'arbitre juge pertinent.

(81) Chaque partie participante donnera aux autres parties participantes l'accès nécessaire à des moments raisonnables pour inspecter et prendre des copies de tous les documents que la partie participante a énumérés conformément au paragraphe (77), ou que l'arbitre a ordonné de produire conformément au paragraphe (80).

(82) Les parties participantes prépareront et enverront à l'arbitre un exposé conjoint des faits dans le délai précisé par l'arbitre, à défaut de quoi les parties établiront leurs divergences et demanderont à l'arbitre de trancher les faits.

(83) Au plus tard vingt et un (21) jours avant le début d'une audience, chaque partie participante remettra à l'autre partie participante :

- a) le nom et l'adresse de tout témoin et un résumé ou une déclaration écrite de son témoignage;
- b) dans le cas d'un témoin expert, une déclaration écrite ou un rapport préparé par le témoin expert.

(84) Au plus tard quinze (15) jours avant le début d'une audience, chaque partie participante remettra à l'autre partie participante et à l'arbitre un ensemble de tous les documents à présenter à l'audience.

AUDIENCES ET PROCÉDURE ÉCRITES

(85) À moins que les parties participantes n'aient convenu qu'aucune audience ne sera tenue, l'arbitre convoquera une audience si une partie participante le demande.

(86) L'arbitre donnera aux parties participantes un préavis suffisant de toute audience et de toute réunion de l'arbitre aux fins de l'inspection de documents, de marchandises ou d'autres biens ou de l'examen de tout emplacement physique.

(87) Tous les énoncés, documents ou autres renseignements fournis à l'arbitre ou les demandes présentées à l'arbitre par une partie participante seront communiqués aux autres parties participantes, et les rapports d'expert, les documents de preuve ou la jurisprudence sur lesquels l'arbitre peut s'appuyer pour rendre sa décision seront communiqués aux parties participantes.

(88) À moins que l'arbitre n'en décide autrement, toutes les audiences et réunions des procédures d'arbitrage autres que les réunions de l'arbitre sont ouvertes au public.

(89) L'arbitre organisera des audiences qui se tiendront des jours consécutifs jusqu'à ce qu'elles soient terminées.

(90) Tous les témoignages seront recueillis en présence de l'arbitre et de toutes les parties participantes, à moins qu'une partie participante ne soit absente par défaut ou ait renoncé au droit d'être présente.

(91) L'arbitre peut ordonner à toute personne d'être interrogée par l'arbitre sous serment ou sur affirmation solennelle relativement au différend et de produire devant l'arbitre tous les documents pertinents dont la personne a la garde ou le contrôle.

(92) Les ensembles de documents remis conformément au paragraphe (84) seront réputés avoir été introduits en preuve à l'audience sans autre preuve et sans être lus à l'audience, mais une partie participante peut contester l'admissibilité de tout document ainsi produit.

(93) Si l'arbitre estime qu'il est juste et raisonnable de le faire, il peut permettre qu'un document qui n'a pas été précédemment énuméré conformément au paragraphe (77), ou produit conformément au paragraphe (80) ou (84), soit produit à l'audience.

(94) Si l'arbitre permet que le témoignage d'un témoin soit présenté sous forme de déclaration écrite, l'autre partie participante peut exiger que ce témoin soit disponible pour le contre-interrogatoire à l'audience.

(95) L'arbitre peut ordonner à un témoin de comparaître et de témoigner et, dans ce cas, les parties participantes peuvent contre-interroger ce témoin et présenter une contre-preuve.

DÉFAUT D'UNE PARTIE

(96) Si, sans explication, le demandeur omet de communiquer sa déclaration conformément au paragraphe (75), l'arbitre peut mettre fin à la procédure. Si, sans explication, un défendeur omet de communiquer sa défense conformément au paragraphe (76), l'arbitre poursuivra la procédure sans traiter ce manquement en lui-même comme une admission des allégations du demandeur.

(97) Si, sans justification suffisante, une partie participante ne se présente pas à l'audience ou ne produit pas de preuve documentaire, l'arbitre peut poursuivre les procédures et rendre la décision arbitrale en fonction de la preuve dont il dispose.

(98) Avant de mettre fin à la procédure visée au paragraphe (96), l'arbitre donnera à toutes les parties un avis écrit leur donnant l'occasion de fournir une explication et de déposer une déclaration relativement au différend dans un délai précis.

(99) Il est entendu que la cessation aux termes du paragraphe (96) ne porte pas atteinte à la capacité du demandeur d'entamer une nouvelle procédure d'arbitrage, sans retourner d'abord aux processus des étapes 1 et 2.

EXPERT NOMMÉ PAR LE TRIBUNAL D'ARBITRAGE

(100) Après avoir consulté les parties participantes, l'arbitre peut :

- a) nommer un ou plusieurs experts pour lui faire rapport sur des questions précises à déterminer par l'arbitre;
- b) à cette fin, exiger d'une partie participante qu'elle fournisse à l'expert tout renseignement pertinent ou qu'elle produise les documents, effets ou autres biens personnels ou bien-fonds pertinents ou y donne accès aux fins d'inspection ou de consultation.

(101) L'arbitre remettra une copie du rapport de l'expert aux parties participantes qui auront l'occasion d'y répondre.

(102) Si une partie participante le demande, ou si l'arbitre le juge nécessaire, l'expert participera, après avoir remis un rapport écrit ou oral, à une audience au cours de laquelle les parties participantes auront la possibilité de contre-interroger l'expert et de présenter une contre-preuve.

(103) À la demande d'une partie participante, l'expert devra :

- a) mettre à la disposition de cette partie participante, aux fins d'examen, tous les documents, effets ou autres biens en sa possession et les remettre à l'expert pour qu'il prépare un rapport;
- b) fournir à cette partie participante une liste de tous les documents, effets ou autres biens personnels ou bien-fonds que l'expert n'a pas en sa possession, mais qui lui ont été fournis ou auxquels il a eu accès, ainsi qu'une description de l'emplacement de ces documents, effets, biens personnels ou bien-fonds.

LOIS APPLICABLES AU FOND DU DIFFÉREND

(104) Un arbitre tranchera le différend conformément au droit, y compris le droit autochtone, et à l'annexe.

(105) Si les parties participantes le lui ont expressément autorisé, un arbitre peut trancher le différend en se fondant sur des considérations d'équité.

(106) Dans tous les cas, un arbitre prendra ses décisions conformément à l'esprit et à l'intention de l'entente.

RÈGLEMENT

(107) Si, au cours d'une procédure d'arbitrage, les parties participantes règlent le différend, l'arbitre mettra fin à la procédure et, à la demande de ces parties participantes, consignera le règlement sous forme de décision arbitrale selon les modalités convenues.

(108) Une décision arbitrale selon les modalités convenues :

- a) sera rendue conformément aux paragraphes (110) à (112);
- b) indiquera qu'il s'agit d'une décision arbitrale;
- c) a le même statut et le même effet que toute autre décision arbitrale sur le fond du différend.

FORME ET CONTENU DE LA DÉCISION ARBITRALE

(109) L'arbitre rendra sa décision arbitrale définitive le plus tôt possible et, en tout état de cause, au plus tard soixante (60) jours après que

- a) les audiences sont terminées;
- b) les arguments finaux ont été présentés, la date la plus tardive étant retenue.

(110) Une décision arbitrale sera rendue par écrit et signée par l'arbitre.

(111) Une décision arbitrale énoncera les motifs sur lesquels elle est fondée, à moins que :

- a) les parties participantes aient convenu qu'aucun motif ne doit être donné;
- b) la décision est une décision arbitrale selon les modalités convenues prévues aux paragraphes (107) et (108).

(112) L'arbitre remettra une copie signée de la décision arbitrale à toutes les parties participantes et au comité mixte.

(113) À tout moment au cours de la procédure d'arbitrage, un arbitre peut rendre une décision arbitrale provisoire sur toute question à l'égard de laquelle il peut rendre une décision arbitrale définitive.

(114) Un arbitre peut accorder des intérêts.

(115) À moins qu'un arbitre n'en décide autrement, le Canada doit payer les frais d'un arbitrage aux termes du présent appendice, conformément à l'article 9.08 de la convention.

FIN DE LA PROCEDURE

(116) L'arbitre mettra fin aux audiences si :

- a) les parties participantes indiquent qu'elles n'ont pas d'autres éléments de preuve ou observations à présenter;
- b) l'arbitre estime qu'il est inutile ou inapproprié de tenir d'autres audiences.

(117) Une décision arbitrale définitive ou une ordonnance de l'arbitre conformément au paragraphe (118) met fin à la procédure d'arbitrage.

(118) Un arbitre émettra une ordonnance de résiliation de la procédure arbitrale si :

- a) le demandeur retire sa demande, à moins que le défendeur ne s'oppose à l'ordonnance et que l'arbitre ne reconnaisse un intérêt légitime à obtenir un règlement final du différend;
- b) les parties participantes conviennent de mettre fin à la procédure;
- c) l'arbitre conclut que la poursuite de la procédure est devenue inutile ou impossible pour toute autre raison.

(119) Sous réserve des paragraphes (120) à (125), le mandat d'un arbitre prend fin avec la fin de la procédure arbitrale.

CORRECTION ET INTERPRÉTATION DE LA DÉCISION; DÉCISION SUPPLÉMENTAIRE

(120) Dans les trente (30) jours suivant la réception d'une décision arbitrale :

- a) une partie participante peut demander à l'arbitre de corriger dans la décision arbitrale toute erreur de calcul, erreur d'écriture ou erreur typographique ou toute autre erreur de nature similaire;
- b) une partie participante peut, si toutes les parties participantes y consentent, demander à l'arbitre de donner une interprétation d'un point précis ou d'une partie de la décision arbitrale.

(121) Si un arbitre estime qu'une demande faite conformément au paragraphe (120) est justifiée, il apportera la correction ou donnera l'interprétation dans les trente (30) jours suivant la réception de la demande et l'interprétation fera partie de la décision arbitrale.

(122) L'arbitre peut, de sa propre initiative, corriger toute erreur du type mentionné à l'alinéa (120)a) dans les trente (30) jours suivant la date de la décision arbitrale.

(123) Une partie participante peut demander, dans les trente (30) jours suivant la réception d'une décision arbitrale, que l'arbitre rende une autre décision arbitrale concernant les demandes présentées dans le cadre de la procédure arbitrale, mais omises de la décision arbitrale.

(124) Si l'arbitre estime qu'une demande présentée conformément au paragraphe (123) est justifiée, il rendra une décision arbitrale supplémentaire dans les trente (30) jours.

(125) Les paragraphes (110) à (112), et les paragraphes (114) à (115), s'appliquent à la correction ou à l'interprétation d'une décision arbitrale rendue conformément au paragraphe (121) ou (122) à une décision arbitrale supplémentaire rendue conformément au paragraphe (124).

AUCUN APPEL

(126) La décision arbitrale est définitive et exécutoire pour les parties participantes et ne peut faire l'objet d'un appel ou d'une révision.

RECONNAISSANCE ET APPLICATION

(127) Une décision arbitrale sera reconnue comme étant exécutoire et, sur demande présentée à la Cour, sera reconnue et appliquée.

(128) Sauf ordonnance contraire de la cour, la partie participante qui invoque une décision arbitrale ou qui en demande l'exécution fournira la décision arbitrale originale dûment authentifiée ou une copie certifiée conforme de celle-ci.

ANNEXE L

PLAN DE NOTIFICATION

I. APERÇU

Objectif

Fournir des renseignements clairs, concis et dans un langage simple au plus grand nombre possible de membres du groupe et des membres de leur famille concernant :

- a) l'entente de règlement et leurs droits de recevoir une indemnité en vertu de celle-ci; et
- b) la procédure de règlement des réclamations et l'échéancier qui s'y rapporte.

Membres du groupe

Le groupe se compose des membres suivants :

- les personnes membres du groupe, soit environ 142 300 personnes qui sont membres du groupe et qui ne se sont pas exclues des actions;
- les Premières Nations membres du groupe, soit les Premières Nations qui sont membres du groupe et qui donnent à l'administrateur un avis d'acceptation. Il y a jusqu'à 258 Premières Nations touchées qui pourraient remettre des avis d'acceptation et être considérées comme des Premières Nations membres du groupe.

Facteurs connus

Les facteurs connus pris en considération dans l'élaboration du présent plan de notification sont les suivants :

1. Les réserves visées par les avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme pendant la période visée comprennent les réserves dans les régions éloignées, posant d'autres défis en matière de communication (par exemple, retards ou restrictions dans la livraison de la documentation relative aux avis par la poste).
2. Les niveaux de scolarité des membres du groupe varient considérablement, allant des membres qui n'ont pas terminé leurs études secondaires aux membres qui ont suivi des études universitaires de cycle supérieur.
3. Les membres du groupe parlent diverses langues, dont l'anglais, le français et un certain nombre de langues autochtones.
4. Les Premières Nations touchées sont géographiquement dispersées dans toutes les provinces du Canada, en particulier en Ontario, en Colombie-Britannique et au Manitoba.

5. Les données du recensement de 2016 indiquent qu'environ deux tiers des membres des Premières Nations ne résident pas dans des réserves¹. Il est possible que les membres du groupe ayant résidé dans des réserves touchées pendant la période visée ne résident plus dans la réserve à laquelle leur réclamation est associée ou dans la même province ou le même territoire. Il est possible que certains membres résident à l'extérieur du Canada.

Stratégies

1. CA2 donnera l'« avis de règlement » au moyen du même plan de notification qu'il a utilisé pour donner l'avis d'autorisation, comme il est plus amplement précisé ci-dessous. L'avis de règlement sera essentiellement selon le modèle reproduit en ANNEXE M, avec les modifications raisonnables que peut suggérer CA2, et approuvée par les tribunaux. CA2 diffusera l'avis de règlement d'une manière essentiellement semblable à celle qu'elle a utilisée pour la diffusion de l'avis d'autorisation des actions.
2. L'administrateur donnera l'« avis d'approbation du règlement » essentiellement selon le modèle reproduit en ANNEXE N, avec les modifications raisonnables qu'il peut suggérer, et approuvée par les tribunaux. L'avis d'approbation du règlement avisera les personnes membres du groupe de la date limite pour les réclamations et les Premières Nations membres du groupe de la nécessité d'accepter l'entente de règlement. L'avis d'approbation du règlement sera diffusé selon les méthodes suivantes, comme il est plus amplement précisé ci-dessous :
 - a) Publipostage direct des avis aux Premières Nations membres du groupe;
 - b) Diffusion d'un communiqué de presse national;
 - c) Tenue de réunions communautaires en personne et virtuelles pour les Premières Nations membres du groupe intéressées;
 - d) Création d'un site Web d'information sur lequel il sera possible de consulter l'entente de règlement, le formulaire de réclamation, la FAQ et d'autres sources de renseignements et de télécharger des copies de ces documents, et l'hyperlien de ce site Web devra être indiqué dans la documentation et les messages publicitaires se rapportant aux avis;
 - e) Mise en place d'une ligne d'assistance nationale sans frais à l'intention des membres du groupe, des membres de leurs familles, de leurs tuteurs ou d'autres personnes qui font des demandes de renseignements pour leur propre compte ou pour le compte de membres du groupe pour obtenir des renseignements supplémentaires et de l'assistance à l'égard des réclamations, et le numéro de cette ligne d'assistance devra être indiqué dans la documentation et les messages publicitaires se rapportant aux avis;

- f) Publication dans les journaux et les publications des Premières Nations partout au pays;
 - g) Placement de messages publicitaires télévisuels de 30 et de 60 secondes sur APTN;
 - h) Placement de messages publicitaires radiophoniques de 30 et de 60 secondes sur les principales stations de radio des Premières Nations dans toutes les régions concernées;
 - i) Placement de messages publicitaires sur les médias sociaux et en ligne pour diffusion sur les plateformes populaires, dont Facebook, Twitter et YouTube;
 - j) Traduction des avis en français, et déploiement d'efforts raisonnables pour traduire les avis dans les langues autochtones, à la demande des membres du groupe; et
 - k) Mise en place d'une ligne d'assistance sans frais pour aider les membres à soumettre leurs réclamations.
3. L'administrateur donnera un « avis de rappel » huit mois après la première publication de l'avis d'approbation du règlement, au moyen du même plan de notification. L'avis de rappel sera en la forme convenue raisonnablement par les parties, sur recommandation de l'administrateur, et approuvée par les tribunaux.
 4. L'administrateur donnera un « avis de réclamation tardive » si les réclamations tardives sont autorisées. La diffusion de l'avis de réclamation tardive, le cas échéant, se fera selon le même plan de notification que celui de l'avis d'approbation du règlement et de l'avis de rappel, avec les modifications que l'administrateur juge nécessaires et que les tribunaux approuvent pour cibler les Premières Nations dont la participation est en deçà des attentes.
 5. Le Canada assumera les frais de notification des avis conformément au présent plan de notification.

II. PLAN DE NOTIFICATION DU RÈGLEMENT

Sites Web

Les avocats du groupe, le défendeur et CA2 publieront sur leur site Web respectif l'avis simplifié prévu à l'ANNEXE M et l'avis détaillé prévu à l'ANNEXE M, ainsi que la traduction en français de ces documents, comme convenu par les parties;

Message publicitaire dans les médias imprimés

CA2 publiera l'avis simplifié prévu à l'ANNEXE M dans les publications suivantes, en format de 1/4 de page, dans l'édition du week-end de chaque journal : Globe and Mail; National Post; Winnipeg Free Press; Vancouver Sun; Edmonton Sun; Calgary Herald; Saskatoon Star; Phoenix; Regina Leader Post; Thunder Bay Chronicle-Journal; Toronto Star; Ottawa Citizen; Montreal Gazette; La Presse – Montréal (édition numérique); Halifax Chronicle-Herald; Moncton Times and Transcript; First Nations Drum.

Publipostage direct des avis

CA2 transmet l'avis simplifié prévu à l'ANNEXE M et l'avis détaillé prévu à l'ANNEXE M à l'Assemblée des Premières Nations et aux chefs de chaque Première Nation touchée dont l'identité est visée par, sauf pour les personnes exclues;

CA2 transmet l'avis simplifié prévu à l'ANNEXE M et l'avis détaillé prévu à l'ANNEXE M au bureau du conseil de bande ou au bureau analogue à celui-ci de chaque Première Nation touchée, sauf pour les personnes exclues, avec une demande d'affichage dans un endroit bien visible.

Ligne d'assistance sans frais

CA2 établira une ligne d'assistance nationale sans frais pour offrir de l'aide aux membres du groupe, aux membres de leur famille, à leurs tuteurs ou à d'autres personnes qui font des demandes de renseignements pour leur propre compte ou pour le compte de membres du groupe.

III. PLAN DE NOTIFICATION DE L'APPROBATION DU RÈGLEMENTPublipostage direct des avis

Les avis doivent être imprimés et envoyés par la poste ordinaire, à chacun des endroits ou des personnes qui sont indiqués ci-dessous :

- bureau du conseil de bande ou bureau analogue à celui-ci de toutes les Premières Nations touchées, et joindre à l'avis une demande d'affichage des avis dans des endroits bien visibles ainsi qu'un nombre suffisant de copies de la documentation relative aux avis aux fins de distribution aux résidents de la collectivité;
- chef de chaque Première Nation touchée;
- Centres d'amitié associés aux Premières Nations touchées;
- conseil tribal ou conseil analogue de chaque Première Nation touchée;
- bureaux principaux et bureaux régionaux de l'Assemblée des Premières Nations;
- dans la mesure où leurs adresses sont connues, toutes les personnes membres du groupe qui sont identifiées à l'administrateur par une Première Nation dans une confirmation du conseil de bande ou autrement; et
- quiconque fait la demande d'une copie des avis d'approbation du règlement.

Lorsque les avis sont envoyés par la poste à un centre communautaire, veuillez joindre une demande d'affichage des avis dans un endroit bien visible.

Sites Web

- L'administrateur crée un site Web d'information donnant accès à des exemplaires de l'entente de règlement, du formulaire de réclamation, des questions fréquentes et d'autres ressources d'information. L'hyperlien de ce site Web devra être indiqué dans la documentation et les messages publicitaires se rapportant aux avis.
- La documentation relative aux avis devra être publiée sur les sites Web des avocats du groupe, du Canada et de l'administrateur.

Messages publicitaires sur les médias sociaux

- Les messages publicitaires en ligne ciblés, dont de courtes vidéos, devront être diffusés sur les plateformes de médias sociaux populaires, dont Facebook, Instagram, Twitter, Google Ads, TikTok, YouTube.
- Les trages devront être ciblés géographiquement selon les membres du groupe et les personnes qui recherchent des renseignements sur les recours collectifs portant sur la qualité de l'eau potable.

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- Au moins 3,5 millions tirages seront attribués selon la recommandation de l'administrateur.

Réunions communautaires

- L'administrateur devra tenir des réunions communautaires en personne et des réunions en ligne, de façon indépendante, en collaboration avec les Premières Nations membres du groupe.
- L'administrateur devra rencontrer une Première Nation membre du groupe qui en fait la demande.
- Les réunions viseront à fournir des renseignements sur l'entente de règlement et la procédure de règlement des réclamations et du temps sera accordé aux participants pour la FAQ.
- Des copies papier de la documentation relative aux avis et des formulaires de réclamations devront être mises à la disposition des participants aux réunions communautaires tenues en personne.

Communiqué de presse

- L'administrateur publiera un communiqué de presse national de Canadian Newswire (CNW) en vue d'inciter des organes de presse partout au Canada à annoncer l'approbation du règlement, si c'est le cas, et d'attirer une couverture médiatique non rémunérée.
- Le communiqué de presse comprendra le numéro sans frais et l'hyperlien du site Web.

Ligne d'assistance sans frais

L'administrateur devra établir une ligne d'assistance nationale sans frais visant à aider les membres du groupe, les membres de leur famille, leurs représentants et toute autre personne formulant des demandes de renseignements au sujet de l'entente ou requérant de l'aide pour soumettre leurs réclamations.

AVIS D'AUDITION DE L'APPROBATION DU RÈGLEMENT (FORMULAIRES DÉTAILLÉ ET SIMPLIFIÉ)

Voir ci-joint.

Avis de règlement simplifié

Visé par des avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable dans une réserve?

Vous pourriez être concerné par un règlement proposé. Veuillez lire attentivement le présent avis.

Pour lire cet avis en anglais : [URL du site Web de l'entente]

La Cour du Banc de la Reine du Manitoba et la Cour fédérale du Canada ont approuvé le présent avis. Il ne s'agit pas d'une sollicitation d'un avocat.

Les Premières Nations et leurs membres visés par des avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable depuis le 20 novembre 1995 poursuivent en justice le Canada pour obtenir une indemnisation dans le cadre de deux recours collectifs. Le représentant des Premières Nations et de leurs membres et le Canada sont arrivés à un règlement proposé.

Sous réserve de son approbation par les tribunaux, le règlement proposé indemniserait les Premières Nations et leurs membres admissibles. Les personnes admissibles peuvent recevoir un paiement pour les années où elles résidaient habituellement sur des terres des Premières Nations alors visées par des avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme. Il est prévu que le montant annuel variera entre environ 1 300 $ à 2 000 $ pour les années admissibles. Des montants supplémentaires peuvent être offerts aux personnes admissibles qui ont subi certains préjudices déterminés en raison de la consommation d'eau traitée ou d'eau du robinet conformément à un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme, ou en raison d'un accès restreint à de l'eau traitée ou de l'eau du robinet conformément à un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme.

Chaque Première Nation admissible qui accepte le règlement recevra 500 000 $ plus la moitié du montant payé aux personnes admissibles qui résidaient habituellement dans la réserve de cette Première Nation alors visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme. De plus, le Canada s'engagera à déployer des efforts raisonnables pour veiller à ce que les personnes admissibles aient accès à une source fiable d'eau potable dans leurs foyers, et il consacrerait au moins 6 milliards de dollars à l'infrastructure de l'eau et des eaux usées dans les réserves.

Si les tribunaux approuvent le règlement proposé, les personnes et les Premières Nations renonceront à leur droit de poursuivre le Canada pour manquement à son obligation de fournir de l'eau potable salubre dans leurs réserves. Sous réserve de l'approbation des tribunaux, les avocats seront payés par le Canada sur des fonds négociés séparément et non sur l'argent de l'indemnisation offerte.

Les tribunaux doivent d'abord approuver le règlement proposé avant que des fonds ou tout autre avantage ne soient offerts.

Si vous avez droit à une indemnité, vos droits légaux seront touchés même si vous ne faites rien.

Vous avez trois options :

1. Vous y opposer par écrit : vous pouvez écrire aux tribunaux si vous n'aimez pas le règlement proposé ou les honoraires des avocats et ne voulez pas qu'il soit approuvé. Si le règlement n'est pas approuvé, personne n'en bénéficiera.
2. Vous y opposer en personne : vous pouvez demander à comparaître devant les tribunaux pour expliquer pourquoi vous n'aimez pas le règlement proposé ou les honoraires des avocats le 7 décembre 2021, en personne à la Cour fédérale, à Ottawa, ou par vidéoconférence. Vous pouvez contacter la Cour fédérale pour obtenir les détails sur la vidéoconférence. Si le règlement n'est pas approuvé, personne n'en bénéficiera.
3. Ne rien faire : vous renoncer à tout droit que vous avez de contester le règlement proposé.

Si vous souhaitez vous opposer au règlement proposé ou comparaître à l'audition, vous devez agir au plus tard le 23 novembre 2021.

Si vous êtes un résident des Premières Nations suivantes : Nation des Oneidas de la Thames; Bande de Deer Lake; Première Nation de Mitaanjigaming; North Caribou Lake; et Nation crie de Ministikwan Lake, vous pourriez vous exclure de ces recours collectifs en écrivant à l'administrateur du règlement au plus tard le [•date 45 jours après la première publication de l'avis].

Pour en apprendre davantage sur vos options et pour déterminer si vous ou votre Première Nation êtes inclus, veuillez visiter le [•URL du site Web de l'entente] ou composer le [•numéro de téléphone de l'administrateur].

Renseignements supplémentaires pour les Premières Nations :

Les Premières Nations admissibles ne recevront une indemnité que si elles acceptent le règlement proposé au plus tard le [•date]. Les Premières Nations qui n'acceptent pas le règlement proposé au plus tard le [•date] ne sont admissibles à aucun des avantages prévus par l'entente de règlement.

Pour obtenir de plus amples renseignements sur la façon dont une Première Nation peut accepter l'entente de règlement, veuillez visiter le [•URL du site Web de l'entente] ou composer le [•numéro de téléphone de l'administrateur].

Chaque Première Nation admissible qui accepte le règlement recevra 500 000 $ plus la moitié du montant payé aux personnes admissibles qui résidaient habituellement dans la réserve de cette Première Nation alors visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme. De plus, le Canada s'engagera à déployer des efforts raisonnables pour veiller à ce que les personnes admissibles aient un accès à une source fiable d'eau potable dans leurs foyers, et il consacrera au moins 6 milliards de dollars à l'infrastructure de l'eau et des eaux usées dans les réserves.

Si les tribunaux approuvent le règlement proposé, les personnes et les Premières Nations renonceront à leur droit de poursuivre le Canada pour manquement à son obligation de fournir de l'eau potable salubre dans leurs réserves. Sous réserve de l'approbation des tribunaux, les avocats seront payés par le Canada sur des fonds négociés séparément et non sur l'argent de l'indemnisation offerte.

Les tribunaux doivent d'abord approuver le règlement proposé avant que des fonds ou tout autre avantage ne soient offerts.

Si vous avez droit à une indemnité, vos droits légaux seront touchés même si vous ne faites rien.

Vous avez trois options :

1. Vous y opposer par écrit : vous pouvez écrire aux tribunaux si vous n'aimez pas le règlement proposé ou les honoraires des avocats et ne voulez pas qu'il soit approuvé. Si le règlement n'est pas approuvé, personne n'en bénéficiera.
2. Vous y opposer en personne : vous pouvez demander à comparaître devant les tribunaux pour expliquer pourquoi vous n'aimez pas le règlement proposé ou les honoraires des avocats le 7 décembre 2021, en personne à la Cour fédérale, à Ottawa, ou par vidéoconférence. Vous pouvez contacter la Cour fédérale pour obtenir les détails sur la vidéoconférence. Si le règlement n'est pas approuvé, personne n'en bénéficiera.
3. Ne rien faire : vous renoncer à tout droit que vous avez de contester le règlement proposé.

Si vous souhaitez vous opposer au règlement proposé ou comparaître à l'audition, vous devez agir au plus tard le 23 novembre 2021.

Si vous êtes un résident des Premières Nations suivantes : Nation des Oneidas de la Thèmes; Bande de Deer Lake; Première Nation de Mitaanjigamiing; North Caribou Lake; et Nation crie de Ministikwan Lake, vous pourriez vous exclure de ces recours collectifs en écrivant à l'administrateur du règlement au plus tard le [•date].

Renseignements supplémentaires pour les Premières Nations :

Les Premières Nations admissibles ne recevront une indemnité que si elles acceptent le règlement proposé au plus tard le [•date]. Les Premières Nations qui n'acceptent pas le règlement proposé au plus tard le [•date] ne sont admissibles à aucun des avantages prévus par l'entente de règlement.

Le présent avis explique vos droits et options et la manière de les exercer.

INFORMATION DE BASEPOURQUOI SUIS-JE AVISÉ DE CE RÈGLEMENT PROPOSÉ?

La Cour du Banc de la Reine du Manitoba et la Cour fédérale du Canada ont approuvé le présent avis pour vous informer du règlement proposé et de vos options avant que les tribunaux ne décident d'approuver ou non le règlement. Un avis est donné aux Premières Nations et à leurs membres qui pourraient être concernés par le règlement proposé.

QU'EST-CE QU'UN RECOURS COLLECTIF?

Dans un recours collectif, une ou plusieurs personnes appelées « demandeurs » ou « représentants demandeurs » introduisent une action pour le compte de personnes qui ont des réclamations semblables. Toutes ces personnes sont appelées collectivement le « groupe » ou les « membres du groupe ». Les tribunaux statuent sur les questions pour l'ensemble des intéressés.

Les représentants demandeurs devant la Cour du Banc de la Reine du Manitoba sont la Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak et la cheffe Doreen Spence.

Les représentants demandeurs devant la Cour fédérale du Canada sont i) la Première Nation de Curve Lake et la cheffe Emily Whetung et ii) la Première Nation de Neskantaga, le chef Wayne Moonias et l'ancien chef Christopher Moonias.

Le Canada est le défendeur dans les deux recours collectifs. Le Canada est représenté par le procureur général du Canada.

QUE SONT LES AVIS CONCERNANT LA QUALITÉ DE L'EAU POTABLE?

Les avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable sont émis pour informer les gens de ne pas boire l'eau qui pourrait être insalubre. Les avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable comprennent des avis d'ébullition de l'eau, des avis de ne pas boire et des avis de non-utilisation.

EN QUOI CONSISTENT LES RECOURS COLLECTIFS?

Les représentants allèguent que le Canada n'a pas remédié au problème des avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme dans les réserves des Premières Nations dans l'ensemble du Canada. La principale allégation est que le Canada a manqué à ses obligations envers les Premières Nations et leurs membres en ne veillant pas à ce que les collectivités des réserves aient accès à de l'eau salubre.

POURQUOI Y A-T-IL UN RÉGLEMENT PROPOSÉ?

Les représentants demandeurs et le Canada ont convenu d'un règlement proposé. En convenant d'un règlement proposé, les parties évitent les frais et les incertitudes d'un procès et les retards dans l'obtention du jugement, et les membres du groupe reçoivent les avantages décrits dans le présent avis (sous réserve de l'approbation du règlement proposé par les tribunaux).

Les représentants demandeurs et leurs avocats estiment que le règlement proposé est dans l'intérêt véritable de tous les membres du groupe.

QUI EST INCLUS DANS LE RÉGLEMENT PROPOSÉ?

QUELLES PERSONNES SONT INCLUSES DANS LE GROUPE?

Sont incluses dans le groupe les personnes :

1. qui étaient vivantes le 20 novembre 2017;
2. qui sont membres d'une bande, au sens de la Loi sur les Indiens, ou des peuples autochtones du Canada, sauf les Inuits et les Métis du Canada, qui sont parties à un traité moderne (une « Première Nation »), dont les terres sont visées par cette loi, par la Loi sur la gestion des terres des premières nations ou par un traité moderne (les « terres des Premières Nations »); et
3. qui pendant au moins un an entre le 20 novembre 1995 et le 30 juin 2021, résidaient habituellement sur des terres des Premières Nations visées par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable (qu'il s'agisse notamment d'un avis d'ébullition de l'eau, d'un avis de ne pas boire ou d'un avis de non-utilisation) qui a duré au moins un an entre le

20 novembre 1995 et le 30 juin 2021 (les « Premières Nations touchées ») alors qu'un tel avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable d'au moins un an était en vigueur.

Les personnes qui sont incluses dans le groupe ont droit à une indemnité même si leur Première Nation, ou la Première Nation sur les terres des Premières Nations de laquelle elles résidaient, n'accepte pas l'entente.

À QUI PEUVENT S'ADRESSER LES PERSONNES QUI ONT DES QUESTIONS?

L'administrateur du règlement à l'adresse de courrier électronique [●adresse de courrier électronique de l'administrateur] ou au numéro de téléphone [●numéro de téléphone de l'administrateur]

QUELLES SONT LES PREMIÈRES NATIONS INCLUSES DANS LE GROUPE?

Les Premières Nations touchées ne sont admissibles à une indemnité que si elles acceptent le règlement proposé. Toute Première Nation touchée qui souhaite participer au règlement doit approuver le règlement par voie d'une résolution d'acceptation du conseil de bande et en fournir une copie à l'administrateur du règlement à l'adresse de courrier électronique [●adresse de courrier électronique de l'administrateur] ou à l'adresse postale [●adresse postale de l'administrateur].

Les Premières Nations doivent accepter le règlement proposé au plus tard le [●date for Acceptance Deadline] pour pouvoir y participer. L'administrateur du règlement peut vous fournir le modèle de résolution d'acceptation du conseil de bande qui est nécessaire pour accepter le règlement proposé.

À QUI PEUVENT S'ADRESSER LES PREMIÈRES NATIONS QUI ONT DES QUESTIONS?

L'administrateur du règlement à l'adresse de courrier électronique [●adresse de courrier électronique de l'administrateur] ou au numéro de téléphone [●numéro de téléphone de l'administrateur].

QUELS SONT LES AVANTAGES DU RÈGLEMENT?

QUELLE INDEMNITÉ SERA VERSÉE EN VERTU DU RÈGLEMENT PROPOSÉ SI LES TRIBUNAUX L'APPROUVENT?

Les personnes peuvent recevoir un paiement pour chaque année où elles résidaient habituellement sur des terres des Premières Nations alors visées par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme. Le montant annuel devrait varier de 1 300 $ à 2 000 $ selon le type d'avis et l'éloignement des terres des Premières Nations. Ces montants sont assujettis à des délais de prescription : les personnes qui ont atteint l'âge de 18 ans avant le 20 novembre 2013 ne sont admissibles à une indemnité qu'à compter du 20 novembre 2013, à moins qu'elles n'aient été incapables en raison de leur état physique, mental ou psychologique d'introduire une instance à l'égard de leur réclamation avant le 20 novembre 2013.

Les personnes qui ont subi des préjudices particuliers peuvent avoir droit à une indemnité supplémentaire.

Les Premières Nations touchées qui acceptent le règlement proposé recevront 500 000 $ plus 50 % des sommes versées aux personnes pour les avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable dans leurs réserves.

QUELS SONT LES AUTRES AVANTAGES POUR LES PREMIÈRES NATIONS ET LEURS MEMBRES DANS LE RÈGLEMENT PROPOSÉ?

1. Le Canada a convenu de déployer tous les efforts raisonnables pour contribuer à l'élimination des avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme qui visent le groupe.
2. Le Canada a convenu de déployer tous les efforts raisonnables pour veiller à ce que les membres du groupe qui vivent dans les réserves aient un accès à une source fiable d'eau potable dans leurs foyers. Le Canada consacrera au moins 6 milliards de dollars d'ici le 31 mars 2030 à la mise en œuvre de cet engagement en finançant le coût réel de la construction, de l'amélioration, de l'exploitation et de l'entretien de l'infrastructure de l'eau dans les réserves.
3. Le Canada a convenu d'un mécanisme extrajudiciaire de règlement des différends afin de déterminer quelles autres mesures sont raisonnablement nécessaires pour aider les personnes à avoir un accès à une source fiable d'eau potable dans leurs foyers.
4. Le Canada a convenu de déployer tous les efforts raisonnables pour abroger la Loi sur la salubrité de l'eau potable des Premières Nations, L.C. 2013, ch. 21 d'ici le 31 mars 2022 et pour la remplacer par une loi qui contribue à l'amélioration de l'eau potable dans les réserves des Premières Nations.
5. Le Canada a convenu de verser 20 millions de dollars pour la création d'un comité consultatif des Premières Nations sur l'eau potable salubre.
6. Le Canada a convenu de mettre 9 millions de dollars à la disposition des Premières Nations pour le financement d'initiatives en matière de gouvernance et l'établissement d'une réglementation.

QUAND LES PERSONNES ET LES PREMIÈRES NATIONS RECEVRONT-ELLES UNE INDEMNITÉ?

Une indemnité ne sera payée que si les tribunaux approuvent le règlement proposé. L'indemnité de base des Premières Nations sera payée dans les 90 jours suivant la date de l'ordonnance d'approbation du règlement en sa forme définitive. Le paiement des autres indemnités aux personnes et aux Premières Nations ne commencera qu'un an après la date de l'ordonnance d'approbation du règlement en sa forme définitive.

COMMENT LES PERSONNES ET LES PREMIÈRES NATIONS RECEVRONT-ELLES UNE INDEMNITÉ?

Les personnes et les Premières Nations admissibles à une indemnité doivent soumettre leurs réclamations à l'administrateur du règlement pour recevoir un paiement. Aucun formulaire de réclamation ne sera disponible avant que les tribunaux n'approuvent le règlement proposé.

COMMENT LES AVOCATS SERONT-ILS PAYÉS?

Les avocats qui représentent les demandeurs demanderont aux tribunaux d'accepter que le Canada puisse les payer sur des fonds négociés séparément qui ne seront pas déduits des sommes devant servir à indemniser des personnes ou des Premières Nations. Le montant de ces fonds s'élève à 53 millions de dollars au titre des honoraires et débours, taxes comprises, en sus des 5 millions de dollars au titre des services juridiques continus.

Les avocats ne seront pas payés tant que les tribunaux n'auront pas statué sur le caractère juste et raisonnable des honoraires réclamés. Les tribunaux décideront du montant que les avocats devraient recevoir.

QU'EST-CE QUE J'ABANDONNE DANS LE RÈGLEMENT PROPOSÉ?

Si les tribunaux approuvent le règlement, vous renoncerez à votre droit de poursuivre le Canada pour les réclamations réglées par le règlement proposé. Cela signifie que vous ne pourrez pas poursuivre le Canada en justice pour des préjudices subis avant le 20 juin 2021 en raison du manquement du Canada de fournir de l'eau potable salubre dans votre réserve.

Les Premières Nations qui n'acceptent pas le règlement proposé ne sont pas (contrairement à leurs membres) liées par celui-ci.

PUIS-JE M'EXCLURE DU RÈGLEMENT PROPOSÉ?

Les personnes ne peuvent pas s'exclure du règlement sans l'approbation des tribunaux. Les avocats du groupe n'aideront aucune personne à s'exclure. Les personnes qui souhaitent s'exclure devraient consulter un autre avocat.

Toutefois, si vous êtes un résident des Premières Nations suivantes : Nation des Oneidas de la Thames; Bande de Deer Lake; Première Nation de Mitaanjigamiing; North Caribou Lake; et Nation crie de Ministikwan Lake, vous pourriez vous exclure de ces recours collectifs en écrivant à l'administrateur du règlement au plus tard le [•date 45 jours après la première publication de l'avis].

Les Premières Nations ne sont pas obligées d'accepter le règlement proposé. Si une Première Nation n'accepte pas le règlement proposé, le règlement proposé ne touchera pas cette Première Nation.

QUI ME REPRÉSENTE?

QUI SONT LES AVOCATS QUI ME REPRÉSENTENT?

Les représentants demandeurs et le groupe sont représentés par McCarthy Tétrault S.E.N.C.R.L., s.r.l. et Olthuis Kleer Townsend LLP (les « avocats du groupe »). Vous pouvez communiquer avec les avocats du groupe à [•coordonnées de la personne-ressource].

DOIS-JE PAYER LES AVOCATS DU GROUPE?

Non. Les avocats du groupe demanderont aux tribunaux d'approuver leurs honoraires.

ET SI JE VEUX MON PROPRE AVOCAT?

Si vous souhaitez retenir les services de votre propre avocat, vous pouvez le faire à vos frais.

COMMENT PUIS-JE M'OPPOSER AU RÈGLEMENT PROPOSÉ?

COMMENT PUIS-JE DIRE AUX TRIBUNAUX QUE JE N'AIME PAS LE RÈGLEMENT PROPOSÉ?

Si vous n'aimez pas une partie du règlement proposé, y compris les honoraires des avocats, vous pouvez vous y opposer. Les tribunaux tiendront compte de votre point de vue. Pour s'opposer, vous devez présenter un formulaire d'opposition comprenant les éléments suivants :

1. vos nom, adresse, numéro de téléphone et adresse de courrier électronique;
2. une déclaration indiquant que vous vous opposez au règlement proposé;
3. les raisons pour lesquelles vous vous opposez au règlement proposé;
4. la Première Nation dont vous êtes membre et la réserve dans laquelle vous résidez habituellement; et
5. votre signature.

Vous devez envoyer votre opposition par courriel ou par la poste au plus tard le 23 novembre 2021 à l'adresse de courrier électronique [●adresse de courrier électronique des avocats du groupe] ou à l'adresse postale [●adresse postale des avocats du groupe].

QUAND ET OÙ LES TRIBUNAUX DÉCIDERONT-ILS D'APPROUVER OU NON LE RÈGLEMENT PROPOSÉ?

Les tribunaux tiendront une audition conjointe les 7, 8 et 9 décembre 2021. Vous pouvez y assister en personne à la Cour fédérale, à Ottawa, ou y participer par vidéoconférence [● ou téléconférence].

DOIS-JE COMPARAÎTRE POUR M'OPPOSER?

Non. Si vous envoyez une opposition, vous n'avez pas à comparaître en cour. Les tribunaux tiendront compte des oppositions reçues dans les délais, même si vous ne comparez pas à l'audition. Vous ou votre avocat pouvez y assister en personne à la Cour fédérale, à Ottawa, ou y participer par vidéoconférence [● ou téléconférence] à vos frais.

PUIS-JE PRENDRE LA PAROLE À L'AUDITION?

Vous pouvez demander aux tribunaux la permission de prendre la parole à l'audition d'approbation. Pour ce faire, vous devez déposer un avis d'opposition et indiquer que vous souhaitez prendre la parole. Les tribunaux entendront les objections le 7 décembre 2021.

ET SI JE NE FAIS RIEN?

Les personnes qui sont admissibles au règlement proposé et qui ne font rien seront liées par le règlement si les tribunaux l'approuvent. Ces personnes seront admissibles à une indemnité, mais renonceront à leur droit de s'opposer au règlement.

Les Premières Nations qui sont admissibles au règlement proposé et qui ne font rien ne seront pas liées par le règlement proposé si les tribunaux l'approuvent. Ces Premières Nations ne seront pas admissibles à une indemnité et renonceront à leur droit de s'opposer au règlement.

Si le règlement est approuvé, les personnes, ainsi que les Premières Nations, qui acceptent le règlement, renonceront à leur droit de poursuivre le Canada pour manquement à son obligation de fournir de l'eau potable salubre dans leurs réserves.

COMMENT LES PREMIÈRES NATIONS ACCEPTENT-ELLES LE RÈGLEMENT PROPOSÉ?

COMMENT LES PREMIÈRES NATIONS ACCEPTENT-ELLES LE RÈGLEMENT PROPOSÉ?

Les tribunaux ont approuvé un règlement entre le Canada et certaines Premières Nations et leurs membres qui ont été visés par des avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme de 1995 à 2021.

Qui est inclus dans le règlement?

Sont incluses dans le groupe les personnes :

1. qui étaient vivantes le 20 novembre 2017;
2. qui sont membres d'une bande, au sens de la Loi sur les Indiens, ou des peuples autochtones du Canada, sauf les Inuits et les Métis du Canada, qui sont parties à un traité moderne (une « Première Nation »), dont les terres sont visées par cette loi, par la Loi sur la gestion des terres des premières nations ou par un traité moderne (les « terres des Premières Nations »), et
3. qui pendant au moins un an entre le 20 novembre 1995 et le 30 juin 2021, résidaient habituellement sur des terres des Premières Nations visées par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable (qu'il s'agisse notamment d'un avis d'ébullition de l'eau, d'un avis de ne pas boire ou d'un avis de non-utilisation) qui a duré au moins un an entre le 20 novembre 1995 et le 30 juin 2021 (les « Premières Nations touchées ») alors qu'un tel avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable d'au moins un an était en vigueur.

Les personnes qui sont incluses dans le groupe ont droit à une indemnité même si leur Première Nation, ou la Première Nation sur les terres des Premières Nations de laquelle elles résidaient, n'accepte pas le règlement.

Les Premières Nations touchées sont incluses si elles acceptent le règlement au plus tard le [•date]. Les Premières Nations touchées qui n'acceptent pas le règlement d'ici là ne seront pas indemnisées.

Que prévoit le règlement?

Les personnes recevront un paiement pour chaque année où elles résidaient habituellement sur des terres des Premières Nations alors visées par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable. Le montant annuel devrait varier de 1 300 $ et 2 000 $ pour les années admissibles, selon le type d'avis et l'éloignement des terres des Premières Nations. Ces montants sont assujettis à des délais de prescription. Les personnes qui ont subi des préjudices particuliers peuvent avoir droit à une indemnité supplémentaire.

Les Premières Nations touchées qui acceptent le règlement recevront 500 000 $ plus 50 % des sommes versées aux personnes pour les avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable dans leurs réserves.

Le Canada doit également prendre d'autres mesures pour lever les avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme et veiller à ce que les personnes aient accès à une source fiable d'eau potable dans leurs foyers. Le Canada consacrera au moins 6 milliards de dollars à l'infrastructure de l'eau et des eaux usées dans les réserves. Les personnes qui sont mécontentes des efforts du Canada peuvent recourir à un mécanisme extrajudiciaire de règlement des différends.

Comment puis-je réclamer de l'argent?

Les personnes doivent soumettre un formulaire de réclamation, ou leur conseil de bande peut soumettre une résolution, confirmant qu'elles résidaient habituellement sur les terres des Premières Nations de cette Première Nation alors visées par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme. Les Premières Nations doivent accepter le règlement et en informer l'administrateur du règlement. Pour afficher et soumettre des formulaires de réclamation, veuillez visiter le [•URL].

Les tribunaux ont approuvé un règlement entre le Canada et certaines Premières Nations et leurs membres qui ont été visés par des avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme de 1995 à 2021.

Les Premières Nations et leurs membres visés par des avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable depuis le 20 novembre 1995 poursuivent en justice le Canada pour obtenir une indemnisation dans le cadre de deux recours collectifs. La Cour du Banc de la Reine du Manitoba et la Cour fédérale du Canada ont approuvé un règlement dans le cadre des recours collectifs. Le règlement indemnise les Premières Nations et leurs membres admissibles.

Le présent avis explique qui est admissible à une indemnité et comment réclamer celle-ci. Les personnes qui ne réclament pas une indemnité au plus tard le [•date] et les Premières Nations qui n'acceptent pas le règlement au plus tard le [•date] ne recevront aucune indemnité.

COMMENT PUIS-JE OBTENIR UNE INDEMNITÉ?

QU'EST-CE QUE LES MEMBRES DU GROUPE PEUVENT OBTENIR?

Les personnes peuvent recevoir un paiement pour chaque année où elles résidaient habituellement sur des terres des Premières Nations alors visées par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme. Le montant devrait varier d'environ 1 300 $ à 2 000 $ pour chaque année admissible, selon le type d'avis et l'éloignement des terres des Premières Nations. Ces montants sont assujettis à des délais de prescription : les personnes qui ont atteint l'âge de 18 ans avant le 20 novembre 2013 ne sont admissibles à une indemnité qu'à compter du 20 novembre 2013, à moins qu'elles n'aient été incapables en raison de leur état physique, mental ou psychologique d'introduire une instance à l'égard de leur réclamation avant le 20 novembre 2013.

Les personnes qui ont subi des préjudices particuliers peuvent avoir droit à une indemnité supplémentaire.

Les Premières Nations touchées qui acceptent le règlement recevront 500 000 $ plus 50 % des sommes versées aux personnes pour les avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable dans leurs réserves.

QUELS SONT LES AUTRES AVANTAGES POUR LES PREMIÈRES NATIONS ET LEURS MEMBRES DANS LE RÉGLEMENT?

1. Le Canada a convenu de déployer tous les efforts raisonnables pour contribuer à l'élimination des avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme qui visent le groupe.
2. Le Canada a convenu de déployer tous les efforts raisonnables pour veiller à ce que les membres du groupe qui vivent dans les réserves aient un accès à une source fiable d'eau potable dans leurs foyers. Le Canada consacrera au moins 6 milliards de dollars d'ici le 31 mars 2030 à la mise en œuvre de cet engagement en finançant le coût réel de la construction, de l'amélioration, de l'exploitation et de l'entretien de l'infrastructure de l'eau dans les réserves.
3. Le Canada a convenu d'un mécanisme extrajudiciaire de règlement des différends afin de déterminer quelles autres mesures sont raisonnablement nécessaires pour aider les personnes à avoir un accès à une source fiable d'eau potable dans leurs foyers.
4. Le Canada a convenu de déployer tous les efforts raisonnables pour abroger la Loi sur la salubrité de l'eau potable des Premières Nations, L.C. 2013, ch. 21 d'ici le 31 mars 2022 et pour la remplacer par une loi qui contribue à l'amélioration de l'eau potable dans les réserves des Premières Nations.
5. Le Canada a convenu de verser 20 millions de dollars pour la création d'un comité consultatif des Premières Nations sur l'eau potable salubre.
6. Le Canada a convenu de mettre 9 millions de dollars à la disposition des Premières Nations pour le financement d'initiatives en matière de gouvernance et l'établissement d'une réglementation.

QUAND LES PERSONNES ET LES PREMIÈRES NATIONS RECEVRONT-ELLES UNE INDEMNITÉ?

Les personnes peuvent soumettre leurs formulaires de réclamation jusqu'au [●date]. Après l'expiration de la période de réclamation, l'administrateur du règlement paiera les réclamations d'indemnité valides.

Les Premières Nations recevront l'indemnité de base de 500 000 $ dans les 90 jours suivant la date de leur acceptation de l'entente de règlement ou, si elle est antérieure, la date de son approbation par les tribunaux. Tous les six mois, chaque Première Nation recevra un versement correspondant à 50 % des montants payés aux personnes admissibles qui résidaient habituellement sur une réserve de Première Nation, alors visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme.

COMMENT LES PERSONNES ET LES PREMIÈRES NATIONS RECEVRONT-ELLES UNE INDEMNITÉ?

Les personnes doivent soumettre un formulaire de réclamation, ou leur conseil de bande peut soumettre une résolution, confirmant qu'elles résidaient habituellement sur les terres des Premières Nations de cette Première Nation alors visées par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme.

Les Premières Nations doivent accepter le règlement et en informer l'administrateur du règlement. Pour afficher et soumettre des formulaires de réclamation, veuillez visiter le [●URL].

Les personnes peuvent recevoir une indemnité même si leur Première Nation, ou la Première Nation sur les terres des Premières Nations de laquelle elles résidaient, n'accepte pas l'entente de règlement.

On peut obtenir des formulaires de réclamation ici [● URL]. Les formulaires de réclamation peuvent être soumis à l'administrateur du règlement à l'adresse de courrier électronique [●adresse de courrier électronique de l'administrateur] ou à l'adresse postale [●adresse postale de l'administrateur].

AI-JE BESOIN DE MON PROPRE AVOCAT POUR FAIRE UNE RÉCLAMATION?

Non. Les avocats du groupe vous représentent. Vous pouvez communiquer avec les avocats du groupe à [●coordonnées de la personne-ressource].

COMMENT LES AVOCATS SERONT-ILS PAYÉS?

Le Canada, plutôt que les membres du groupe, paiera les honoraires des avocats du groupe dans le cadre des recours collectifs et de l'aide qu'ils continueront d'offrir aux personnes et aux Premières Nations. Les tribunaux ont approuvé les honoraires des avocats et vous n'avez pas à verser de l'argent pour faire une réclamation.

QU'EST-CE QUE J'ABANDONNE DANS LE RÈGLEMENT?

Les membres du groupe renoncent à leur droit de poursuivre le Canada pour les réclamations réglées par le règlement. Cela signifie que vous ne pourrez pas poursuivre le Canada en justice pour des préjudices subis avant le 20 juin 2021 en raison du manquement du Canada de fournir de l'eau potable salubre dans votre réserve.

Les Premières Nations qui n'acceptent pas le règlement ne seront pas liées par celui-ci. Toutefois, les réclamations individuelles de leurs membres seront visées par le règlement.

PUIS-JE M'EXCLURE DU RÈGLEMENT?

Les personnes ne peuvent en général pas s'exclure du règlement sans l'approbation des tribunaux. Les avocats du groupe ne peuvent pas aider une personne à s'exclure du règlement. Les personnes qui souhaitent demander aux tribunaux l'autorisation de s'exclure du règlement devraient consulter un autre avocat.

Les Premières Nations ne sont pas obligées d'accepter le règlement. Si une Première Nation n'accepte pas le règlement, le règlement ne règlera pas les réclamations collectives ou communautaires de cette Première Nation.

Vous n'êtes pas tenu de soumettre une réclamation, mais si vous ne vous excluez pas du règlement et ne soumettez pas une réclamation, et qu'un conseil de bande ne fournit pas à l'administrateur du règlement la confirmation de votre résidence, vous ne recevrez aucune indemnité et vous renoncerez tout de même à votre droit de poursuivre le Canada en justice.

QUI ME REPRÉSENTE ?

QUI SONT LES AVOCATS QUI ME REPRÉSENTENT ?

Les représentants demandeurs et le groupe sont représentés par McCarthy Tétrault S.E.N.C.R.L., s.r.l. et Olthuis Kleer Townsend LLP (les « avocats du groupe »). Vous pouvez communiquer avec les avocats du groupe à [●coordonnées de la personne-ressource].

DOIS-JE PAYER LES AVOCATS DU GROUPE ?

Non. Les tribunaux ont approuvé les honoraires des avocats du groupe.

ET SI JE VEUX MON PROPRE AVOCAT ?

Si vous souhaitez retenir les services de votre propre avocat, vous pouvez le faire à vos frais.

COMMENT LES PREMIÈRES NATIONS ACCEPTENT-ELLES LE RÈGLEMENT ?

Les Premières Nations qui sont admissibles au règlement doivent l'accepter par voie d'une résolution d'acceptation du conseil de bande et en fournir une copie à l'administrateur du règlement au plus tard le [●date].

De plus amples renseignements, y compris un modèle de résolution d'acceptation du conseil de bande, sont présentés ici : [●URL].

Vous pouvez également adresser vos questions aux avocats du groupe à [●coordonnées de la personne-ressource].

À QUI DOIVENT S'ADRESSER LES PREMIÈRES NATIONS POUR ACCEPTER LE RÈGLEMENT ?

Les Premières Nations qui ont des questions devraient s'adresser aux avocats du groupe à [●coordonnées de la personne-ressource].

Les Premières Nations qui ont adopté une résolution d'acceptation du conseil de bande acceptant l'entente de règlement doivent en fournir une copie à l'administrateur du règlement au plus tard le [●date] à l'adresse de courrier électronique [●adresse de courrier électronique de l'administrateur] ou à l'adresse postale [●adresse postale de l'administrateur].

À QUI DOIS-JE M'ADRESSER POUR OBTENIR DE PLUS AMPLES RENSEIGNEMENTS?

Vous pouvez communiquer avec l'administrateur du règlement à l'adresse de courrier électronique [•adresse de courrier électronique de l'administrateur] ou à l'adresse postale [•adresse postale de l'administrateur].

Vous pouvez également communiquer avec les avocats du groupe à [•coordonnées de la personne-ressource].

ORDONNANCE

(Recours collectif introduit en vertu de la partie 5.1 des Règles des Cours fédérales, DORS/98-106)

LA PRÉSENTE REQUÊTE, présentée par les demandeurs en vue d'obtenir un jugement approuvant le règlement de la présente action conformément aux modalités de l'entente de règlement intervenue le [•date], a été entendue le [•] à [•location].

APRÈS LECTURE du dossier de requête des parties et des mémoires des parties,

APRÈS AUDITION de la requête présentée par les demandeurs en vue d'obtenir une ordonnance approuvant les modalités de l'entente de règlement datée du [•date] et jointe à la présente ordonnance en ANNEXE A (l'« entente de règlement »), y compris les observations orales des avocats des demandeurs et du défendeur ainsi que les observations orales des membres du groupe défenseurs de l'entente de règlement et des membres du groupe opposants à l'entente de règlement ou, dans le cas de ces derniers, de l'avocat désigné par ces opposants pour formuler des observations orales pour leur compte;

LA COUR ORDONNE ce qui suit :

1. Aux fins de la présente ordonnance, les définitions de l'entente de règlement s'appliquent à la présente ordonnance et y sont intégrées.
2. L'entente de règlement est juste, raisonnable et dans l'intérêt véritable des demandeurs et du groupe.
3. L'entente de règlement (y compris toutes ses annexes) est expressément intégrée par renvoi dans la présente ordonnance et a la même force exécutoire qu'une ordonnance de la Cour.
4. L'entente de règlement sera, et elle est par les présentes, approuvée et sera mise en application conformément à la présente ordonnance et aux autres ordonnances de la Cour.
5. L'avis d'approbation du règlement sera donné conformément au plan de notification joint à la présente ordonnance en ANNEXE B et constituera un avis adéquat, et le meilleur avis possible dans les circonstances.
6. Les personnes énumérées à l'ANNEXE C se sont exclues et ne pourront plus participer à cette action.
7. Les Premières Nations membres du groupe et les personnes membres du groupe qui ne se sont pas exclues sont liées par les quittances prévues au paragraphe 10.03(1) de l'entente de règlement et la Cour déclare ceci :

Sauf comme il est prévu dans l'entente de règlement, et en contrepartie des obligations et des responsabilités du Canada qui lui incombent en vertu de l'entente de règlement, chaque personne membre du groupe ou son exécuteur testamentaire, demandeur d'indemnité successorale ou représentant personnel pour le compte de la personne membre du groupe ou de sa succession, et chaque Première Nation membre du groupe (collectivement ci-après, les « donneurs de quittance ») dégage entièrement et définitivement le Canada et ses fonctionnaires, mandataires, dirigeants et employés, prédécesseurs, successieurs et ayants cause (collectivement ci-après, les « bénéficiaires de quittance »), de quelque action, cause d'action, réclamation et demande de quelque nature ou type, qu'elle soit ou non connue ou prévue, que les donateurs de quittance avaient, ont aujourd'hui ou pourraient avoir à l'avenir contre les bénéficiaires de quittance à l'égard ou en raison de l'omission du Canada d'assurer ou de financer l'approvisionnement en eau potable salubre dans la ou les réserves alors visées par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long de cette Première Nation membre du groupe, ou dans lesquelles cette personne membre du groupe était un résident habituel, dans chaque cas avant la fin de la période visée.

8. La présente ordonnance et l'entente de règlement, y compris les bénéficiaires de quittance mentionnés au paragraphe 7 ci-dessus, lie toutes les personnes membres du groupe qui ne se sont pas exclues, y compris les personnes frappées d'incapacité.

9. La présente ordonnance et l'entente de règlement, y compris les bénéficiaires de quittance mentionnés au paragraphe 7 ci-dessus, lie toutes les Premières Nations membres du groupe ayant remis un avis d'acceptation.

10. La Cour se réserve, sans que cela ait d'incidence sur le caractère définitif de la présente ordonnance, la compétence exclusive et continue à l'égard de cette action, des demandeurs, de toutes les personnes membres du groupe qui ne se sont pas exclues, de toutes les Premières Nations membres du groupe ayant remis un avis d'acceptation et du défendeur aux fins de la mise en application de l'entente de règlement.

11. Sauf comme il est indiqué ci-dessus, la présente action est abandonnée contre le défendeur sans dépens et de façon définitive.

12. La Cour peut rendre d'autres ordonnances, notamment accessoires, qu'elle juge nécessaires à la mise en application de l'entente de règlement et de la présente ordonnance.

Approuvant des réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau privés dans la réserve

ATTENDU QUE certains demandeurs ont introduit l'action intitulée Curve Lake First Nation and Chief Emily Whetung on her own behalf and on behalf of all members of Curve Lake First Nation and Neskantaga First Nation and Chief Christopher Moonias on his own behalf and on behalf of all members of Neskantaga First Nation c. Attorney General of Canada, portant le numéro de dossier T-1673-19 devant la Cour fédérale (l'« action devant la Cour fédérale »);

ATTENDU QUE certains demandeurs ont introduit l'action intitulée Tataskweyak Cree Nation and Chief Doreen Spence on her own behalf and on behalf of all members of Tataskweyak Cree Nation c. Attorney General of Canada, portant le numéro de dossier CI-19-01-24661 devant la Cour du banc de la Reine du Manitoba (l'« action au Manitoba », et conjointement avec l'action devant la Cour fédérale, les « actions »);

ATTENDU QUE les actions ont été attestées ou autorisées par les tribunaux respectifs comme des recours collectifs;

ATTENDU QUE le procureur général du Canada et les demandeurs dans les actions ont négocié une entente de règlement (l'« entente de règlement ») à l'égard des actions;

ATTENDU QUE l'entente de règlement prévoit que le Canada déploie tous les efforts raisonnables pour veiller à ce que les personnes membres du groupe (au sens de l'entente de règlement) qui vivent dans des réserves (au sens de l'entente de règlement) aient un accès à une source fiable d'eau potable dans leurs foyers, que ce soit à partir d'un réseau d'approvisionnement en eau public ou d'un réseau d'approvisionnement en eau privé approuvé par voie d'une résolution du conseil de bande, y compris, notamment des réseaux sur place, qui respectent les exigences fédérales ou les normes provinciales les plus rigoureuses en matière de qualité de l'eau à domicile (l'« engagement »);

ATTENDU QUE [Nom du conseil des Premières Nations] (le « conseil ») souhaite approuver les réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau privés énumérés ci-dessous pour l'application de l'engagement par l'adoption de la présente résolution du conseil de bande.

ATTENDU QUE la présente résolution du conseil de bande ne constitue pas une reconnaissance de responsabilité du conseil de quelque façon que ce soit à l'égard des réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau privés énumérés ci-dessous;

IL EST PAR LES PRÉSENTES RÉSOLU CE QUI SUIT :

1. Pour l'application de l'engagement seulement, le conseil approuve par les présentes, sans confirmation ni acceptation de responsabilité de sa part, les réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau privés suivants :
 - a. [Indiquer ou décrire les réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau privés, y compris les puits.]

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

2. Le conseil déclare par les présentes qu'il peut révoquer l'approbation énoncée au paragraphe 1 ci-dessus à tout moment.
3. Le conseil déclare par les présentes qu'il peut compléter l'approbation énoncée au paragraphe 1 ci-dessus à tout moment par l'ajout d'autres réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau.
4. Ces résolutions peuvent être signées par le chef et les membres du conseil en autant d'exemplaires pouvant se révéler nécessaires, sous forme originale ou électronique, dont chacun sera réputé être un original, et dont la totalité seront réputés constituer ensemble une seule et même résolution.

Les signataires suivants attestent et garantissent qu'un quorum du conseil a signé la présente résolution du conseil de bande, comme en font foi leurs signatures ci-dessous

ANNEXE Q

PLAN DE RECHERCHE D'ADRESSE DE MEMBRES DU GROUPE ADMISSIBLES

1. Si l'administrateur reçoit une confirmation du conseil de bande ou un formulaire de réclamation qui ne fournit pas d'adresse postale lisible pour une personne membre du groupe, ou qu'une personne membre du groupe n'a pas déposé de chèque ou n'a pas demandé un paiement fait conformément à l'entente dans les cent quatre-vingts (180) jours suivant l'émission de ce chèque ou de ce paiement, cette personne membre du groupe sera considérée comme un « membre du groupe admissible disparu », et la date à laquelle elle deviendra un membre du groupe admissible disparu sera la « date de début de la recherche ».

2. Pour chaque membre du groupe admissible disparu, l'administrateur effectue ou fait effectuer toutes les recherches suivantes afin de trouver les coordonnées actuelles du membre du groupe admissible disparu :

- a) la base de données canadienne du Programme national sur les changements d'adresse;
- b) la recherche inversée par numéro de téléphone;
- c) Canada 411;
- d) consulter les coordonnées de ce membre du groupe admissible disparu dans une confirmation du conseil de bande, s'il y a lieu, et faire une demande écrite ou téléphonique pour obtenir les coordonnées du membre du groupe admissible disparu auprès du bureau du conseil de bande de la Première Nation où il réside habituellement ou bien où il a résidé habituellement pour la dernière fois, le cas échéant; et
- e) faire une demande écrite ou téléphonique pour obtenir les coordonnées du membre du groupe admissible disparu auprès du bureau du conseil de bande de la Première Nation dont ce membre du groupe admissible disparu est membre, si différent de l'alinéa 2d) ci-dessus.

3. Les recherches indiquées au paragraphe 2 ci-dessus seront effectuées dans les quarante-cinq (45) jours suivant la date de début de la recherche.

4. Si l'administrateur localise plus d'une nouvelle adresse postale pour un membre du groupe admissible disparu, il demandera des renseignements raisonnables pour déterminer la bonne adresse.

5. Si l'administrateur localise une nouvelle adresse postale pour un membre du groupe admissible disparu, l'administrateur émettra et postera un nouveau chèque ou un autre mode de paiement au membre du groupe admissible disparu du montant payable conformément à la présente entente, lequel chèque ou paiement sera périmé dans les quatre-vingt-dix (90) jours suivant de son émission. Si un chèque ou un autre mode de paiement avait déjà été émis au membre du groupe admissible disparu, mais qu'il n'avait pas été déposé ou réclamé, l'administrateur annulera ce paiement avant l'émission du nouveau chèque ou d'un autre mode de paiement.

6. Si l'administrateur ne trouve pas une nouvelle adresse postale pour un membre du groupe admissible disparu, mais que le formulaire de réclamation du membre du groupe admissible disparu indique qu'il réside actuellement dans une réserve, l'administrateur émettra et postera à ce membre du groupe admissible disparu, aux soins du bureau du conseil de bande ou à un autre endroit semblable dans cette réserve, un nouveau chèque ou un autre mode de paiement d'une somme payable conformément à la présente entente, lequel chèque ou paiement sera périmé dans les quatre-vingt-dix (90) jours suivant de son émission. Si un chèque ou un autre mode de paiement avait déjà été émis au membre du groupe admissible disparu, mais qu'il n'avait pas été déposé ou réclamé, l'administrateur annule ce paiement avant l'émission du nouveau chèque ou d'un autre mode paiement.

8. Si l'administrateur ne peut toujours pas trouver un membre du groupe admissible disparu malgré le respect du présent plan de recherche d'adresse de membres du groupe admissibles, et le fait que tout chèque ou paiement émis et envoyé à ce membre du groupe admissible disparu soit périmé, il doit attendre une période de cent quatre-vingts (180) jours (dont l'expiration est la « date de fin de la recherche »). Si l'administrateur n'est toujours pas en mesure de trouver le membre du groupe admissible disparu à la date de fin de la recherche, la réclamation du membre du groupe admissible disparu sera entièrement et définitivement éteinte et annulée, l'administrateur n'aura aucune obligation de faire quelque paiement que ce soit à ce membre du groupe admissible disparu, et l'administrateur, le Canada, les avocats du Canada, les avocats du groupe, le comité mixte et ses membres, le comité de mise en œuvre du règlement et ses membres, le fiduciaire et le CCPNEPS sont dégagés de toute responsabilité.

PREMIER ADDENDA À L'ENTENTE DE RÈGLEMENT

Le présent addenda (l'« addenda ») est intervenu en date du 8 octobre 2021.

ATTENDU QUE :

- A. La Nation des Cns de Tataskweyak et la cheffe Doreen Spence, pour leur propre compte et pour le compte de tous les membres du groupe individuels (collectivement, les « demandeurs du recours du Manitoba »), la Première Nation de Curve Lake et la cheffe Emily Whetung, pour leur propre compte et pour le compte de tous les membres du groupe individuels (collectivement, les « demandeurs de la Première Nation de Curve Lake »), la Première Nation de Neskantaga et le chef Wayne Moonias et l'ancien chef Christopher Moonias, chacun pour son propre compte et pour le compte de tous les membres du groupe individuels (collectivement, les « demandeurs de la Première Nation de Neskantaga »), et collectivement avec les demandeurs de la Première Nation de Curve Lake, les « demandeurs du recours fédéral ») et Sa Majesté la Reine du chef du Canada (tous ceux qui précèdent collectivement, les « parties ») ont conclu une entente de règlement datée du 15 septembre 2021 (l'« entente de règlement »); et
- B. Les parties souhaitent modifier l'entente de règlement afin de préciser la mise à disposition d'une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés.

PAR CONSÉQUENT, les parties conviennent de modifier l'entente de règlement comme suit :

1. Les termes et expressions clés utilisés dans les présentes sans y être définis ont le sens qui leur est attribué dans l'entente de règlement (en anglais seulement).
2. Le paragraphe 8.02(2) de l'entente de règlement est par les présentes modifié afin d'ajouter les mots (traduction) « L'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés ne sera versée que si le membre du groupe individuel a subi un préjudice déterminé ou les symptômes persistants d'un préjudice déterminé antérieur, tel qu'il est indiqué à l'annexe H, au cours d'une année pour laquelle des dommages-intérêts individuels seraient payables au membre du groupe individuel conformément à la formule de calcul des dommages-intérêts individuels prévue au paragraphe 8.01(2), s'il s'agissait d'une année de consultation (mais qui, pour plus de certitude, n'est pas tenue d'être une année de consultation). » à la fin du paragraphe, comme suit :

(Traduction) Les membres du groupe individuels confirmés auront droit à une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés d'un montant indiqué à l'annexe H (l'« indemnité pour préjudices déterminés »), à condition que le demandeur établisse que le préjudice a été causé en raison de la consommation d'eau traitée ou d'eau du robinet conformément à un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme ou en raison d'un accès restreint à de l'eau traitée ou de l'eau du robinet conformément à un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme dans le cadre du processus de réclamation et de l'annexe H. L'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés ne sera versée que si le membre du groupe individuel a subi un préjudice déterminé ou les symptômes persistants d'un préjudice déterminé antérieur, tel qu'il est indiqué à l'annexe H, au cours d'une année pour laquelle des dommages-intérêts individuels seraient payables au membre du groupe individuel conformément à la formule de calcul des dommages-intérêts individuels prévue au paragraphe 8.01(2), s'il s'agissait d'une année de consultation (mais qui, pour plus de certitude, n'est pas tenue d'être une année de consultation).

3. Les clauses 1.12, 1.13, 1.14, 1.15, 2.01 et 2.02 de l'entente de règlement sont intégrées par renvoi dans les présentes et s'appliquent au présent addenda.
4. Le paragraphe 10.12(1) de l'entente de règlement est par les présentes modifié afin de remplacer les mots « le paragraphe 81(g.3) de la Loi de l'impôt sur le revenu » par « le paragraphe 81(1)(g.3) de la Loi de l'impôt sur le revenu ».
5. Les parties, par leurs conseillers juridiques, conviennent que le présent addenda sera intégré dans l'entente de règlement.

EN FOI DE QUOI les soussignés ont signé le présent addenda pour le compte des parties à la date indiquée au début des présentes.

APPENDIX 3

NOTICE PLAN

I. OVERVIEW

Objective:

To provide clear, concise, plain-language information to the greatest practicable number of Class Members and their family members regarding;

- a. the Settlement Agreement and their rights to receive compensation under it; and
- b. the Claims Process and timeline.

Class Members:

The Class Consists of the following:

- * individual Class Members, consisting of an estimated 142,300 individuals who are members of the Class and have not Opted Out of the Actions.
- * First Nation Class Members, consisting of First Nations that are members of the Class and provide the Administrator with notice of Acceptance. There are up to a total of 258 Impacted First Nations that could deliver notices of Acceptance and become First Nation Class Members.

Known Factors:

Known factors considered in designing this Notice Plan include:

1. The Reserves subject to Long-Term Drinking Water Advisories during the Class Period include Reserves in remote areas, posing additional communication challenges (for example, delays or limitations in delivery of mailed notice materials).
2. Education levels of Class Members vary widely, from members who have not completed high school to members with graduate-level university education.
3. Class Members speak a variety of languages, including English, French, and a number of Indigenous languages.
4. Impacted First Nations are geographically dispersed across Canada's provinces, with particular concentration in Ontario, British Columbia, and Manitoba.
5. 2016 census data indicates that approximately two thirds of First Nation people do not reside on Reserves.² Class Members who lived on impacted Reserves during the Class Period may no longer reside on the Reserve with which their Claim is associated or in the same province or territory. Some Class Members may reside outside of Canada.

Strategies:

1. CA2 will give the "Settlement Notice" using the same notice plan that it used to give Certification Notice, as particularized further below. The form of the Settlement Notice will be substantially as set out in Schedule M, with such reasonable modifications as CA2 may suggest, and as approved by the Courts. CA2 will disseminate the Settlement Notice in a manner that is substantially similar to the way in which it disseminated the notice of certification of the Actions.
2. The Administrator will give the "Settlement Approval Notice" substantially in the form set out in Schedule N, with such reasonable amendments as the Administrator may suggest, and as approved by the Courts. The Settlement Approval Notice will advise Individual Class Members of the Claims Deadline and First Nation Class Members of the need to accept the settlement agreement. The Settlement Approval Notice will be disseminated by the following methods, as particularized further below:
 - a. Direct mailed notice to Class member First Nations;
 - b. A national press release in two parts: one at the time of settlement approval and the second at the opening of the claims period.
 - c. Live in-person and virtual community meetings for interested First Nation Class Members;
 - d. Creation of an informational website providing access to copies of the Settlement Agreement, Claims Form, FAQs, and other informational resources, to be referenced in all notice materials and advertisements;

Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada (Attorney General)

- e. Establishment of a national toll-free support line for Class Members, family, guardians, or other persons who make inquiries on their own behalf or on behalf of Class Members to call for further information and support with Claims, to be cited in all notice materials and advertisements.
 - f. Publication in newspapers and First Nation publications across the country
 - g. Placement of 30- and 60-second television advertisements on APTN;
 - h. Placement of 30- and 60-second radio advertisements on leading First Nation radio stations in all relevant regions;
 - i. Social media/online advertisements to run on popular platforms, including Facebook, Twitter, and YouTube;
 - j. Translation of the notice into French, and all reasonable efforts to translate notice into Indigenous languages, as requested by Class Members; and
 - k. Toll-free support line to assist members in making Claims.
3. The Administrator will give a "Reminder Notice" eight months after first publication of Settlement Approval Notice, using the same notice plan. The Reminder Notice will be in a form to be agreed by the Parties, acting reasonably, on the advice of the Administrator, and approved by the Courts.
4. The Administrator will give a "Late Claims Notice" in the event that late claims are permitted. The Late Claims Notice, if any, will use the same notice plan as the Settlement Approval Notice and the Reminder Notice, modified as the Administrator advises and the Courts approve to target those First Nations where participation has fallen below expectations.
5. Canada will be responsible for the cost of giving notice in accordance with this Notice Plan.

II SETTLEMENT NOTICE PLAN

Websites

Class Counsel, the Defendant, and CA2 shall post on their respective websites the Short Form Notice set out in Schedule M and the Long Form Notice set out in Schedule M, and the French language translations of these documents, as agreed upon by the parties;

Print Media Advertising

CA2 shall publish the Short Form Notice set out in Schedule M, in the following publications in V4 of a page size in the weekend edition of each newspaper, if possible: Globe and Mail; National Post; Winnipeg Free Press; Vancouver Sun; Edmonton Sun; Calgary Herald; Saskatoon Star Phoenix; Regina Leader Post; Thunder Bay Chronicle-Journal; Toronto Star; Ottawa Citizen; Montreal Gazette; Montreal La Presse (digital edition); Halifax Chronicle-Herald; Moncton Times and Transcript; First Nations Drum.

Direct Mailed Notices

CA2 shall forward the Short Form Notice set out in Schedule M and Long Form Notice set out in Schedule M to the Assembly of First Nations and the Chiefs of every Impacted First Nation identified in accordance with, except for Excluded Persons;

CA2 shall forward the Short Form Notice set out in Schedule M and Long Form Notice set out in Schedule M to the band office or similar office of every Impacted First Nation, except for Excluded Persons, together with a request that they be posted in a prominent place.

Toil-Free Support Line

CA2 shall establish a national toll-free support line, to provide assistance to Class Members, their family, their guardians, or other persons who make inquiries on their own behalf or on behalf of Class members.

III. SETTLEMENT APPROVAL NOTICE PLAN

Direct Mailed Notices

Print notices to be mailed by regular postal mail to each of the following:

- * The band office or similar office of all Impacted First Nations, requesting that the notices be posted in prominent locations, with sufficient copies of notice materials to distribute to community residents;
- * The Chief of each Impacted First Nation;
 - * Friendship Centres associated with Impacted First Nations;
 - * Tribal council or similar for each Impacted First Nation;
 - * Head office and regional offices of the Assembly of First Nations;
 - * To the extent that their addresses are known, all Individual Class Members who are identified to the Administrator by a First Nation in a Band Council Confirmation or otherwise; and
 - * Any person who requests a copy of the Settlement Approval Notices,

Where mailed to a community hub, mailer to be accompanied by request to post the notice in a prominent location.

Print Media Advertising Print and/or online notices in Court-approved short form or display advertisements that contain relevant information and direct class members to the website. These notices will run 2-4 times in a 10 week period, 60 days apart, on the best circulation day, in 1/4 page size (or the most effective size for cost), and placed to maximize visibility and readership, in each of the following publications, or such reasonable substitutions as the Administrator may advise:

ORDER AND REASONS

[1] To redress the tragic legacy of Residential Schools and to advance the process of reconciliation, the Truth and Reconciliation Commission Calls to Action called upon Canada to work “collaboratively with plaintiffs not included in the Indian Residential Schools Settlement Agreement”. This is a Motion for approval of the partial settlement of a class action brought on behalf of the Day Scholars who attended Residential Schools across Canada.

[2] In 2010, Chief Gottfriedson and Chief Feschuck decided to take action in response to the failure of the Residential School settlements to recognize the harms suffered by Day Scholars. At the urging of these Chiefs, in August 2012, this class action was filed to seek justice for the Residential School Day Scholars and to ensure that “no-one was left behind”.

[3] On June 3, 2015, Justice Harrington certified this as a class proceeding for the benefit of three classes: the Survivor Class, the Descendant Class, and the Band Class (Gottfriedson v Canada, 2015 FC 706).

[4] On this Motion, the Court is asked to approve the proposed settlement reached between Canada and the Survivor Class and the Descendant Class for the loss of culture and language suffered by those who attended Residential Schools as Day Scholars between 1920 and 1997. The Band Class claims have not been settled and that part of the class proceeding will continue.

[5] This Motion was heard in a hybrid manner with legal counsel and representative class members appearing in person in Vancouver with others appearing virtually via Zoom or by telephone.

[6] For the reasons outlined below, although the Court heard from class members who oppose the proposed settlement, overall, the Court is satisfied that the settlement is fair and reasonable and in the best interests of the Survivor and Descendant Class members and the settlement is therefore approved.

Background

[7] To put these claims in context, I will touch briefly on the background of the Residential School system in Canada and the compensation provided by other settlements.

[8] In 1920, the Indian Act made it compulsory for “every Indian child” between the ages of 7 and 15 to attend a Residential School or other federally established school. Residential Schools remained in operation for many decades in Canada with the last Residential School not closing until 1997.

[9] In keeping with that timeframe, the class period for this proceeding is 1920 to 1997.

[10] Many students who attended Residential Schools also resided there; however, there were thousands of Day Scholars who attended those same schools but returned home each day. For most Day Scholars, the Residential School was located within their community.

[11] In 2006, the Indian Residential Schools Settlement Agreement (IRSSA) was reached between Canada, Residential School Survivors, and various Church Entities (Canada (Attorney General) v Fontaine, 2017 SCC 47 at para 5). As part of the IRSSA, survivors who resided at Residential Schools were eligible for a Common Experience Payment (CEP), in the amount of $10,000 for one school year, and $3,000 for any subsequent school year. In addition, those who suffered sexual abuse and/or serious physical abuse – whether they resided at the Residential School or not – could apply for compensation through an Individual Assessment Process (IAP).

[12] In addition to Residential Schools, there were also Indian Day Schools that were operated separately from Residential Schools. Students in these schools did not reside there full-time, but returned home each day. The Indian Day School Survivors were excluded from the IRSSA and a class action was started on their behalf in 2009. The Court approval of the Day School Survivors class action settlement is reported at McLean v Canada, 2019 FC 1075 [McLean].

[13] The Day Scholars of Residential Schools, remained unrecognized by both the IRSSA and McLean Settlement. Although the Day Scholars could apply for the IAP portion of the IRSSA if they suffered sexual abuse or serious physical abuse, they were not eligible for the CEP.

[14] The background to this class proceeding is best explained in Plaintiffs' Counsel's written submissions as follows:

20. Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc ("Tk'emlúps", also known as "Kamloops Indian Band" or "Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc Indian Band") and shíshálh Nation ("shíshálh", also known as "Sechelt Indian Band" or "shíshálh Band") are two of the First Nations which had Residential Schools on their reserve lands, and consequently had a large number of community members who attended as Day Scholars. The exclusion of Day Scholars from the CEP portion of IRSSA, and the corresponding lack of recognition for the common experiences of Day Scholars at Residential Schools, caused significant anger and frustration in these First Nations. In late 2010, the then-Chiefs of those First Nations (Shane Gottfriedson and Garry Feshuk, respectively), decided that their Nations would come together to fight on behalf of Day Scholars, including by retaining a legal team of experienced class action and Aboriginal law lawyers to consider legal options.

[15] In 2012, this class proceeding was filed on behalf of the Day Scholars for relief described as follows in Plaintiffs' Counsel's written submissions:

22. With regard to the Survivor and Descendant Classes, the focus of this lawsuit is on remedying the gap that was left by IRSSA – specifically, seeking recognition and compensation on behalf of the Survivor and Descendant Classes for the loss of Indigenous language and culture which they endured as a result of the forced attendance of Survivor Class Members at Residential Schools. The core claims in the Plaintiffs' pleading are that the purpose, operation and management of the Residential Schools destroyed Survivor and Descendant Class Members' language and culture, and violated their cultural and linguistic rights.

[16] After the filing of this class proceeding, Canada aggressively defended the claim. Prior to certification, Canada brought a number of procedural motions, including a Motion to stay the action pursuant to s. 50.1 of the Federal Courts Act. Canada also Motioned to bring third party claims against a number of Church Entities for contribution and indemnity, and took the position that the Federal Court did not have jurisdiction over these third party claims. The Motion and an appeal from the Motion were unsuccessful. After the Plaintiffs amended their claim to only seek “several” liability against Canada and not any damages for which the Church Entities might be liable, Canada responded by filing third party claims against five religious organizations. These claims were struck by Justice Harrington.

[17] In 2015, the Certification Motion in this action was contested by Canada necessitating a 4-day hearing. During the hearing, Canada took the following positions: the claims disclosed no reasonable cause of action; the class definitions were overbroad; the proposed common issues were not capable of class-wide determination; the claims were time-barred; and the claims were released pursuant to the IRSSA general release and the release signed by Survivor Class members who accessed the IAP.

[18] In April 2019, Canada filed an Amended Statement of Defence, in which they raised a number of the same defences raised at the Certification Motion. Canada argued that there was no breach of any fiduciary, statutory, constitutional or common law duties owed to the members, and that Canada did not breach the Aboriginal Rights of the members. Canada also argued that there was no private law duty of care to protect members from intentional infliction of mental distress, or if there was, they did not breach it. Further, Canada argued that any damages suffered by the plaintiffs were not caused by Canada.

[19] In keeping with the Calls to Action outlined in the Truth and Reconciliation Report, Canada's litigation strategy evolved. In the spirit of reconciliation, the parties undertook intensive settlement negotiations in 2019. When those negotiations failed, the parties pressed forward with the litigation. The common issues trial was scheduled to begin on September 7, 2021 and continue for 74 days.

[20] On June 4, 2021, the parties negotiated the proposed settlement agreement of the Survivor Class and Descendant Class claims.

[21] By order of this Court, on June 10, 2021, the parties undertook a notice campaign to provide details of the proposed settlement to class members.

Motion for Approval

[22] On this Motion for approval of the settlement agreement, the parties have filed the following Affidavits:

- Affidavit of Charlotte Anne Victorine Gilbert, representative plaintiff for the Survivor Class, sworn on August 23, 2021;
- Affidavit of Diena Marie Jules, representative plaintiff for the Survivor Class, sworn on August 23, 2021;
- Affidavit of Daphne Paul, representative plaintiff for the Survivor Class, sworn on August 23, 2021;
- Affidavit of Darlene Matilda Bulpit, representative plaintiff for the Survivor Class, sworn on August 23, 2021;
- Affidavit of Rita Poulsen, representative plaintiff for the Descendant Class, sworn on August 23, 2021;
- Affidavit of Amanda Deanne Big Sorrel Horse, representative plaintiff for the Descendant Class, sworn on August 23, 2021;

- Affidavit of Peter Grant, co-class counsel, sworn on August 25, 2021 (attaching the Affidavit of Dr. John Milloy, Professor of History at Trent University, sworn on November 12, 2013);
- Affidavit of Martin Reiher, Assistant Deputy Minister of the Resolution and Partnerships Sector of the Department of Crown-Indigenous Relations and Northern Affairs Canada, sworn on August 12, 2021;
- Affidavit of Dr. Rita Aggarwala, an expert retained by class counsel for the purpose of providing an opinion to the Court on the estimated size of the Survivor Class, sworn on August 20, 2021;
- Affidavit of Joelle Gott, Partner in the Financial Advisory Services Group at Deloitte LLP, proposed Claims Administrator, sworn on August 25, 2021; and,
- Affidavit of Roanne Argyle of Argyle Communications, the court-appointed Notice Administrator, sworn on August 23, 2021.

[23] In addition to the above, the Court received a number of written submissions regarding the proposed settlement. During the settlement approval hearing, the Court heard oral submissions from 11 class members who openly expressed their views on the proposed settlement.

[24] Although the majority of those who expressed their views are in support of the proposed settlement, there are a number of class members who oppose the settlement. I will specifically address the objections to the settlement below.

Terms of the Settlement Agreement

[25] The full settlement agreement in both English and French as well as the applicable Schedules are included in the Motion Record.

[26] The objectives of the settlement are noted in the preamble at Clause E, as follows:

The Parties intend there to be a fair and comprehensive settlement of the claims of the Survivor Class and Descendant Class, and further desire the promotion of truth, healing, education, commemoration, and reconciliation. They have negotiated this Agreement with these objectives in mind.

[27] The compensation for individual Day Scholar claimants is outlined at paragraph 25.01 as follows:

Canada will pay the sum of ten thousand dollars ($10,000) as non-pecuniary general damages, with no reductions whatsoever, to each Claimant whose Claim is approved pursuant to the Claims Process.

[28] Those eligible to make a claim are Day Scholars who attended any of the Residential Schools listed in Schedule E for even part of a school year, so long as they have not already received compensation for that school year as part of the CEP or McLean Settlement.

[29] For Day Scholars who passed away after the May 30, 2005 cut-off date, but who would otherwise be eligible, one of their descendants will be eligible to make a claim for distribution to their estate. In total, the claim period will be open for 24 months. Canada will cover the costs of claims administration and the de novo reconsiderations for any denied claims. Class members will also be entitled to free legal services from class counsel for reconsideration claims. Canada does not have any right to seek reconsideration.

[30] There is no limit or cap on the number of payments that can be made, and no amounts for legal fees or administration costs can or will be deducted from the payments.

[31] The claims process is described at paragraph 35.01 as follows:

The Claims Process is intended to be expeditious, cost-effective, user-friendly, culturally sensitive, and trauma-informed. The intent is to minimize the burden on the Claimants in pursuing their Claims and to mitigate any likelihood of re-traumatization through the Claims Process. The Claims Administrator and Independent Reviewer shall, in the absence of reasonable grounds to the contrary, assume that a Claimant is acting honestly and in good faith. In considering an Application, the Claims Administrator and Independent Reviewer shall draw all reasonable and favourable inferences that can be drawn in favour of the Claimant.

[32] The creation of the Day Scholars Revitalization Fund is outlined at paragraph 21.01 as follows:

Canada agrees to provide the amount of fifty million dollars ($50,000,000.00) to the Day Scholars Revitalization Fund, to support healing, wellness, education, language, culture, heritage and commemoration activities for the Survivor Class Members and Descendant Class Members.

[33] The purpose and operation of the fund is described at paragraph 22.01 as:

The Parties agree that the Day Scholars Revitalization Society will use the Fund to support healing, wellness, education, language, culture, and commemoration activities for the Survivor Class Members and the Descendant Class Members. The monies for the Fund shall be held by the Day Scholars Revitalization Society, which will be established as a “not for profit” entity under the British Columbia Societies Act, S.B.C. 2015, c. 18 or analogous federal legislation or legislation in any of the provinces or territories prior to the Implementation Date, and will be independent of the Government of Canada, although Canada shall have the right to appoint one representative to the Society Board of Directors.

[34] If the settlement agreement is approved by the Court, Canada will be released from liability relating to the Survivor Class and Descendant Class members claims regarding their attendance at Residential Schools. However, the terms of the settlement agreement are completely without prejudice to the ongoing litigation of the Band Class claims.

[35] The Parties request that Deloitte LLP be appointed as the Claims Administrator. Deloitte is also the court-appointed Claims Administrator in the McLean Settlement.

Analysis

[36] Rule 334.29 of the Federal Court Rules, SOR/98-106 provides that class proceedings may only be settled with the approval of a judge. The applicable test is “whether the settlement is fair and reasonable and in the best interests of the class as a whole” (Merlo v Canada, 2017 FC 533 at para 16 [Merlo]).

[37] The Court considers whether the settlement is reasonable, not whether it is perfect (Châteauneuf v Canada, 2006 FC 286 at para 7; Merlo, at para 18). Likewise, the Court only has the power to approve or to reject the settlement; it cannot modify or alter the settlement (Merlo, at para 17; Manuge v Canada, 2013 FC 341 at para 5).

[38] The factors to be considered in assessing the overall reasonableness of the proposed settlement are outlined in a number of cases (see: Condon v Canada, 2018 FC 522 at para 19; Fakhri et al v Alfalfa's Canada, Inc cba Capera, 2005 BCSC 1123 at para 8) and include the following:

- a. Likelihood of recovery or likelihood of success;
- b. The amount and nature of discovery, evidence or investigation;
- c. Settlement terms and conditions;
- d. Future expense and likely duration of litigation;
- e. Recommendations of neutral parties;
- f. Number of objectors and nature of objections;
- g. Presence of good faith bargaining and the absence of collusion;
- h. Communications with class members during litigation; and,
- i. Recommendations and experience of counsel.

[39] In addition to the above considerations, as noted in McLean (para 68), the proposed settlement must be considered as a whole and it is not open to the Court to rewrite the substantive terms of the settlement or assess the interests of individual class members in isolation from the whole class.

[40] I will now consider these factors in relation to the proposed settlement in this case.

a. Likelihood of recovery or likelihood of success

[41] This class proceeding raises novel and complex legal issues. It is one of the few actions in Canada advancing a claim for the loss of Indigenous language and culture. Advancing novel claims is a significant challenge, and success was far from certain. Recovery of damages on such claims was even more of a challenge. Layered onto this is the inherent challenge of litigating claims for historical wrongs.

[42] When this class proceeding was filed, the likelihood of the success was uncertain. The exclusion of these claimants from the IRSSA and McLean Settlement foretold Canada's position on the viability of these claims. Canada aggressively argued against certification, and after certification, Canada advanced a number of defences including limitation defences and claims that the IRSSA releases were a complete bar to these claims. Canada denied any breach of fiduciary, statutory, constitutional or common law duties to the class members, and denied any breach of Aboriginal Rights. Success for Canada on any of these defences would mean no recovery for class members.

[43] As well, the potential liability of the Church Entities who were involved in the Residential Schools posed significant liability and evidentiary challenges.

[44] The passage of time and the historic nature of these claims is also a factor for consideration. Historic documentary evidence is difficult to amass, and the first-hand evidence from Day Scholars themselves was being lost with each passing year. Since the filing of the action, two of the Representative Plaintiffs have passed away as have a number of Survivor Class members. The risk of losing more class members increases the longer this litigation continues.

[45] The settlement agreement provides certainty, recovery, and closure for the Survivor Class and the Descendant Class members. These results could not be guaranteed if the litigation were to proceed.

b. The amount and nature of discovery, evidence or investigation

[46] The settlement agreement was reached a few months before the September 2021 common issues trial was scheduled to begin. A great deal of work had been undertaken to prepare this matter for trial. Documentary disclosure was largely complete with Canada having disclosed some 120,000 documents throughout 2020. The parties had retained experts. Examinations of Representative Plaintiffs and examinations for discovery in writing and orally had taken place. Pre-trial examinations were scheduled for March and April 2021.

[47] As this proceeding was trial ready, class counsel had reviewed thousands of pages of documentary evidence and had the benefit of expert opinions. This allowed class counsel to approach settlement discussions with a clear understanding of the challenges they would face in proving the asserted claims.

c. Settlement terms and conditions

[48] The settlement agreement provides for a $10,000 Day Scholar Compensation Payment for eligible Survivor Class member or, where an eligible Survivor Class member has passed away, their Descendants. Schedule E to the Agreement lists the Residential Schools which had, or may have had, Day Scholars. Any Survivor who attended a school listed in Schedule E, even if for part of the year, will be eligible for a compensation payment, provided they have not already received compensation as part of the McLean Settlement or IRSSA. A lengthy claim period of 21 plus 3 months and the limited 45-day timeframe within which Canada must assess claims provides flexibility to claimants while ensuring speedy resolution of their claims.

[49] Importantly, within the claims process, there is a presumption in favour of compensation and the process has been designed to avoid re-traumatization. No evidence and no personal narrative is required to make a claim. There is also a low burden of proof to establish a claim. As well, there is a simplified process for persons with a disability. This process is distinct from that of the IAP, which has been criticized for the re-victimization of survivor claimants (Fontaine v Canada (Attorney General), 2018 ONSC 103 at para 202).

[50] The settlement also includes a $50,000,000 Day Scholars Revitalization Fund. This fund provides for Indigenous led initiatives to support healing, wellness, education, language, culture, heritage and commemoration activities for the Survivor Class members and Descendant Class members. This is a significant feature of the settlement agreement, and it is uncertain if the Court could provide such a remedy as part of the common issues trial or otherwise (McLean at para 103).

[51] The legal fees payable to class counsel, which is the subject of a separate Order of this Court, were negotiated after the proposed settlement agreement. The legal fees agreement is not conditional upon the settlement agreement being approved. This “de-linking” of the agreements is important as it ensured that the issue of legal fees did not inform or influence the terms of the settlement agreement. As well, legal fees are not payable from the settlement funds. Therefore, there is no risk of depleting the funds available to class members.

d. Future expense and likely duration of litigation

[52] As noted, the common issues trial was scheduled to start in September 2021 and continue for 74 days. If the settlement agreement is not approved, a lengthy trial will be necessary and appeals are likely. The Survivor Class members are elderly. Two of the Representative Plaintiffs, Violet Gottfriedson and Frederick Johnson, passed away since litigation commenced, as have a number of class members. Given the nearly decade-long history of this action, as well as the novelty of the claims, the future expense and duration of litigation should the settlement not be approved is likely to be substantial and lengthy.

e. Recommendations of neutral parties

[53] In support of this Motion, class counsel re-submitted the Affidavit of Dr. John Milloy, an expert historian who provided evidence at the Certification Motion. Dr. Milloy is the author of A National Crime, a report on the Residential School system. Dr. Milloy outlined the Schools’ purpose as “the eradication of the children’s’ traditional ontology, their language, spirituality and their cultural practices”, and highlighted the inadequate conditions and standards of care in the Schools. Significantly, Dr. Milloy also opined on the impact of Residential Schools on Day Scholars, writing:

The impacts of residential schools on children were detrimental. Many lost their languages, belief systems and thus their connections to their communities. As a result, many have lived lives of considerable dysfunction, have found their way to other state institutions – prisons, mental hospitals and welfare services. Many survivor families have had their children taken from them by social service agencies. There is no reason to believe that the schools discriminated in their treatment of students between day students and resident students; all would have experienced Canada's attempt to extinguish their identities.

[54] The Court also has an Affidavit from Dr. Rita Aggarwala attaching her report titled Estimating the Number of Day Scholars who Attended Canada's Indian Residential Schools. Although Dr. Aggarwala notes concerns about the quality of the data she had access to for the purposes of her statistical analysis, she did provide estimates which are of assistance in understanding the order of magnitude of this settlement. Dr. Aggarwala estimates the class size of Day Scholars who attended Residential Schools from 1920 to 1997 and were alive as of 2005 to be approximately 15,484. Based upon this number, Dr. Aggarwala estimates the total value of the settlement of the Survivor Class claim, based upon a funding formula of $10,000 per survivor, to be approximately $154,484,000.

f. Number of objectors and nature of objections

[55] In advance of the hearing, class counsel filed 45 statements from class members of which 24 were objections. At the settlement approval hearing, the Court also heard oral submissions from 6 members objecting to the settlement.

[56] Those speaking against the proposed settlement provided moving and emotionally raw statements about their experiences at Residential Schools. Many made reference to the recent discovery of the bodies of young children within the school grounds as reopening the painful wounds left by the tragic legacy of Residential Schools. Their pain is real and it is palpable. The Court heard members of the Survivor Class explain how their souls were destroyed at the Residential Schools. They mourn the loss of their language, their culture, their spirit, and their pride. Survivors spoke about how the school was the centre of the community – and as a result of the treatment they received they lost both their community and their core identity. Some spoke about the opportunities lost without a proper education.

[57] Members of the Descendant Class spoke about the intergenerational trauma, the pain and dysfunction suffered by their parents and grandparents, and the resulting loss of meaningful family relationships and loss of cultural identity.

[58] Unsurprisingly, the common theme running through the objections is that a payment of $10,000 is simply not enough to compensate for the harms endured and the losses suffered. However, as acknowledged by almost all who spoke, putting a dollar value on the losses suffered is an impossible task. Some of those objecting to the $10,000 payment argued that any settlement should offer at least the same compensation levels as those offered through the IRSSA and the McLean Settlement.

[59] While it is understandable that class members compare the compensation offered by this settlement with that offered in the IRSSA and the McLean Settlement such a comparison fails to recognize the key difference in the actions. The claims advanced in this class action are for loss of language and culture. The IRSSA and the McLean Settlement addressed claims for sexual and physical abuse.

[60] In any event, the $10,000 payment to Day Scholars in this settlement agreement is comparable with the IRSSA and McLean compensation models. In the IRSSA, class members were eligible for a CEP of $10,000 for the first school year, and $3,000 for each additional school year. In McLean compensation was based on grid or levels of harm. The range of the grid was from $10,000 for Level 1 claims, to $200,000 for Level 5, with the higher levels of compensation for those who suffered repeated and persistent sexual abuse or serious physical abuse.

[61] The Class Representative Plaintiffs who have been involved in the litigation throughout, overwhelmingly support the settlement. Their support of the settlement is compelling. They have shouldered the burden of moving these claims forward and have had to relive their own trauma by recounting their Residential School experiences. They did this for the benefit of all class members who now, because of the terms of the settlement, will not be required to do so.

[62] Overall, when assessing the reasonableness of the proposed settlement, the Court must consider the interests of all class members, estimated to be over 15,000, as against the risks and benefits of having this class action proceed to trial.

[63] I have considered the objections voiced at the hearing as well as the written objections filed. The objections were primarily focused on the inadequacy of the settlement amount. All while acknowledging that no amount of money can right the wrongs or replace that which has been lost. However, what is certain is that continuing with this litigation will require class members to re-live the trauma for many years to come, against the risk and the uncertainty of litigation. Bringing closure to this painful past has real value which cannot be underestimated.

[64] I acknowledge that the settlement of a class proceeding will never be perfectly suited to the needs of each person within the class, however, considering the obstacles that were overcome to reach this settlement, I am satisfied that this settlement agreement is in the best interests of the Survivor Class and the Descendant Class.

[65] Finally, I commend the lawyers for designing a claims process that protects class members against having to re-live the trauma in order to establish a claim for compensation.

g. Presence of good faith and absence of collusion

[66] This action has been ongoing since 2012. It was not until 2017 that the parties first undertook serious settlement discussions. At that time, exploratory discussions were held between class counsel and the Minister's Special Representative (MSR). The Parties met on ten occasions. In March 2017, class counsel forwarded a settlement framework to Canada. Settlement negotiations continued into 2018, and the parties engaged in several rounds of judicial dispute resolution. Unfortunately, a settlement was not reached at that time and the parties prepared to proceed to trial.

[67] On March 4, 2021, the MSR delivered a new settlement offer to class counsel. This ultimately became the settlement agreement that was signed in June 2021 and which is now before the Court for approval.

[68] I am satisfied the parties engaged in good faith negotiations throughout and there is no collusion.

h. Communications with class members during litigation

[69] Following the public announcement of the proposed settlement on June 9, 2021, class members were contacted pursuant to a Court approved 2-month Notice Plan. The methods used to communicate the settlement agreement with potential class members included media advertisements, a website, community outreach kits, outreach to national and regional journalists, 6 information webinars, and a “Justice for Day Scholars” Facebook group.

[70] Settlement notices were provided in English, French, James Bay Cree, Plains Cree Ojibwe, Mi’kmaq, Inuktitut, and Dene. Class counsel advises that hundreds of class members made contact by phone, email and mail, and that class counsel responded to all inquiries.

[71] Notice of the settlement agreement was also provided to provincial and territorial public guardians and trustees by letter, and to provincial and territorial provincial health insurers by letter. Finally, notice of the settlement agreement was provided to the Assembly of First Nations (AFN), all AFN Regional Chiefs, and a number of other leaders of Indigenous governance organizations.

[72] I am satisfied that a robust, clear and accessible notice of the proposed settlement was provided to potential class members.

i. Recommendations and experience of counsel

[73] Class counsel are experienced in class actions litigation and in Aboriginal law. They have first hand experience with the IRSSA and were specifically sought out to act on this class proceeding. They wholly recommend this settlement agreement, which, in their opinion, addresses the Representative Plaintiffs' objectives.

Conclusion

[74] For the above reasons, I have concluded that the settlement agreement is fair, reasonable, and in the best interests of the Survivor Class and Descendant Class. I echo the comments of Justice Phelan in McLean where he states at para 3: "It is not possible to take the pain and suffering away and heal the bodies and spirits, certainly not in this proceeding. The best that can be done is to have a fair and reasonable settlement of the litigation."

[75] I therefore approve the settlement agreement.

[76] With the approval of the settlement agreement, the claims of the Survivor and Descendant Class members against Canada will be dismissed with prejudice and without costs.

[77] Deloitte LLP is appointed as the Claims Administrator, as defined in the settlement agreement, to carry out the duties assigned to that role.

[78] The Certification Order of Justice Harrington will be amended as requested and the Plaintiffs are granted leave to file an Amended Statement of Claim in the form attached to the Plaintiffs' Notice of Motion.

ORDER IN T-1542-12THIS COURT ORDERS that:

1. The Settlement Agreement dated June 4, 2021 and attached as Schedule “A” is fair and reasonable and in the best interests of the Survivor and Descendant Classes, and is hereby approved pursuant to Rule 334.29(1) of the Federal Courts Rules, SOR/98-106, and shall be implemented in accordance with its terms;
2. The Settlement Agreement, is binding on all Canada and all Survivor Class Members and Descendant Class Members, including those persons who are minors or are mentally incapable, and any claims brought on behalf of the estates of Survivor and Descendant Class Members;
3. The Survivor Class and Descendant Class Claims set out in the First Re-Amended Statement of Claim, filed June 26, 2015, are dismissed and the following releases and related Orders are made and shall be interpreted as ensuring the conclusion of all Survivor and Descendant Class claims, in accordance with sections 42.01 and 43.01 of the Settlement Agreement as follows:
 - a. each Survivor Class Member or, if deceased, their estate (hereinafter “Survivor Releasor”), has fully, finally and forever released Canada, her servants, agents, officers and employees, from any and all actions, causes of action, common law, Quebec civil law and statutory liabilities, contracts, claims, and demands of every nature or kind available, asserted for the Survivor Class in the First Re-Amended Statement of Claim filed June 26, 2015, in the Action or that could have been asserted by any of the Survivor Releasors as individuals in any civil action, whether known or unknown, including for damages, contribution, indemnity, costs, expenses, and interest which any such Survivor Releasor ever had, now has, or may hereafter have due to their attendance as a Day Scholar at any Indian Residential School at any time;

- b. each Descendant Class Member or, if deceased, their estate (hereinafter “Descendant Releasor”), has fully, finally and forever released Canada, her servants, agents, officers and employees, from any and all actions, causes of action, common law, Quebec civil law and statutory liabilities, contracts, claims, and demands of every nature or kind available, asserted for the Descendant Class in the First Re-Amended Statement of Claim filed June 26, 2015, in the Action or that could have been asserted by any of the Descendant Releasors as individuals in any civil action, whether known or unknown, including for damages, contribution, indemnity, costs, expenses, and interest which any such Descendant Releasor ever had, now has, or may hereafter have due to their respective parents’ attendance as a Day Scholar at any Indian Residential School at any time;
- c. all causes of actions/claims asserted by, and requests for pecuniary, declaratory or other relief with respect to the Survivor Class Members and Descendant Class Members in the First Re-Amended Statement of Claim filed June 26, 2015, are dismissed on consent of the Parties without determination on their merits, and will not be adjudicated as part of the determination of the Band Class claims;

- d. Canada may rely on the above-noted releases as a defence to any lawsuit that purports to seek compensation from Canada for the claims of the Survivor Class and Descendant Class as set out in the First Re-Amended Statement of Claim;
- e. for additional certainty, however, the above releases and this Approval Order will not be interpreted as if they release, bar or remove any causes of action or claims that Band Class Members may have in law as distinct legal entities or as entities with standing and authority to advance legal claims for the violation of collective rights of their respective Aboriginal peoples, including to the extent such causes of action, claims and/or breaches of rights or duties owed to the Band Class are alleged in the First Re-Amended Statement of Claim filed June 26, 2015, even if those causes of action, claims and/or breaches of rights or duties are based on alleged conduct towards Survivor Class Members or Descendant Class Members set out elsewhere in either of those documents;
- f. each Survivor Releasor and Descendant Releasor is deemed to agree that, if they make any claim or demand or take any action or proceeding against another person, persons, or entity in which any claim could arise against Canada for damages or contribution or indemnity and/or other relief over, whether by statute, common law, or Quebec civil law, in relation to allegations and matters set out in the Action, including any claim against provinces or territories or other legal entities or groups, including but not limited to religious or other institutions that were in any way involved with Indian Residential Schools, the Survivor Releasor or Descendant Releasor will expressly limit their claim so as to exclude any portion of Canada's responsibility;

8. The Claims Administrator shall facilitate the claims administration process, and report to the Court and the Parties in accordance with the terms of the Settlement Agreement.
9. No person may bring any action or take any proceeding against the Claims Administrator or any of its employees, agents, partners, associates, representatives, successors or assigns for any matter in any way relating to the Settlement Agreement, the implementation of this Order or the administration of the Settlement Agreement and this Order, except with leave of this Court.
10. Prior to the Implementation Date, the Parties will move for approval of the form and content of the Claim Form and Estate Claim Form.
11. Prior to the Implementation Date, the Parties will identify and propose an Independent Reviewer or Independent Reviewers for Court appointment.
12. Class Counsel shall report to the Court on the administration of the Settlement Agreement. The first report will be due six (6) months after the Implementation Date and no less frequently than every six (6) months thereafter, subject to the Court requiring earlier reports, and subject to Class Counsel's overriding obligation to report as soon as reasonable on any matter which has materially impacted the implementation of the terms of the Settlement Agreement.
13. The Certification Order of Justice Harrington, dated June 18, 2015, will be amended as requested.

14. The Plaintiffs are granted leave to amend the First Re-Amended Statement of Claim in the form attached hereto.

15. There will be no costs of this motion.

and

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN IN RIGHT OF CANADA

DEFENDANT

DAY SCHOLARS SURVIVOR AND DESCENDANT CLASS SETTLEMENT AGREEMENT

WHEREAS:

A. Canada and certain religious organizations operated Indian Residential Schools for the education of Indigenous children, in which children suffered harms.

B. On May 8, 2006, Canada entered into the Indian Residential Schools Settlement Agreement, which provided for compensation and other benefits, including the Common Experience Payment, in relation to attendance at Indian Residential Schools.

C. On August 15, 2012, the Plaintiffs filed a putative class action in the Federal Court of Canada bearing Court File No. T-1542-12, Gottfriedson et al. v. Her Majesty the Queen in Right of Canada (the “Action”). An Amended Statement of Claim was filed on June 11, 2013, and a First Re-Amended Statement of Claim was filed on June 26, 2015.

D. The Action was certified as a class proceeding by order of the Federal Court dated June 18, 2015, on behalf of three subclasses: the Survivor Class, the Descendant Class, and the Band Class.

E. The Parties intend there to be a fair and comprehensive settlement of the claims of the Survivor Class and Descendant Class, and further desire the promotion of truth, healing, education, commemoration, and reconciliation. They have negotiated this Agreement with these objectives in mind.

F. Subject to the Settlement Approval Order, the claims of the Survivor Class Members and Descendant Class Members shall be settled on the terms contained in this Agreement.

G. The Parties intend that the claims of the Band Class shall continue, notwithstanding the settlement of the claims of the Survivor Class and Descendant Class, and intend that this Agreement shall not prejudice the rights of the Parties in the continued litigation of the Band Class Members’ claims in the Action.

NOW THEREFORE in consideration of the mutual agreements, covenants, and undertakings set out herein, the Parties agree as follows:

INTERPRETATION & EFFECTIVE DATE

1. Definitions

1.01 In this Agreement, the following definitions apply:

“Aboriginal” or “Aboriginal Person” means a person whose rights are recognized and affirmed by the Constitution Act, 1982, s. 35;

“Action” means the certified class proceeding bearing Court File No. T-1542-12, Gottfriedson et al. v. Her Majesty the Queen in Right of Canada;

“Agreement” means this settlement agreement, including the schedules attached hereto;

“Approval Date” means the date the Court issues its Approval Order;

“Approval Order” means the order or orders of the Court approving this Agreement;

“Settlement Agreement Notice Plan” means the Notice Plan advising Survivor Class Members and Descendant Class Members of the Agreement; “Settlement Approval Notice Plan” means the Notice Plan advising Survivor Class Members and Descendant Class Members of the Approval Order.

“Survivor Class” means all Aboriginal Persons who attended as a student or for educational purposes for any period at an Indian Residential School during the Class Period, excluding, for any individual class member, such periods of time for which that class member received compensation by way of the Common Experience Payment under the IRSSA;

“Survivor Class Member” means an individual who falls within the definition of the Survivor Class and is not an Opt Out; and “Ultimate Claims Deadline” means the date which is three (3) months after the Claims Deadline.

2. No Admission of Liability or Fact

- 2.01 This Agreement shall not be construed as an admission by Canada, nor a finding by the Court, of any fact within, or liability by Canada for any of the claims asserted in the Plaintiffs’ claims and/or pleadings in the Action as they are currently worded in the First Re-Amended Statement of Claim, were worded in previous versions, or may be worded in the future.
- 2.02 For greater certainty, and without limiting the foregoing, the Parties agree that, in the further litigation of the Band Class claims, the Parties will not argue that the existence of this Agreement or any terms herein are admissions by the Parties, or findings by the Court, of any fact or law, or an admission of liability by Canada, relevant to the claims asserted by the Band Class in the Action, or a settlement or resolution of the Band Class claims in the Action. Nothing in the above, however, or anything found elsewhere in this Agreement prevents the Parties from referring to or otherwise relying on the existence of the Agreement and the compensation paid or payable under it in any proceeding, if relevant.

3. Headings

- 3.01 The division of this Agreement into paragraphs, the use of headings, and the appending of Schedules are for convenience of reference only and do not affect the construction or interpretation of this Agreement.

4. Extended Meanings

- 4.01 In this Agreement, words importing the singular number include the plural and vice versa, words importing any gender include all genders, and words importing persons include individuals, partnerships, associations, trusts, unincorporated organizations, corporations, and governmental authorities. The term "including" means "including without limiting the generality of the foregoing".

5. No Contra Proferentem

- 5.01 The Parties acknowledge that they have reviewed and participated in settling the terms of this Agreement and they agree that any rule of construction to the effect that any ambiguity is to be resolved against the drafting Parties is not applicable in interpreting this Agreement.

6. Statutory References

- 6.01 In this Agreement, unless something in the subject matter or context is inconsistent therewith or unless otherwise herein provided, a reference to any statute is to that statute as enacted on the date thereof or as the same may from time to time have been amended, re-enacted, or replaced, and includes any regulations made thereunder.

7. Day for Any Action

- 7.01 Where the time on or by which any action required to be taken hereunder expires or falls on a day that is not a Business Day, such action may be done on the next succeeding day that is a Business Day.

8. Final Order

- 8.01 For the purpose of this Agreement, a judgment or order becomes final when the time for appealing or seeking leave to appeal the judgment or order has expired without an appeal being taken or leave being sought or, in the event that an appeal is taken or leave to appeal is sought, when such appeal or leave to appeal and such further appeals as may be taken have been disposed of and the time for further appeal, if any, has expired.

9. Currency

- 9.01 All references to currency herein are to lawful money of Canada.

10. Compensation Inclusive

- 10.01 The amounts payable under this Agreement are inclusive of any pre-judgment or post-judgment interest or other amounts that may be claimed by Survivor Class Members or Descendant Class Members against Canada arising out of the Released Claims.

11. Schedules

11.01 The following Schedules to this Agreement are incorporated into and form part of this Agreement:

Schedule A: First Re-Amended Statement of Claim, filed June 26, 2015

Schedule B: Certification Order, dated June 18, 2015

Schedule C: Claims Process

Schedule D: Estate Claims Process

Schedule E: Lists of Indian Residential Schools for Claims Process

Schedule F: Day Scholars Revitalization Fund Distribution Plan

Schedule G: Draft Amended Certification Order (re: Band Class claims)

Schedule H: Draft Second Re-Amended Statement of Claim, draft without delineations of prior or currently proposed amendments (re: Band Class claims)

12. No Other Obligations

12.01 All actions, causes of action, liabilities, claims, and demands whatsoever of every nature or kind for damages, contribution, indemnity, costs, expenses, and interest which any Survivor Class Member or Descendant Class Member ever had, now has, or may hereafter have arising in relation to the Action against Canada, whether such claims were made or could have been made in any proceeding, will be finally settled based on the terms and conditions set out in this Agreement upon the date of the Approval Order, and Canada will have no further liability except as set out in this Agreement.

13. Entire Agreement

13.01 This Agreement constitutes the entire agreement among the Parties with respect to the Survivor Class and Descendant Class claims asserted in the Action and cancels and supersedes any prior or other understandings and agreements between or among the Parties with respect thereto. There are no representations, warranties, terms, conditions, undertakings, covenants or collateral agreements, express, implied, or statutory between or among the Parties with respect to the subject matter hereof other than as expressly set forth or referred to in this Agreement.

14. Benefit of the Agreement

14.01 This Agreement will enure to the benefit of and be binding upon the Parties, the Survivor Class Members, the Descendant Class Members, and their respective heirs, estates, Designated Representatives and Personal Representatives.

15. Band Class Claim

15.01 Nothing in this Agreement is intended to, or does prejudice the rights of the Parties in the continued litigation of the Band Class claims in the Action.

15.02 The Band Class claims that will continue are set out in the Draft Amended Certification Order (re: Band Class claims), attached as Schedule G and the Draft Second Re-Amended Statement of Claim (re: Band Class claims), attached as Schedule H.

16. Applicable Law

16.01 This Agreement will be governed by and construed in accordance with the laws of the province or territory where the Survivor Class Member or Descendant Class Member resides and the laws of Canada applicable therein.

17. Counterparts

17.01 This Agreement may be executed in any number of counterparts, each of which will be deemed to be an original and all of which taken together will be deemed to constitute one and the same Agreement.

18. Official Languages

18.01 Canada will prepare a French translation of this Agreement for use at the settlement approval hearing before the Court. As soon as practicable after the execution of this Agreement, Canada will arrange for the preparation of an authoritative French version. The French version shall be of equal weight and force at law.

19. Date When Binding and Effective

19.01 This Agreement will become binding and effective on and after the Implementation Date on the Parties and all Survivor Class Members and Descendant Class Members. The Approval Order of the Court constitutes deemed approval of this Agreement by all Survivor Class Members and Descendant Class Members.

20. Effective in Entirety

20.01 None of the provisions of this Agreement will become effective unless and until the Court approves this Agreement.

THE DAY SCHOLARS REVITALIZATION FUND

21. The Day Scholars Revitalization Fund

21.01 Canada agrees to provide the amount of fifty million dollars ($50,000,000.00) to the Day Scholars Revitalization Fund, to support healing, wellness, education, language, culture, heritage and commemoration activities for the Survivor Class Members and Descendant Class Members.

- 21.02 The monies described in section 21.01 herein will be paid by Canada to the Day Scholars Revitalization Society within thirty (30) days after the Implementation Date.

THE DAY SCHOLARS REVITALIZATION SOCIETY

22. Establishing the Day Scholars Revitalization Society

- 22.01 The Parties agree that the Day Scholars Revitalization Society will use the Fund to support healing, wellness, education, language, culture, and commemoration activities for the Survivor Class Members and the Descendant Class Members. The monies for the Fund shall be held by the Day Scholars Revitalization Society, which will be established as a “not for profit” entity under the British Columbia Societies Act, S.B.C. 2015, c. 18 or analogous federal legislation or legislation in any of the provinces or territories prior to the Implementation Date, and will be independent of the Government of Canada, although Canada shall have the right to appoint one representative to the Society Board of Directors.
- 22.02 A draft Day Scholars Revitalization Fund Plan is attached as Schedule F.
- 22.03 The Fund is intended to benefit the Survivor Class Members and Descendant Class Members and to complement and not duplicate any federal government programs.

23. Directors

- 23.01 The Society will have five first directors, to be appointed by the Parties.
- 23.02 The Board of the Society will have national representation and will include one director appointed by Canada. The representative appointed by Canada will not be an employee or public servant of Canada.

24. Responsibilities of Directors

- 24.01 The Society's Directors shall manage and/or supervise the management of the activities and affairs of the Day Scholars Revitalization Society, which will receive, hold, invest, manage, and disburse the monies described in the Fund provisions of this Agreement and any other monies transferred to the Fund under this Agreement for the purposes of funding healing, wellness, education, language, culture, heritage and commemoration activities for the Survivor Class Members and Descendant Class Members.

COMPENSATION FOR INDIVIDUAL CLAIMANTS

25. Day Scholar Compensation Payments

- 25.01 Canada will pay the sum of ten thousand dollars ($10,000) as non-pecuniary general damages, with no reductions whatsoever, to each Claimant whose Claim is approved pursuant to the Claims Process.
- 25.02 A Claimant is entitled to a Day Scholar Compensation Payment, and their Claim shall be approved, if the Claimant satisfies the following Eligibility Criteria:
- a. the Claim is made with respect to a Day Scholar who was alive on May 30, 2005;
 - b. the Claim is delivered to the Claims Administrator prior to the Ultimate Claims Deadline;
 - c. the Claim is made with respect to that Day Scholar's attendance at an Indian Residential School that is listed in Schedule E on either List 1 or List 2 during the time periods indicated therein, for any part of a specific School Year that meets all three of the following conditions, namely that it is a School Year for which the Day Scholar or their executor, representative, or heir who applied in place of the Day Scholar:

- i. has not received a Common Experience Payment under the IRSSA;
- ii. has not received and will not receive compensation under the McLean Settlement; and
- iii. has not received compensation under any other settlement with respect to a school listed on Schedule K to the McLean Settlement.

25.03 For greater clarity, for any School Year during which a Survivor Class Member was eligible for, but did not make a claim for the Common Experience Payment under the IRSSA, no Claim for a Day Scholar Compensation Payment under this Agreement may be made in regard to that Survivor Class Member for that School Year.

26. No Cap on Claims

26.01 There is no limit or cap on Canada's total obligation to pay approved Claims. All approved Claims will be paid fully by Canada.

27. Transfer of Monies by Canada

27.01 Canada will transfer monies directly to the Claims Administrator to provide for payment of approved Claims, in accordance with the Claims Process.

28. Social Benefits

28.01 Canada will make its best efforts to obtain the agreement of the provinces and territories that the receipt of any payments pursuant to this Agreement will not affect the quantity, nature, or duration of any social benefits or social assistance benefits payable to a Claimant pursuant to any legislation of any province or territory of Canada.

28.02 Further, Canada will make its best efforts to obtain the agreement of the necessary Departments of the Government of Canada that the receipt of any payments pursuant to this Agreement will not affect the quantity, nature or duration of any social benefits or social assistance benefits payable to a Claimant pursuant to any federal social benefit programs, including Old Age Security and Canada Pension Plan.

IMPLEMENTATION OF THIS AGREEMENT

29. The Action

- 29.01 The First Re-Amended Statement of Claim in the Action is attached as Schedule A.
- 29.02 The Parties agree that the Plaintiffs will seek leave of the Court, on consent and as part of the application for Court approval of this Agreement, to file the Draft Second Re-Amended Statement of Claim in the Action, which is attached as Schedule H.

30. Certification Order

- 30.01 The Certification Order is attached as Schedule B.
- 30.02 The Parties agree that the Plaintiffs will seek an Order from the Court, on consent and as part of the application for Court approval of this Agreement, issuing the Amended Certification Order, which is attached as Schedule G.

31. Notice Plans

- 31.01 The Parties agree that the Plaintiffs will seek an Order from the Court, on consent, approving a Settlement Agreement Notice Plan, whereby Survivor Class Members and Descendant Class Members will be provided with notice of the Agreement, its terms, how to obtain more information, and how to share their feedback in advance of, and during, the settlement approval hearing.

- 31.02 The Parties further agree that the Plaintiffs will seek an Order from the Court, on consent and as part of the application for Court approval of this Agreement, approving a Settlement Approval Notice Plan, which will provide Survivor Class Members and Descendant Class Members with notice of the Approval Order and how a Claim for compensation can be made.
- 31.03 Canada agrees to pay for the implementation of the Settlement Agreement Notice Plan and the Settlement Approval Notice Plan.

CLAIMS MADE BY PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES AND DESIGNATED REPRESENTATIVES

32. Compensation If Deceased

- 32.01 Where a Day Scholar has died on or after May 30, 2005, a Claim may be brought on behalf of the deceased Day Scholar's estate or heirs in accordance with the Estate Claims Process set out in Schedule D.

33. Person Under Disability

- 33.01 If a Day Scholar submits a Claim to the Claims Administrator prior to the Ultimate Claims Deadline and the Claim is approved but the Day Scholar is or becomes a Person Under Disability prior to their receipt of a Day Scholar Compensation Payment, that payment will be made to the Personal Representative of the Day Scholar.

34. Hold Harmless Agreement for Claims

- 34.01 Canada, the Claims Administrator, Class Counsel, and the Independent Reviewer, shall not be liable for, and will in fact be held harmless by Claimants, from any and all claims, counterclaims, suits, actions, causes of action, demands, damages, penalties, injuries, setoffs, judgments, debts, costs, expenses (including without limitation legal fees, disbursements, and expenses) or other liabilities of every character whatsoever by reason of or resulting from a payment or non-payment to a Personal Representative or Designated Representative pursuant to this Agreement and any order of the Court approving it.

CLAIMS PROCESS

35. Principles Governing Claims Administration

35.01 The Claims Process is intended to be expeditious, cost-effective, user-friendly, culturally sensitive, and trauma-informed. The intent is to minimize the burden on the Claimants in pursuing their Claims and to mitigate any likelihood of re-traumatization through the Claims Process. The Claims Administrator and Independent Reviewer shall, in the absence of reasonable grounds to the contrary, assume that a Claimant is acting honestly and in good faith. In considering an Application, the Claims Administrator and Independent Reviewer shall draw all reasonable and favourable inferences that can be drawn in favour of the Claimant.

36. Claims Process

36.01 The Claims Process is set out in Schedule C.

CLAIMS ADMINISTRATOR

37. Duties of the Claims Administrator

37.01 The Claims Administrator's duties and responsibilities include the following:

- a. developing, installing, and implementing systems, forms, information, guidelines and procedures for processing Claims in hard or electronic copy, in accordance with this Agreement;

- b. developing, installing, and implementing systems and procedures for making payments of Day Scholar Compensation Payments in accordance with this Agreement;
- c. providing personnel in such reasonable numbers as are required for the performance of its duties, and training and instructing them;
- d. keeping or causing to be kept accurate accounts of its activities and its administration, including preparing such financial statements, reports, and records as are required by the Court;
- e. reporting to the Parties on a monthly basis respecting Claims received and determined, and to which Indian Residential Schools the Claims relate;
- f. responding to enquiries respecting Claims, reviewing Claims, making decisions in respect of Claims, giving notice of its decisions in accordance with this Agreement, and providing information to Claimants regarding the reconsideration process as set out in the Claims Process;
- g. communicating with Claimants in either English or French, as the Claimant elects, and, if a Claimant expresses the desire to communicate in a language other than English or French, making best efforts to accommodate them; and
- h. such other duties and responsibilities as the Court may from time to time direct.

38. Appointment of the Claims Administrator

- 38.01 The Claims Administrator will be appointed by the Court on the recommendation of the Parties.

39. Duties of the Independent Reviewer

39.01 The role of the Independent Reviewer is to determine any request for reconsideration brought by a Claimant pursuant to the Claims Process set out in Schedule C. The Independent Reviewer(s) will be appointed by the Court on the recommendation of the Parties.

40. Costs of Claims Process

40.01 The costs of the Claims Process, including those of the Claims Administrator and the Independent Reviewer, will be paid by Canada.

41. Approval Order

41.01 The Parties agree that an Approval Order of this Agreement will be sought from the Court in a form to be agreed upon by the Parties and shall include the following provisions:

- a. incorporating by reference this Agreement in its entirety including all Schedules;
- b. ordering and declaring that the Order is binding on all Survivor Class Members and Descendant Class Members, including Persons Under Disability; and
- c. ordering and declaring that the Survivor Class and Descendant Class Claims set out in the First Re-Amended Statement of Claim, filed June 26, 2015, are dismissed, and giving effect to the releases and related clauses set out in sections 42.01 and 43.01 herein to ensure the conclusion of all Survivor Class and Descendant Class claims.

42. Conclusion of Survivor Class and Descendant Class Claims

42.01 The Approval Order sought from the Court will declare that:

- a. Each Survivor Class Member or, if deceased, their estate (hereinafter "Survivor Releasor"), has fully, finally and forever released Canada, her servants, agents, officers and employees, from any and all actions, causes of action, common law, Quebec civil law and statutory liabilities, contracts, claims, and demands of every nature or kind available, asserted for the Survivor Class in the First Re-Amended Statement of Claim filed June 26, 2015, in the Action or that could have been asserted by any of the Survivor Releasors as individuals in any civil action, whether known or unknown, including for damages, contribution, indemnity, costs, expenses, and interest which any such Survivor Releasor ever had, now has, or may hereafter have due to their attendance as a Day Scholar at any Indian Residential School at any time.
- b. Each Descendant Class Member or, if deceased, their estate (hereinafter "Descendant Releasor"), has fully, finally and forever released Canada, her servants, agents, officers and employees, from any and all actions, causes of action, common law, Quebec civil law and statutory liabilities, contracts, claims, and demands of every nature or kind available, asserted for the Descendant Class in the First Re-Amended Statement of Claim filed June 26, 2015, in the Action or that could have been asserted by any of the Descendant Releasors as individuals in any civil action, whether known or unknown, including for damages, contribution, indemnity, costs, expenses, and interest which any such Descendant Releasor ever had, now has, or may hereafter have due to their respective parents' attendance as a Day Scholar at any Indian Residential School at any time.
- c. All causes of actions/claims asserted by, and requests for pecuniary, declaratory or other relief with respect to the Survivor Class Members and Descendant Class Members in the First Re-Amended Statement of Claim filed June 26, 2015 are dismissed on consent of the Parties without determination on their merits, and will not be adjudicated as part of the determination of the Band Class claims.

- d. Canada may rely on the above-noted releases as a defence to any lawsuit that purports to seek compensation from Canada for the claims of the Survivor Class and Descendant Class as set out in the First Re-Amended Statement of Claim. For additional certainty, however, the above-noted releases and the Approval Order will not be interpreted as if they release, bar or remove any causes of action or claims that Band Class Members may have in law as distinct legal entities or as entities with standing and authority to advance legal claims for the violation of collective rights of their respective Aboriginal peoples, including to the extent such causes of action, claims and/or breaches of rights or duties owed to the Band Class are alleged in the First Re-Amended Statement of Claim filed June 26, 2015, even if those causes of action, claims and/or breaches of rights or duties are based on alleged conduct towards Survivor Class Members or Descendant Class Members set out elsewhere in either of those documents.
- e. Each Survivor Releasor and Descendant Releasor is deemed to agree that, if they make any claim or demand or take any action or proceeding against another person, persons, or entity in which any claim could arise against Canada for damages or contribution or indemnity and/or other relief over, whether by statute, common law, or Quebec civil law, in relation to allegations and matters set out in the Action, including any claim against provinces or territories or other legal entities or groups, including but not limited to religious or other institutions that were in any way involved with Indian Residential Schools, the Survivor Releasor or Descendant Releasor will expressly limit their claim so as to exclude any portion of Canada's responsibility.
- f. Upon a final determination of a Claim made under and in accordance with the Claims Process, each Survivor Releasor and Descendant Releasor is also deemed to agree to release the Parties, Class Counsel, counsel for Canada, the Claims Administrator, the Independent Reviewer, and any other party involved in the Claims Process, with respect to any claims that arise or could arise out of the application of the Claims Process, including but not limited to the sufficiency of the compensation received.

43. Deemed Consideration by Canada

43.01 Canada's obligations and liabilities under this Agreement constitute the consideration for the releases and other matters referred to in this Agreement and such consideration is in full and final settlement and satisfaction of any and all claims referred to therein and the Survivor Releasers and Descendant Releasers are limited to the benefits provided and compensation payable pursuant to this Agreement, in whole or in part, as their only recourse on account of any and all such actions, causes of actions, liabilities, claims, and demands.

LEGAL FEES AND DISBURSEMENTS

44. Class Counsel Fees and Disbursements

44.01 All legal fees and disbursements of Class Counsel, and the representative plaintiffs' proposed honoraria are the subject of the Fee Agreement, which is subject to review and approval by the Court.

44.02 Court approval of the Fee Agreement is separate and distinct from Court approval of this Agreement. In the event that the Court does not approve the Fee Agreement, in whole or in part, it will have no effect on the approval or implementation of this Agreement.

45. No Other Fees or Disbursements to Be Charged

45.01 The Parties agree that it is their intention that all payments to Survivor Class Members under this Agreement are to be made without any deductions on account of legal fees or disbursements.

TERMINATION AND OTHER CONDITIONS

46. Termination of Agreement

46.01 This Agreement will continue in full force and effect until all obligations under this Agreement are fulfilled and the Court orders that the Agreement is completed.

47. Amendments

47.01 Except as expressly provided in this Agreement, no amendment may be made to this Agreement, including the Schedules, unless agreed to by the Parties in writing and approved by the Court.

48. No Assignment

48.01 No amount payable under this Agreement can be assigned and any such assignment is null and void except as expressly provided for in this Agreement. Where a Day Scholar is deceased or is a Person Under Disability, payment for an approved Claim will be made to their Designated Representative or Personal Representative, respectively.

CONFIDENTIALITY

49. Confidentiality

49.01 Any information provided, created or obtained in the course of this settlement, whether written or oral, will be kept confidential by the Parties and Class Counsel, all Claimants, the Claims Administrator, and the Independent Reviewer and will not be used for any purpose other than this settlement unless otherwise agreed by the Parties, authorized by this Agreement or applicable federal, provincial or territorial privacy legislation, or ordered by the Court.

50. Destruction of Claimant Information and Records

- 50.01 Within two (2) years of completing the payments of compensation, the Claims Administrator will destroy all Claimant information and documentation in its possession, unless a Claimant, Designated Representative, or Personal Representative specifically requests the return of such information within the two (2) year period. Upon receipt of such request, the Claims Administrator will forward the Claimant information as directed.
- 50.02 Within two (2) years of rendering a reconsideration decision, the Independent Reviewer will destroy all Claimant information and documentation in their possession, unless a Claimant, Designated Representative, or Personal Representative specifically requests the return of such information within the two (2) year period. Upon receipt of such request, the Independent Reviewer will forward the Claimant information as directed.
- 50.03 Prior to destruction of the records, the Claims Administrator and Independent Reviewer shall create and provide to Canada a list showing the (i) Day Scholar, (ii) School Year(s) of attendance, and (iii) Indian Residential School(s), with respect to which each Day Scholar Compensation Payment was made. Notwithstanding anything else in this Agreement, this list must be retained by Canada in strict confidence and can only be used in a legal proceeding or settlement where it is relevant as demonstrating, which the Parties agree they will do without further proof, which individuals received the Day Scholar Compensation Payment for which School Year(s) and with regard to which Indian Residential School(s).

51. Confidentiality of Negotiations

- 51.01 Save as may otherwise be agreed between the Parties, the undertaking of confidentiality as to the discussions and all communications, whether written or oral, made in and surrounding the negotiations leading to the exchanges of letters of offer and acceptance, and this Agreement continues in force.

CO-OPERATION

52. Co-operation With Canada

52.01 Upon execution of this Agreement, the representative plaintiffs and Class Counsel will co-operate with Canada and make best efforts to obtain Court approval of this Agreement and make reasonable efforts to obtain the support and participation of Survivor Class Members and Descendant Class Members in all aspects of this Agreement.

53. Public Announcements

53.01 At the time agreed upon, the Parties will make public announcements in support of this Agreement and continue to speak publicly in favour of the Agreement

3. The Representative Plaintiffs of the Band Class claim:

- (a) ~~an Order certifying this proceeding as a Class Proceeding pursuant to the CPR and appointing them as Representative Plaintiffs for the Band Class;~~
- (b) a Declaration that the Sechelt Indian Band (referred to as the shishálh or shishálh band) and Tk'emlúps Band, and all members of the Band Class, have existing Aboriginal Rights ~~within the meaning of s. 35(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982~~ to speak their traditional languages and engage in their traditional customs and religious practices and to govern themselves in their traditional manner;
- (c) a Declaration that Canada owed and was in breach of fiduciary, constitutionally-mandated, statutory and common law duties as well as breaches of International Conventions and Covenants, and breaches of international law, to the Band Class members in relation to the purpose, establishment, funding, operation, supervision, control, maintenance, obligatory attendance of Survivor Class members at, and support of, the SIRS and the KIRS and other Identified Residential Schools;

- (d) a Declaration that the Residential Schools Policy and the KIRS, the SIRS and Identified Residential Schools caused Cultural, Linguistic and Social Damage and irreparable harm to the Band Class;
- (e) a Declaration that Canada was or is in breach of the Band Class members' linguistic and cultural rights, (Aboriginal Rights or otherwise), as well as breaches of International Conventions and Covenants, and breaches of international law, as a consequence of its establishment, funding, operation, supervision, control and maintenance, and obligatory attendance of Survivor Class members at and support of the Residential Schools Policy, and the Identified Residential Schools; Aboriginal Rights;
- (f) a Declaration that Canada is liable to the Band Class members for the damages caused by its breach of fiduciary, constitutionally-mandated, statutory and common law duties and Aboriginal Rights as well as breaches of International Conventions and Covenants, and breaches of international law, in relation to the purpose, establishment, funding, operation, supervision, control and maintenance, and obligatory attendance of Survivor Class members at and support of the Identified Residential Schools;
- (g) non-pecuniary and pecuniary general damages and special damages for breach of fiduciary, constitutionally-mandated, statutory and common law duties and Aboriginal Rights, as well as breaches of International Conventions and Covenants, and breaches of international law, including amounts to cover the ongoing cost of care and development of wellness plans for individual members of the bands in the Band Class, as well as the costs of restoring, protecting and preserving the linguistic and cultural heritage of the Bands for which Canada is liable;
- (h) the construction of healing centres in the Band Class communities by Canada;
- (i) exemplary and punitive damages for which Canada is liable;
- (j) pre-judgment and post-judgment interest;
- (k) the costs of this action; and
- (l) such further and other relief as this Honourable Court may deem just.

18. The Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc Indian Band and the shíshálh band are "bands" as defined by the Act and they both ~~propose to~~ act as Representative Plaintiffs for the Band Class. The Band Class members represent the collective interests and authority of each of their respective communities.

19. The individual Plaintiffs and the proposed Survivor and Descendant Class members are largely members of the shishálh band and Tk'emlúps Indian Band, and members of Canada's First Nations and/or are the sons and daughters of members of these Aboriginal collectives. The individual Plaintiffs and Survivor and Descendant Class members are Aboriginal Persons within the meaning of the Constitution Act, 1982, s. 35.

The Defendant

20. Canada is represented in this proceeding by the Attorney General of Canada. The Attorney General of Canada represents the interests of Canada and the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Canada and predecessor Ministers who were responsible for “Indians” under s.91(24) of the Constitution Act, 1867, and who were, at all material times, responsible for the formation and implementation of the Residential Schools Policy, and the maintenance and operation of the KIRS and the SIRS.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

21. Over the course of the last several years, Canada has acknowledged the devastating impact of its Residential Schools Policy on Canada's Aboriginal Peoples. Canada's Residential Schools Policy was designed to eradicate Aboriginal culture and identity and assimilate the Aboriginal Peoples of Canada into Euro-Canadian society. Through this policy, Canada ripped away the foundations of identity for generations of Aboriginal People and caused incalculable harm to both individuals and communities.

22. The direct beneficiary of the Residential Schools Policy was Canada as its obligations would be reduced in proportion to the number, and generations, of Aboriginal Persons who would no longer recognize their Aboriginal identity and would reduce their claims to rights under the Act and Canada's fiduciary, constitutionally-mandated, statutory and common law duties.

23. Canada was also a beneficiary of the Residential Schools Policy, as the policy served to weaken the claims of Aboriginal Peoples to their traditional lands and resources. The result was a severing of Aboriginal People from their cultures, traditions and ultimately their lands and resources. This allowed for exploitation of those lands and resources by Canada, not only without Aboriginal Peoples' consent but also, contrary to their interests, the Constitution of Canada and the Royal Proclamation of 1763.

24. The truth of this wrong and the damage it has wrought has now been acknowledged by the Prime Minister on behalf of Canada, and through the pan-Canadian settlement of the claims of those who resided at Canada's Residential Schools by way of the Agreement implemented in 2007. Notwithstanding the truth and acknowledgement of the wrong and the damages caused, many members of Canada's Aboriginal communities were excluded from the Agreement, not because they did not attend Residential Schools and suffer Cultural, Linguistic and Social Damage, but simply because they did not reside at Residential Schools.

25. This claim is on behalf of the members of the Survivor Class, namely those who attended ~~an Identified~~ Residential School for the Cultural, Linguistic and Social Damage occasioned by that attendance, as well as on behalf of the Descendant Class, who are the first generation descendants of those within the Survivor Class, and the Band Class, consisting of the Aboriginal communities within which the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools were situated, or whose members belong to and within which the majority of the Survivor and Descendant Class members live.

26. The claims of the ~~proposed~~ Representative Plaintiffs are for the harm done to the Representative Plaintiffs as a result of members of the Survivor Class attending the KIRS and the SIRS and being exposed to the operation of the Residential Schools Policy and do not include the claims arising from residing at the KIRS or the SIRS for which specific compensation has been paid under the Agreement. This claim seeks compensation for the victims of that policy whose claims have been ignored by Canada and were excluded from the compensation in the Agreement.

The Residential School System

27. Residential Schools were established by Canada prior to 1874, for the education of Aboriginal Children. Commencing in the early twentieth century, Canada began entering into formal agreements with various religious organizations (the “Churches”) for the operation of Residential Schools. Pursuant to these agreements, Canada controlled, regulated, supervised and directed all aspects of the operation of Residential Schools. The Churches assumed the day-to-day operation of many of the Residential Schools under the control, supervision and direction of Canada, for which Canada paid the Churches a per capita grant. In 1969, Canada took over operations directly.

28. As of 1920, the Residential Schools Policy included compulsory attendance at Residential Schools for all Aboriginal Children aged 7 to 15. Canada removed most Aboriginal Children from their homes and Aboriginal communities and transported them to Residential Schools which were often long distances away. However, in some cases, Aboriginal Children lived in their homes and communities and were similarly required to attend Residential Schools as day students and not residents. This practice applied to even more children in the later years of the Residential Schools Policy. While at Residential School, all Aboriginal Children were confined and deprived of their heritage, their support networks and their way of life, forced to adopt a foreign language and a culture alien to them and punished for non-compliance.

29. The purpose of the Residential Schools Policy was the complete integration and assimilation of Aboriginal Children into the Euro-Canadian culture and the obliteration of their traditional language, culture, religion and way of life. Canada set out and intended to cause the Cultural, Linguistic and Social Damage which has harmed Canada's Aboriginal Peoples and Nations. ~~In addition to the inherent cruelty of the~~ As a result of Canada's requirements for the forced attendance of the Survivor Class members under the Residential Schools Policy itself, many children attending Residential Schools were also subject to spiritual, physical, sexual and emotional abuse, all of which continued until the year 1997, when the last Residential School was closed.

30. Canada chose to be disloyal to its Aboriginal Peoples, implementing the Residential Schools Policy in its own self-interest, including economic self-interest, and to the detriment and exclusion of the interests of the Aboriginal Persons to whom Canada owed fiduciary and constitutionally-mandated duties. The intended eradication of Aboriginal identity, culture, language, and spiritual practices ~~and religion~~, to the extent successful, results in the reduction of the obligations owed by Canada in proportion to the number of individuals, over generations, who would no longer identify as Aboriginal and who would be less likely to make claims to their rights as Aboriginal Persons.

The Effects of the Residential Schools Policy on the Class Members

Tk'emlúps Indian Band

31. Tk'emlúpsəmc, 'the people of the confluence', now known as the Tk'emlúps te Secwépəmc Indian Band are members of the northernmost of the Plateau People and of the Interior-Salish Secwépəmc (Shuswap) speaking peoples of British Columbia. The Tk'emlúps Indian Band was established on a reserve now adjacent to the City of Kamloops, where the KIRS was subsequently established. Most, if not all, of the students who attended, but did not reside at the KIRS were or are members of the Tk'emlúps Indian Band, resident or formerly resident on the reserve.

32. Secwepemctsin is the language of the Secwépəmc, and it is the unique means by which the cultural, ecological, and historical knowledge and experience of the Secwépəmc people is understood and conveyed between generations. It is through language, spiritual practices and passage of culture and traditions including their rituals, drumming, dancing, songs and stories, that the values and beliefs of the Secwépəmc people are captured and shared. From the Secwépəmc perspective all aspects of Secwépəmc knowledge, including their culture, traditions, laws and languages, are vitally and integrally linked to their lands and resources.

33. Language, like the land, was given to the Secwépəmc by the Creator for communication to the people and to the natural world. This communication created a reciprocal and cooperative relationship between the Secwépəmc and the natural world which enabled them to survive and flourish in harsh environments. This knowledge, passed down to the next generation orally, contained the teachings necessary for the maintenance of Secwépəmc culture, traditions, laws and identity.

34. For the Secwépəmc, their spiritual practices, songs, dances, oral histories, stories and ceremonies were an integral part of their lives and societies. These practices and traditions are absolutely vital to maintain. Their songs, dances, drumming and traditional ceremonies connect the Secwépemc to their land and continually remind the Secwépemc of their responsibilities to the land, the resources and to the Secwépemc people.

35. Secwépemc ceremonies and spiritual practices, including their songs, dances, drumming and passage of stories and history, perpetuate their vital teachings and laws relating to the harvest of resources, including medicinal plants, game and fish, and the proper and respectful protection and preservation of resources. For example, in accordance with Secwépemc laws, the Secwépemc sing and pray before harvesting any food, medicines, and other materials from the land, and make an offering to thank the Creator and the spirits for anything they take. The Secwépemc believe that all living things have spirits and must be shown utmost respect. It was these vital, integral beliefs and traditional laws, together with other elements of Secwépemc culture and identity, that Canada sought to destroy with the Residential Schools Policy.

Shishálh band

36. The shishálh Nation, a division of the Coast Salish First Nations, originally occupied the southern portion of the lower coast of British Columbia. The shishálh People settled the area thousands of years ago, and occupied approximately 80 village sites over a vast tract of land. The shishálh People are made up of four sub-groups that speak the language of Shashishalhem, which is a distinct and unique language, although it is part of the Coast Salish Division of the Salishan Language.

37. Shishálh tradition describes the formation of the shishálh world (Spelmulh story). Beginning with the creator spirits, who were sent by the Divine Spirit to form the world, they carved out valleys leaving a beach along the inlet at Porpoise Bay. Later, the transformers, a male raven and a female mink, added details by carving trees and forming pools of water.

38. The shishálh culture includes singing, dancing and drumming as an integral part of their culture and spiritual practices, a connection with the land and the Creator and passing on the history and beliefs of the people. Through song and dance the shishálh People would tell stories, bless events and even bring about healing. Their songs, dances and drumming also signify critical seasonal events that are integral to the shishálh. Traditions also include making and using masks, baskets, regalia and tools for hunting and fishing. It was these vital, integral beliefs and traditional laws, together with other elements of the shishálh culture and identity, that Canada sought to destroy with the Residential Schools Policy.

The Impact of the ~~Identified~~ Residential schools

39. For all of the Aboriginal Children who were compelled to attend the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools, rigid discipline was enforced as per the Residential Schools Policy. While at school, children were not allowed to speak their Aboriginal language, even to their parents, and thus members of these Aboriginal communities were forced to learn English.

40. Aboriginal culture was strictly suppressed by the school administrators in compliance with the policy directives of Canada including the Residential Schools Policy. At the SIRS, ~~converts to Catholicism~~ members of shishalh were forced to burn or give to the agents of Canada centuries-old totem poles, regalia, masks and other "paraphernalia of the medicine men" and to abandon their potlatches, dancing and winter festivities, and other elements integral to the Aboriginal culture and society of the shishálh and Secwépemc peoples.

41. Because the SIRS was physically located in the shíshálh community, ~~the church~~ and Canada's government eyes, both directly and through its Agents, were upon the elders and they were punished severely for practising their culture or speaking their language or passing this on to future generations. In the midst of that scrutiny, the Class members struggled, often unsuccessfully, to practice, protect and preserve their songs, masks, dancing or other cultural practices

42. The Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc suffered a similar fate due to their proximity to the KIRS.

43. The children at the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools were ~~indoctrinated into Christianity~~, and taught to be ashamed of their Aboriginal identity, culture, spirituality and practices. They were referred to as, amongst other derogatory epithets, “dirty savages” and “heathens” and taught to shun their very identities. The Class members’ Aboriginal way of life, traditions, cultures and spiritual practices were supplanted with the Euro-Canadian identity imposed upon them by Canada through the Residential Schools Policy.

44. This implementation of the Residential Schools Policy further damaged the Survivor Class members of the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools, who returned to their homes at the end of the school day and, having been taught in the school that the traditional teachings of their parents, grandparents and elders were of no value and, in some cases, “heathen” practices and beliefs, would dismiss the teachings of their parents, grandparents and elders.

45. The assault on their traditions, laws, language and culture through the implementation of the Residential Schools Policy by Canada, directly and through its

Agents, has continued to undermine the individual Survivor Class members, causing a loss of self-esteem, depression, anxiety, suicidal ideation, suicide, physical illnesses without clear causes, difficulties in parenting, difficulties in maintaining positive relationships, substance abuse and violence, among other harms and losses, all of which has impacted the Descendant Class.

46. The Band Class members have lost, in whole or in part, their traditional economic viability, self-government and laws, language, land base and land-based teachings, traditional spiritual practices and religious practices, and the integral sense of their collective identity.

47. The Residential Schools Policy, delivered through the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools, wrought cultural, linguistic and social devastation on the communities of the Band Class and altered their traditional way of life.

Canada's Settlement with Former Residential School Residents

48. From the closure of the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools ~~in the 1970's~~ until the late 1990's, Canada's Aboriginal communities were left to battle the damages and suffering of their members as a result of the Residential Schools Policy, without any acknowledgement from Canada. During this period, Residential School survivors increasingly began speaking out about the horrible conditions and abuse they suffered, and the dramatic impact it had on their lives. At the same time, many survivors committed suicide or self-medicated to the point of death. The deaths devastated not only the members of the Survivor Class and the Descendant Class, but also the life and stability of the communities represented by the Band Class.

49. In January 1998, Canada issued a Statement of Reconciliation acknowledging and apologizing for the failures of the Residential Schools Policy. Canada admitted that the Residential Schools Policy was designed to assimilate Aboriginal Persons and that it was wrong to pursue that goal. The Plaintiffs plead that the Statement of Reconciliation by Canada is an admission by Canada of the facts and duties set out herein and is relevant to the Plaintiffs' claim for damages, particularly punitive damages.

50. The Statement of Reconciliation stated, in part, as follows:

Sadly, our history with respect to the treatment of Aboriginal people is not something in which we can take pride. Attitudes of racial and cultural superiority led to a suppression of Aboriginal culture and values. As a country we are burdened by past actions that resulted in weakening the identity of Aboriginal peoples, suppressing their languages and cultures, and outlawing spiritual practices. We must recognize the impact of these actions on the once self sustaining nations that were disaggregated, disrupted, limited or even destroyed by the dispossession of traditional territory, by the relocation of Aboriginal people, and by some provisions of the Indian Act. We must acknowledge that the results of these actions was the erosion of the political, economic and social systems of Aboriginal people and nations.

Against the backdrop of these historical legacies, it is a remarkable tribute to the strength and endurance of Aboriginal people that they have maintained their historic diversity and identity. The Government of Canada today formally expresses to all Aboriginal people in Canada our profound regret for past actions of the Federal Government which have contributed to these difficult pages in the history of our relationship together.

One aspect of our relationship with Aboriginal people over this period that requires particular attention is the Residential School System. This system separated many children from their families and communities and prevented them from speaking their own languages and from learning about their heritage and cultures. In the worst cases, it left legacies of personal pain and distress that continued to reverberate in Aboriginal communities to this date. Tragically, some children were the victims of physical and sexual abuse.

The Government of Canada acknowledges the role it played in the development and administration of these schools. Particularly to those individuals who experienced the tragedy of sexual and physical abuse at Residential Schools, and who have carried this burden believing that in some way they must be responsible, we wish to emphasize that what you experienced was not your fault and should never have happened. To those of you who suffered this tragedy at Residential Schools, we are deeply sorry. In dealing with the legacies of the Residential School program, the Government of Canada proposes to work with First Nations, Inuit, Metis people, the Churches and other interested parties to resolve the longstanding issues that must be addressed. We need to work together on a healing strategy to assist individuals and communities in dealing with the consequences of this sad era of our history...

Reconciliation is an ongoing process. In renewing our partnership, we must ensure that the mistakes which marked our past relationship are not repeated. The Government of Canada recognizes that policies that sought to assimilate Aboriginal people, women and men, were not the way to build a strong community...

51. On or about May 10, 2006, Canada entered into the Agreement to provide compensation primarily to those who resided at Residential Schools.

52. The Agreement provides for two types of individualized compensation: the Common Experience Payment ("CEP") for the fact of having resided at a Residential School, and compensation based upon an Independent Assessment Process ("IAP"), to provide compensation for certain abuses suffered and harms these abuses caused.

53. The CEP consisted of compensation for former residents of a Residential School in the amount of $10,000 for the first school year or part of a school year and a further $3,000 for each subsequent school year or part of a school year of residence at a Residential School. The CEP was payable based upon residence at a Residential School out of a recognition that the experience of assimilation was damaging and worthy of compensation, regardless of whether a student experienced physical, sexual or other abuse while at the Residential School.

Compensation for the latter was payable through the IAP. The CEP was available only to former residents of a Residential School while, in some cases, the IAP was available not only to former residents but also other young people who were lawfully on the premises of a Residential School, including former day students.

54. The implementation of the Agreement represented the first time Canada agreed to pay compensation for Cultural, Linguistic and Social Damage. Canada refused to incorporate compensation for members of the Survivor Class, namely, those students who attended the ~~Identified Residential Schools, or other~~ Residential Schools, but who did not reside there.

55. The Agreement was approved by provincial and territorial superior courts from British Columbia to Quebec, and including the Northwest Territories, Yukon Territory and Nunavut, and the Agreement was implemented beginning on September 20, 2007.

56. On June 11, 2008, Prime Minister Stephen Harper on behalf of Canada, delivered an apology (“Apology”) that acknowledged the harm done by Canada’s Residential Schools Policy:

For more than a century, Indian Residential Schools separated over 150,000 Aboriginal children from their families and communities. In the 1870's, the federal government, partly in order to meet its obligation to educate Aboriginal children, began to play a role in the development and administration of these schools. Two primary objectives of the Residential Schools system were to remove and isolate children from the influence of their homes, families, traditions and cultures, and to assimilate them into the dominant culture. These objectives were based on the assumption Aboriginal cultures and spiritual beliefs were inferior and unequal. Indeed, some sought, as it was infamously said, "to kill the Indian in the child". Today, we recognize that this policy of assimilation was wrong, has caused great harm, and has no place in our country. [emphasis added]

57. In this Apology, the Prime Minister made some important acknowledgments regarding the Residential Schools Policy and its impact on Aboriginal Children:

The Government of Canada built an educational system in which very young children were often forcibly removed from their homes, often taken far from their communities. Many were inadequately fed, clothed and housed. All were deprived of the care and nurturing of their parents, grandparents and communities. First Nations, Inuit and Métis languages and cultural practices were prohibited in these schools. Tragically, some of these children died while attending residential schools and others never returned home.

The government now recognizes that the consequences of the Indian Residential Schools policy were profoundly negative and that this policy has had a lasting and damaging impact on Aboriginal culture, heritage and language.

The legacy of Indian Residential Schools has contributed to social problems that continue to exist in many communities today.

We now recognize that it was wrong to separate children from rich and vibrant cultures and traditions, that it created a void in many lives and communities, and we apologize for having done this. We now recognize that, in separating children from their families, we undermined the ability of many to adequately parent their own children and sowed the seeds for generations to follow, and we apologize for having done this. We now recognize that, far too often, these institutions gave rise to abuse or neglect and were inadequately controlled, and we apologize for failing to protect you. Not only did you suffer these abuses as children, but as you became parents, you were powerless to protect your own children from suffering the same experience, and for this we are sorry.

The burden of this experience has been on your shoulders for far too long. The burden is properly ours as a Government, and as a country. There is no place in Canada for the attitudes that inspired the Indian Residential Schools system to ever prevail again. You have been working on recovering from this experience for a long time and in a very real sense, we are now joining you on this journey. The Government of Canada sincerely apologizes and asks the forgiveness of the Aboriginal peoples of this country for failing them so profoundly.

58. Notwithstanding the Apology and the acknowledgment of wrongful conduct by Canada, as well as the call for recognition from Canada's Aboriginal communities and from the Truth and Reconciliation Commission in its Interim Report of February 2012, the exclusion of the Survivor Class from the Agreement by Canada reflects Canada's continued failure to members of the Survivor Class. Canada continues, as it did from the 1970s until 2006 with respect to 'residential students', to deny the damage suffered by the individual Plaintiffs and the members of the Survivor, Descendant and Band Classes.

Canada's Breach of Duties to the Class Members

59. From the formation of the Residential Schools Policy to its execution in the form of forced attendance at the Identified Residential Schools, Canada utterly failed the Survivor Class members, and in so doing, destroyed the foundations of the individual identities of the Survivor Class members, stole the heritage of the Descendant Class members and caused incalculable losses to the Band Class members.

60. The Survivor Class members, Descendant Class members and Band Class members have all been affected by family dysfunction, a crippling or elimination of traditional ceremonies, and a loss of the hereditary governance structure which allowed for the ability to govern their peoples and their lands.

61. While attending the Identified Residential School the Survivor Class members were utterly vulnerable, and Canada owed them the highest fiduciary, moral, statutory, constitutionally-mandated and common law duties, which included, but were not limited to, the duty to protect Aboriginal Rights and prevent Cultural, Linguistic and Social Damage. Canada breached these duties, and failed in its special responsibility to ensure the safety and well-being of the Survivor Class while at the Identified Residential Schools.

Canada's Duties

62. Canada was responsible for developing and implementing all aspects of the Residential Schools Policy, including carrying out all operational and administrative aspects of Residential Schools. While the Churches were often used as Canada's Agents to assist Canada in carrying out its objectives, those objectives and the manner in which they were carried out were the obligations of Canada. Canada was responsible for:

- (a) the administration of the Act and its predecessor statutes as well as all other statutes relating to Aboriginal Persons and all Regulations promulgated under these Acts and their predecessors during the Class Period;
- (b) the management, operation and administration of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and its predecessors and related Ministries and Departments, as well as the decisions taken by those ministries and departments;
- (c) the construction, operation, maintenance, ownership, financing, administration, supervision, inspection and auditing of the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools and for the creation, design and implementation of the program of education for Aboriginal Persons in attendance;
- (d) the selection, control, training, supervision and regulation of the operators of the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools, including their employees, servants, officers and agents, and for the care and education, control and well being of Aboriginal Persons attending the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools;
- (e) preserving, promoting, maintaining and not interfering with Aboriginal Rights, including the right to retain and practice their culture, spirituality, language and traditions and the right to fully learn their culture, spirituality, language and traditions from their families, extended families and communities; and
- (f) the care and supervision of all members of the Survivor Class while they were in attendance at the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools during the Class Period.

63. Further, Canada has at all material times committed itself to honour international law in relation to the treatment of its people, which obligations form minimum commitments to Canada's Aboriginal Peoples, including the Survivor, Descendant and Band Classes, and which have been breached. In particular, Canada's breaches include the failure to comply with the terms and spirit of:

{01447063.2}

- (a) the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, 78 U.N.T.S. 277, entered into force Jan. 12, 1951., and in particular Article 2(b), (c) and (e) of that convention, by engaging in the intentional destruction of the culture of Aboriginal Children and communities, causing profound and permanent cultural, psychological, emotional and physical injuries to the Class;
- (b) the Declaration of the Rights of the Child (1959) G.A. res. 1386 (XIV), 14 U.N. GAOR Supp. (No. 16) at 19, U.N. Doc. A/4354 by failing to provide Aboriginal Children with the means necessary for normal development, both materially and spiritually, and failing to put them in a position to earn a livelihood and protect them against exploitation;
- (c) the Convention on the Rights of the Child, GA res. 44/25, annex, 44 UN GAOR Supp. (No. 49) at 167, U.N. Doc. A/44/49 (1989); 1577 UNTS 3; 28 ILM 1456 (1989), and in particular Articles 29 and 30 of that convention, by failing to provide Aboriginal Children with education that is directed to the development of respect for their parents, their cultural identities, language and values, and by denying the right of Aboriginal Children to enjoy their own cultures, to profess and practise their own religions and to use their own languages;
- (d) the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, G.A. res. 2200A (XXI), 21 U.N. GAOR Supp. (No. 16) at 52, U.N. Doc. A/6316 (1966), 999 U.N.T.S. 171, entered into force Mar. 23, 1976, in particular Articles 1 and 27 of that convention, by interfering with Class members' rights to retain and practice their culture, spirituality, language and traditions, the right to fully learn their culture, spirituality, language and traditions from their families, extended families and communities and the right to teach their culture, spirituality, language and traditions to their own children, grandchildren, extended families and communities.
- (e) the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man, O.A.S. Res. XXX, adopted by the Ninth International Conference of American States (1948), reprinted in Basic Documents Pertaining to Human Rights in the Inter-American System, OEA/Ser.L.V//II.82 doc.6 rev.1 at 17 (1992), and in particular Article XIII, by violating Class members' right to take part in the cultural life of their communities.
- (f) the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, G.A. Res. 61/295, U.N. Doc. A/RES/61/295 (Sept. 13, 2007), 46 I.L.M. 1013 (2007), endorsed by Canada 12 November 2010, and in particular article 8, 2(d), which commits to the provision of effective mechanisms for redress for forced assimilation.

64. Canada's obligations under international law inform Canada's common law, statutory, fiduciary, constitutionally-mandated and other duties, and a breach of the aforementioned international obligations is evidence of, or constitutes, a breach under domestic law.

Breach of Fiduciary and Constitutionally-Mandated Duties

65. Canada has constitutional obligations to, and a fiduciary relationship with, Aboriginal People in Canada. Canada created, planned, established, set up, initiated, operated, financed, supervised, controlled and regulated the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools and established the Residential Schools Policy. Through these acts, and by virtue of the Constitution Act 1867, the Constitution Act, 1982, and the provisions of the Act, as amended, Canada assumed the power and obligation to act in a fiduciary capacity with respect to the education and welfare of Class members.

66. Canada's constitutional duties include the obligation to uphold the honour of the Crown in all of its dealings with Aboriginal Peoples, including the Class members. This obligation arose with the Crown's assertion of sovereignty from the time of first contact and continues through post-treaty relationships. This is and remains an obligation of the Crown and was an obligation on the Crown at all material times. The honour of the Crown is a legal principle which requires the Crown to operate at all material times in its relations with Aboriginal Peoples from contact to post-treaty in the most honourable manner to protect the interests of the Aboriginal Peoples.

67. Canada's fiduciary duties obliged Canada to act as a protector of Class members' Aboriginal Rights, including the protection and preservation of their language, culture and their way of life, and the duty to take corrective steps to restore the Plaintiffs' culture, history and status, or assist them to do so. At a minimum, Canada's duty to Aboriginal Persons included the duty not to deliberately reduce the number of the beneficiaries to whom Canada owed its duties.

68. Canada's fiduciary duties and the duties otherwise imposed by the constitutional mandate assumed by Canada extend to the Descendant Class because the purpose of the assumption of control over the Survivor Class education was to eradicate from those Aboriginal Children their culture and identity, thereby removing their ability, as adults, to pass on to succeeding generations the linguistic, spiritual, cultural and behavioural bases of their people, as well as to relate to their families and communities and, ultimately, their ability to identify themselves as Aboriginal Persons to whom Canada owed its duties.

69. The fiduciary and constitutional duties owed by Canada extend to the Band Class because the Residential Schools Policy was intended to, and did, undermine and seek to destroy the way of life established and enjoyed by these Nations whose identities were and are viewed as collective.

70. Canada acted in its own self-interest and contrary to the interests of Aboriginal Children, not only by being disloyal to, but by actually betraying the Aboriginal Children and communities whom it had a duty to protect. Canada wrongfully exercised its discretion and power over Aboriginal People, and in particular children, for its own benefit. The Residential Schools Policy was pursued by Canada, in whole or in part, to eradicate what Canada saw as the "Indian Problem". Namely, Canada sought to relieve itself of its moral and financial responsibilities for Aboriginal People, the expense and inconvenience of dealing with cultures, languages, habits and values different from Canada's predominant Euro-Canadian heritage, and the challenges arising from land claims.

71. In breach of its ongoing fiduciary, constitutionally-mandated, statutory and common law duties to the Survivor, Descendant and Band Classes, Canada failed, and continues to fail, to adequately remediate the damage caused by its wrongful acts, failures and omissions. In particular, Canada has failed to take adequate measures to ameliorate the Cultural, Linguistic and Social Damage suffered by the Survivor, Descendant and Band Classes, notwithstanding Canada's admission of the wrongfulness of the Residential Schools Policy since 1998.

Breach of Aboriginal Rights

72. The shíshálh and Tk'emlúps people, and indeed all members of the Band Class, from whom the individual Plaintiffs have descended have exercised laws, customs and traditions integral to their distinctive societies prior to contact with Europeans. In particular, and from a time prior to contact with Europeans, these Nations have sustained their individual members, communities and distinctive cultures by speaking their languages and practicing their customs and traditions.

73. During the time when Survivor Class members attended the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools, in compliance with the Residential Schools Policy, they were taught to speak English, were punished for using their traditional languages and were made ashamed of their traditional language and way of life. Consequently, by reason of the attendance at the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools, the Survivor Class members' ability to speak their traditional languages and practice their shíshálh, Tk'emlúps, and other, spiritual, religious and cultural activities was seriously impaired and, in some cases, lost entirely. These Class members were denied the ability to exercise and enjoy their Aboriginal Rights, both individually and in the context of their collective expression within the Bands, some particulars of which include, but are not limited to:

- (a) shíshálh, Tk'emlúps and other Aboriginal cultural, spiritual and traditional activities have been lost or impaired;

- (b) the traditional social structures, including the equal authority of male and female leaders have been lost or impaired;
- (c) the shishálh, Tk'emlúps and other Aboriginal languages have been lost or impaired;
- (d) traditional shishálh, Tk'emlúps and Aboriginal parenting skills have been lost or impaired;
- (e) shishálh, Tk'emlúps and other Aboriginal skills for gathering, harvesting, hunting and preparing traditional foods have been lost or impaired; and,
- (f) shishálh, Tk'emlúps and Aboriginal spiritual beliefs have been lost or impaired.

74. The interference in the Aboriginal Rights of the Survivor Class has resulted in that same loss being suffered by their descendants and communities, namely the Descendant and Band Classes, all of which was the result sought by Canada.

75. Canada had at all material times and continues to have a duty to protect the Class members' Aboriginal Rights, including the exercise of their spiritual practices and traditional protection of their lands and resources, and an obligation not to undermine or interfere with the individual Plaintiffs' and Class members' Aboriginal Rights. Canada has failed in these duties, without justification, through its Residential Schools Policy.

Intentional Infliction of Mental Distress

76. The design and implementation of the Residential Schools Policy as a program of assimilation to eradicate Aboriginal culture constituted flagrant, extreme and outrageous conduct which was plainly calculated to result in the Cultural, Social and Linguistic Damage, and the mental distress arising from that damage, which was actually suffered by the members of the Survivor and Descendant Classes.

Negligence giving rise to Spiritual, ~~Physical, Sexual,~~ Emotional and Mental Abuse

77. Through its Agents, Canada was negligent and in breach of its duties of care to the Survivor Class, particulars of which include, but are not limited to, the following:

- (a) it failed to adequately screen and select the individuals ~~to whom it delegated who it hired either directly or through its Agents~~ for the operation of the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools, to adequately supervise and control the operations of the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools, and to protect Aboriginal children from spiritual, ~~physical, sexual,~~ emotional and mental abuse at the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools, and as a result, such abuses did occur to Survivor Class members and Canada is liable for such abuses;
- (b) it failed to respond appropriately or at all to disclosure of abuses in the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools, and in fact, covered up such abuse and suppressed information relating to those abuses; and
- (c) it failed to recognize and acknowledge harm once it occurred, to prevent additional harm from occurring and to, whenever and to the extent possible, provide appropriate treatment to those who were harmed.

Vicarious Liability

78. Through its Agents, Canada breached its duty of care to the Survivor Class resulting in damages to the Survivor Class and is vicariously liable for all of the breaches and abuses committed on its behalf.

79. Further, or in the alternative, Canada is vicariously liable for the negligent performance of the fiduciary, constitutionally-mandated, statutory and common law duties of its Agents.

80. Additionally, the Plaintiffs hold Canada solely responsible for the creation and implementation of the Residential Schools Policy and, furthermore:

- a. The Plaintiffs expressly waive any and all rights they may possess to recover from Canada, or any other party, any portion of the Plaintiffs' loss that may be attributable to the fault or liability of any third-party and for which Canada might reasonably be entitled to claim from any one or more third-party for contribution, indemnity or an apportionment at common law, in equity, or pursuant to the British Columbia Negligence Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 333, as amended; and

- b. The Plaintiffs will not seek to recover from any party, other than Canada, any portion of their losses which have been claimed, or could have been claimed, against any third-parties.

Damages

81. As a consequence of the breach of fiduciary, constitutionally-mandated, statutory and common law duties, and the intentional infliction of mental distress and the breaches of Aboriginal Rights by Canada and its Agents, for whom Canada is vicariously liable, the Survivor Class members, including the Representative Plaintiffs, suffered injury and damages including:

- (a) loss of language, culture, spirituality, and Aboriginal identity;
- (b) emotional and psychological harm;
- (c) isolation from their family, community and Nation;
- (d) deprivation of the fundamental elements of an education, including basic literacy;
- (e) an impairment of mental and emotional health, in some cases amounting to a permanent disability;
- (f) an impaired ability to trust other people, to form or sustain intimate relationships, to participate in normal family life, or to control anger;
- (g) a propensity to addiction;
- (h) alienation from community, family, spouses and children;
- (i) an impaired ability to enjoy and participate in recreational, social, cultural, athletic and employment activities;
- (j) an impairment of the capacity to function in the work place and a permanent impairment in the capacity to earn income;
- (k) deprivation of education and skills necessary to obtain gainfully employment;
- (l) the need for ongoing psychological, psychiatric and medical treatment for illnesses and other disorders resulting from the Residential School experience;
- (m) sexual dysfunction;

(01447063.2)

- (n) depression, anxiety and emotional dysfunction;
- (o) suicidal tendencies;
- (p) pain and suffering;
- (q) loss of self-esteem and feelings of degradation, shame, fear and loneliness,;
- (r) nightmares, flashbacks and sleeping problems;
- (s) fear, humiliation and embarrassment as a child and adult;
- (t) sexual confusion and disorientation as a child and young adult;
- (u) impaired ability to express emotions in a normal and healthy manner;
- (v) loss of ability to participate in, or fulfill, cultural practices and duties;
- (w) loss of ability to live in their community and Nation; and
- (x) constant and intense emotional, psychological pain and suffering.

82. As a consequence of the breach of fiduciary, constitutionally-mandated, statutory and common law duties, and the intentional infliction of harm and breach of Aboriginal Rights by Canada and its Agents, for whom Canada is vicariously liable, the Descendant Class members, including the Representative Plaintiffs, suffered injury and damages including:

- (a) their relationships with Survivor Class members were impaired, damaged and distorted as a result of the experiences of Survivor Class members in the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools; and,
- (b) their culture and languages were undermined and in some cases eradicated by, amongst other things, as pleaded, the forced assimilation of Survivor Class members into Euro-Canadian culture through the operation of the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools.

83. As a consequence of the breach of fiduciary, constitutionally-mandated, statutory and common law duties, and the intentional infliction of harm and breach of Aboriginal Rights by Canada and its Agents, for whom Canada is vicariously liable, the Band Class has suffered from the loss of the ability to fully exercise their Aboriginal Rights collectively, including the right to have a traditional government based on their own languages, spiritual practices, traditional laws and practices and to have those traditions fully respected by the members of the Survivor and Descendant Classes and subsequent generations, all of which flowed directly from the individual losses of the Survivor Class and Descendant Class members' Cultural, Linguistic and Social Damage.

Grounds for Punitive and Aggravated Damages

84. Canada deliberately planned the eradication of the language, religion and culture of Survivor Class members and Descendant Class members, and the destruction of the Band Class. The actions were malicious and intended to cause harm, and in the circumstances punitive and aggravated damages are appropriate and necessary.

85. The Class members plead that Canada and its Agents had specific and complete knowledge of the widespread physical, psychological, emotional, cultural and sexual abuses of Survivor Class members that were occurring at the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools.

86. Despite this knowledge, Canada continued to operate the Residential Schools and took no steps, or in the alternative no reasonable steps, to protect the Survivor Class members from these abuses and the grievous harms that arose as a result. In the circumstances, the failure to act on that knowledge to protect vulnerable children in Canada's care amounts to a wanton and reckless disregard for their safety and renders punitive and aggravated damages both appropriate and necessary.

Legal Basis of Claim

87. The Survivor and Descendant Class members are Indians as defined by the Indian Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 1-5. The Band Class members are bands made up of Indians so defined.

{01447063.2}

88. The Class members' Aboriginal Rights existed and were exercised at all relevant times pursuant to the Constitution Act, 1982, s. 35, being Schedule B to the Canada Act 1982 (UK), 1982, c. 11.

89. At all material times, Canada owed the Plaintiffs and Class members a special and constitutionally-mandated duty of care, good faith, honesty and loyalty pursuant to Canada's constitutional obligations and Canada's duty to act in the best interests of Aboriginal People and especially Aboriginal Children who were particularly vulnerable. Canada breached those duties, causing harm.

90. The Class members descend from Aboriginal Peoples who have exercised their respective laws, customs and traditions integral to their distinctive societies prior to contact with Europeans. In particular, and from a time prior to contact with Europeans to the present, the Aboriginal Peoples from whom the Plaintiffs and Class members descend have sustained their people, communities and distinctive culture by exercising their respective laws, customs and traditions in relation to their entire way of life, including language, dance, music, recreation, art, family, marriage and communal responsibilities, and use of resources.

Constitutionality of Sections of the Indian Act

91. The Class members plead that any section of the Act and its predecessors and any Regulation passed under the Act and any other statutes relating to Aboriginal Persons that provide or purport to provide the statutory authority for the eradication of Aboriginal People through the destruction of their languages, culture, practices, traditions and way of life, are in violation of sections 25 and 35(1) of the Constitution Act 1982, sections 1 and 2 of the Canadian

Bill of Rights, R.S.C. 1985, as well as sections 7 and 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and should therefore be treated as having no force and effect.

92. Canada deliberately planned the eradication of the language, spirituality and culture of the Plaintiffs and Class members.

93. Canada's actions were deliberate and malicious and in the circumstances, punitive, exemplary and aggravated damages are appropriate and necessary.

94. The Plaintiffs plead and rely upon the following:

Federal Courts Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. F-7, s. 17;

Federal Courts Rules, SOR/98-106, Part 5.1 Class Proceedings;

Crown Liability and Proceedings Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-50, ss. 3, 21, 22, and 23;

Daphne Paul

For the Descendant Class:

Amanda Deanne Big Sorrel Horse

Rita Poulsen

For the Band Class:

Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc Indian Band

Sechelt Indian Band

c. The Nature of the Claims are:

Breaches of fiduciary and constitutionally mandated duties, breach of Aboriginal Rights, intentional infliction of mental distress, breaches of International Conventions and/or Covenants, breaches of international law, and negligence committed by or on behalf Canada for which Canada is liable.

d. The Relief claimed is as follows:

By the Survivor Class:

- i. a Declaration that Canada owed and was in breach of the fiduciary, constitutionally-mandated, statutory and common law duties to the Survivor Class Representative Plaintiffs and the other Survivor Class members in relation to the purpose, establishment, funding, operation, supervision, control, maintenance, obligatory attendance of Survivor Class members at, and support of, the Residential Schools;
- ii. a Declaration that members of the Survivor Class have Aboriginal Rights to speak their traditional languages, to engage in their traditional customs and religious practices and to govern themselves in their traditional manner;
- iii. a Declaration that Canada breached the linguistic and cultural rights (Aboriginal Rights or otherwise) of the Survivor Class;
- iv. a Declaration that the Residential Schools Policy and the Residential Schools caused Cultural, Linguistic and Social Damage and irreparable harm to the Survivor Class;
- v. a Declaration that Canada is liable to the Survivor Class Representative Plaintiffs and other Survivor Class members for the damages caused by its breach of fiduciary, constitutionally-mandated, statutory and common law duties, and Aboriginal Rights and for the intentional infliction of mental distress, as well as breaches of International Conventions and Covenants, and breaches of international law, in relation to the purpose, establishment, funding, operation, supervision, control and maintenance, and obligatory attendance of Survivor Class members at and support of the Residential Schools;

- vi. general damages for negligence, breach of fiduciary, constitutionally-mandated, statutory and common law duties, Aboriginal Rights and intentional infliction of mental distress, as well as breaches of International Conventions and Covenants, and breaches of international law, for which Canada is liable;
- vii. pecuniary damages and special damages for negligence, loss of income, loss of earning potential, loss of economic opportunity, loss of educational opportunities, breach of fiduciary, constitutionally-mandated, statutory and common law duties, Aboriginal Rights and for intentional infliction of mental distress, as well as breaches of International Conventions and Covenants, and breaches of international law including amounts to cover the cost of care, and to restore, protect and preserve the linguistic and cultural heritage of the members of the Survivor Class for which Canada is liable;
- viii. exemplary and punitive damages for which Canada is liable; and
- ix. pre-judgment and post-judgment interest and costs.

By the Descendant Class:

- i. a Declaration that Canada owed and was in breach of the fiduciary, constitutionally-mandated, statutory and common law duties owed to the Descendant Class Representative Plaintiffs and the other Descendant Class members in relation to the purpose, establishment, funding, operation, supervision, control, maintenance, obligatory attendance of Survivor Class members at, and support of, the Residential Schools;
- ii. a Declaration that the Descendant Class have Aboriginal Rights to speak their traditional languages, to engage in their traditional customs and religious practices and to govern themselves in their traditional manner
- iii. a Declaration that Canada breached the linguistic and cultural rights (Aboriginal Rights or otherwise) of the Descendant Class;
- iv. a Declaration that the Residential Schools Policy and the Residential Schools caused Cultural, Linguistic and Social Damage and irreparable harm to the Descendant Class;
- v. a Declaration that Canada is liable to the Descendant Class Representative Plaintiffs and other Descendant Class members for the damages caused by its breach of fiduciary and constitutionally-mandated duties and Aboriginal Rights, as well as breaches of International Conventions and Covenants, and breaches of international law, in relation to the purpose, establishment, funding, operation, supervision, control and maintenance, and obligatory attendance of Survivor Class members at, and support of, the Residential Schools;

- vi. general damages for breach of fiduciary and constitutionally-mandated duties and Aboriginal Rights, as well as breaches of International Conventions and Covenants, and breaches of international law, for which Canada is liable;
- vii. pecuniary damages and special damages for breach of fiduciary and constitutionally-mandated duties and Aboriginal Rights, as well as breaches of International Conventions and Covenants, and breaches of international law, including amounts to cover the cost of care, and to restore, protect and preserve the linguistic and cultural heritage of the members of the Descendant Class for which Canada is liable;
- viii. exemplary and punitive damages for which Canada is liable; and
- ix. pre-judgment and post-judgment interest and costs.

By the Band Class:

- i. a Declaration that the Sechelt Indian Band and Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc Indian Band, and all members of the Band Class, have Aboriginal Rights to speak their traditional languages, to engage in their traditional customs and religious practices and to govern themselves in their traditional manner;
- ii. a Declaration that Canada owed and was in breach of the fiduciary, constitutionally-mandated, statutory and common law duties, as well as breaches of International Conventions and Covenants, and breaches of international law, to the Band Class members in relation to the purpose, establishment, funding, operation, supervision, control, maintenance,

- obligatory attendance of Survivor Class members at, and support of, the SIRS and the KIRS and other Identified Residential Schools;
- iii. a Declaration that the Residential Schools Policy and the KIRS, the SIRS and Identified Residential Schools caused Cultural, Linguistic and Social Damage and irreparable harm to the Band Class;
 - iv. a Declaration that Canada was or is in breach of the Band Class members' linguistic and cultural rights, (Aboriginal Rights or otherwise), as well as breaches of International Conventions and Covenants, and breaches of international law, as a consequence of its establishment, funding, operation, supervision, control and maintenance, and obligatory attendance of Survivor Class members at and support of the Residential Schools Policy, and the Identified Residential Schools;
 - v. a Declaration that Canada is liable to the Band Class members for the damages caused by its breach of fiduciary and constitutionally mandated duties and Aboriginal Rights, as well as breaches of International Conventions and Covenants, and breaches of international law, in relation to the purpose, establishment, funding, operation, supervision, control and maintenance, and obligatory attendance of Survivor Class members at and support of the Identified Residential Schools;
 - vi. non-pecuniary and pecuniary damages and special damages for breach of fiduciary and constitutionally mandated duties and Aboriginal Rights, as well as breaches of International Conventions and Covenants, and breaches of international law, including amounts to cover the ongoing cost of care and development of wellness plans for members of the bands in the Band Class, as well as the costs of restoring, protecting and preserving the linguistic and cultural heritage of the Band Class for which Canada is liable;

- vii. The construction and maintenance of healing and education centres in the Band Class communities and such further and other centres or operations as may mitigate the losses suffered and that this Honourable Court may find to be appropriate and just;
- viii. exemplary and punitive damages for which Canada is liable; and
- ix. pre-judgment and post-judgment interest and costs.

e. The Common Questions of Law or Fact are:

- a. Through the purpose, operation or management of any of the Residential Schools during the Class Period, did the Defendant breach a fiduciary duty owed to the Survivor, Descendant and Band Class, or any of them, not to destroy their language and culture?
- b. Through the purpose, operation or management of any of the Residential Schools during the Class Period, did the Defendant breach the cultural and/or linguistic rights, be they Aboriginal Rights or otherwise of the Survivor, Descendant and Band Class, or any of them?

- c. Through the purpose, operation or management of any of the Residential Schools during the Class Period, did the Defendant breach a fiduciary duty owed to the Survivor Class to protect them from actionable mental harm?
 - d. Through the purpose, operation or management of any of the Residential Schools during the Class Period, did the Defendant breach a duty of care owed to the Survivor Class to protect them from actionable mental harm?
 - e. If the answer to any of (a)-(d) above is yes, can the Court make an aggregate assessment of the damages suffered by the Class as part of the common issues trial?
 - f. If the answer to any of (a)-(d) above is yes, was the Defendant guilty of conduct that justifies an award of punitive damages; and
 - g. If the answer to (f) above is yes, what amount of punitive damages ought to be awarded?
- f. The following definitions apply to this Order:

SCHEDULE CCLAIMS PROCESS FOR DAY SCHOLAR COMPENSATION PAYMENTPrinciples Governing Claims Administration

1. The following principles shall govern the Claims administration (“Claims Process Principles”):
 - a. the Claims Process shall be expeditious, cost-effective, user-friendly, culturally sensitive, and trauma-informed;
 - b. the Claims Process shall minimize the burden on the Claimants in pursuing their Claims;
 - c. the Claims Process shall mitigate any likelihood of re-traumatization through the Claims Process;
 - d. the Claims Administrator and Independent Reviewer shall assume that a Claimant is acting honestly and in good faith unless there is reasonable evidence to the contrary;
 - e. the Claims Administrator and Independent Reviewer shall draw all reasonable and favourable inferences that can be drawn in favour of the Claimant.
2. The above Claims Process Principles shall be applied throughout the Claims Process, including in any reconsideration.

Eligibility Criteria

3. Pursuant to the Settlement Agreement, a Claimant is entitled to a Day Scholar Compensation Payment, and their Claim shall be approved, if the Claimant satisfies the following eligibility criteria:
 - a. the Claim is made with respect to a Day Scholar who was alive on May 30, 2005;

- b. the Claim is made with respect to that Day Scholar's attendance at an Indian Residential School listed in Schedule E during all or part of a School Year for which the Day Scholar has not received a Common Experience Payment under the IRSSA, has not and will not receive compensation under the McLean Settlement, and has not received compensation under any other settlement with respect to a school listed in Schedule K to the McLean Settlement; and
- c. the Claim is delivered to the Claims Administrator prior to the Ultimate Claims Deadline.

Intake

- 4. To apply for a Day Scholar Compensation Payment, a Claimant must complete a Claim Form and deliver it to the Claims Administrator prior to the Claims Deadline, through either the electronic or hard copy processes established by the Claims Administrator.
- 5. Notwithstanding the Claims Deadline, a Claimant may submit a Claim Form along with a request for a Claims Deadline extension to the Claims Administrator after the Claims Deadline but before the Ultimate Claims Deadline. Under no circumstances will the Claims Administrator accept any Claim Forms after the Ultimate Claims Deadline, except as specifically provided for herein and in the Estate Claims Process set out in Schedule D.
- 6. The Claims Administrator will provide the Claimant with confirmation of receipt of the Claim.
- 7. The Claims Administrator will digitize all paper applications and maintain electronic copies for use only as provided for by this Agreement.
- 8. The Claims Administrator will review each Claim for completeness. If any required information is missing from the Claim Form that renders it incomplete, including a request for a Claims Deadline extension, the Claims Administrator will contact the Claimant and request that the Claimant provide the missing information or resubmit the Claim Form. The Claimant will have 60 days from the date of the resubmission request to resubmit their Claim Form, notwithstanding that the Ultimate Claims Deadline may have elapsed.

9. The Claims Administrator shall, without taking any further action, dismiss any Claim made with respect to an individual who died on or before May 29, 2005.

Information Provided by Canada

10. The Claims Administrator will provide a copy of each Claim made with respect to an individual alive on May 30, 2005, to Canada for use only as provided for by this Agreement.
11. Canada will review the Claim against any information in its possession for the purposes of:
 - a. determining whether the individual at issue in the Claim or their executor, representative, or heir who applied in place of the individual received a Common Experience Payment pursuant to the IRSSA for any of the same School Years set out in the Claim;
 - b. determining whether the individual at issue in the Claim or their executor, representative, or heir who applied in place of the individual was denied a Common Experience Payment claim pursuant to the IRSSA for any of the same School Years set out in the Claim;
 - c. determining whether the individual at issue or their executor, representative, or heir who applied in place of the individual received compensation under any other settlement with respect to a school listed in Schedule K to the McLean Settlement, for any of the same School Years set out in the Claim;
 - d. determining whether the individual at issue attended a school not listed in List 1 or List 2 as set out in Schedule E for any of the same School Years set out in the Claim; and

- e. any other information that may be relevant to a Claim with respect to a school listed in List 2 of Schedule E.
12. In order to ensure that the Claim is not denied by reason only of the Claimant having been mistaken as to the School Year(s) of attendance as a Day Scholar, Canada will review the attendance records at the identified Indian Residential School(s) with respect to which the Claim was made for the five School Years before and after the School Year(s) identified in the Claim. If, as a result of this process, it is found that the individual at issue was a Day Scholar in (a) School Year(s) not claimed, this information shall be provided to the Claims Administrator and the Claim will be assessed as if it included that/those School Year(s).
13. Canada may forward to the Claims Administrator any information/documentation that supports or contradicts the individual at issue's attendance as a Day Scholar within 45 days of its receipt of a Claim from the Claims Administrator but will endeavour to do so as quickly as possible so as not to delay the determination of any Claim.

Assessment by the Claims Administrator

14. Where the Claim is with respect to an individual who was denied a Common Experience Payment claim pursuant to the IRSSA for any of the same School Years set out in the Claim on the grounds that they attended but did not reside at the Indian Residential School(s), regardless of which Indian Residential School(s) are named in the Claim, the Claims Administrator will consider the Claim to be presumptively valid, subject to the provisions below.
15. For all other Claims, the Claims Administrator will first make a determination whether the Claim is made with respect to a Day Scholar, in accordance with the following protocol:
 - a. where the Claim is with respect to one or more Indian Residential Schools listed in List 1 of Schedule E within any time periods specified in that list, and the Claim Form states positively that the Claim is with respect to an individual who attended the School as a Day Scholar, the Claims Administrator will consider the Claim to be presumptively valid, subject to the provisions below;

- b. where the Claim is with respect only to one or more Indian Residential Schools listed in List 2 of Schedule E within any time periods specified in that list, and the Claimant provides a statutory declaration stating that the individual with respect to whom the Claim is made was a Day Scholar and identifying where the individual resided during the time they were a Day Scholar, the Claims Administrator will review the Claim and any information provided by Canada under ss. 11 – 13 above. Unless Canada has provided positive evidence demonstrating on a balance of probabilities that the individual was not a Day Scholar, the Claim will be considered presumptively valid, subject to the provisions below; and
 - c. where the Claim does not name any Indian Residential School listed in Schedule E, the Claims Administrator shall make best efforts to determine if there is any possibility of mistake or misnomer in the name of an Indian Residential School, including, where necessary, by contacting the Claimant. The Claims Administrator shall correct any such mistakes or misnomers. Where the Claims Administrator is satisfied that the Claim is not regarding any Indian Residential School listed in Schedule E, the Claims Administrator shall dismiss the Claim.
16. The Claims Administrator will review any information provided by Canada pursuant to ss. 11 - 13 above and any information in its possession as part of the McLean Settlement. If the Claims Administrator finds that there is positive evidence demonstrating on a balance of probabilities that, for all of the School Years set out in the Claim Form, the individual at issue or her/his executor, representative, or heir who applied in place of the individual:
- a. Received a Common Experience Payment under the IRSSA;

- b. Received compensation under the McLean Settlement;
- c. Received compensation as part of any other settlement with respect to a school listed in Schedule K to the McLean Settlement;
- d. attended a school not listed in Schedule E; or
- e. any combination of (a), (b), (c), or (d).

the Claims Administrator shall dismiss the Claim.

17. The Claims Administrator shall inform any Claimant whose Claim is dismissed by delivering a letter to them, via the Claimant's preferred method of communication:
- a. providing clear reasons why the Claim has been dismissed;
 - b. in cases where the Claimant has a right to seek reconsideration:
 - i. informing the Claimant of their right to seek reconsideration, the process for seeking reconsideration, and any applicable deadlines;
 - ii. informing the Claimant of their right to assistance from Class Counsel at no cost and their right to assistance from another counsel of their choice at their own expense; and
 - iii. attaching copies of any information and documents that were considered as part of the Claims Administrator's decision to dismiss the Claim.

Reconsideration

18. A Claimant whose Claim is dismissed because:
- a. it is in relation to a school that the Claims Administrator is satisfied is not an Indian Residential School listed in Schedule E; or
 - b. it is on behalf of an individual who died on or before May 29, 2005, has no right to seek reconsideration.

19. A Claimant whose Claim is denied for any other reason has a right to seek reconsideration before the Independent Reviewer. Notice of intent to seek reconsideration must be delivered to the Independent Reviewer within 60 days of the date of the Claims Administrator's decision.
20. Canada has no right to seek reconsideration under any circumstances.
21. Claimants seeking reconsideration have the right to be represented by Class Counsel for the purposes of reconsideration at no cost to them or to retain another counsel of their choice at their own expense.
22. The Independent Reviewer will provide the Claimant with confirmation of receipt of the notice of intent to seek reconsideration and will provide Canada with a copy of the notice of intent to seek reconsideration.
23. The Independent Reviewer will advise the Claimant that they have a right to submit new evidence on reconsideration. The Claimant shall have 60 days to submit any new evidence on reconsideration, with such further reasonable extensions as the Claimant may request and the Independent Reviewer may grant.
24. The Independent Reviewer will provide Canada with any new evidence submitted by the Claimant and Canada will have the right to provide additional information to the Independent Reviewer that responds to any new evidence provided within 60 days.
25. The Independent Reviewer shall then consider each Claim, including its supporting documentation, de novo, and render a decision in accordance with the Claims Process Principles set out above. In particular, the Independent Reviewer shall:
 - a. assume that a Claimant is acting honestly and in good faith, in the absence of reasonable grounds to the contrary; and

- b. draw all reasonable and favourable inferences that can be drawn in favour of the Claimant.
- 26. If the Independent Reviewer decides the Claim should be accepted, the Claims Administrator and the Claimant will be informed, and the Claims Administrator will pay the Claimant forthwith.
- 27. If the Independent Reviewer decides the Claim should be dismissed, they will inform the Claimant by delivering a letter to them, via the Claimant's preferred method of communication:
 - a. providing clear reasons why the Claim has been dismissed; and
 - b. attaching copies of any information and documents that were considered as part of the Independent Reviewer's decision to dismiss the Claim.
- 28. All requests for reconsideration shall be resolved by the Independent Reviewer within 30 days of the receipt of any responding material provided by Canada or the expiry of time for Canada to provide responding material, whichever is sooner. If the Claimant does not file any new evidence on reconsideration, the Independent Reviewer shall resolve the reconsideration within 30 days of the expiry of time for the Claimant to provide new evidence. The timelines within this section may be modified by agreement between Class Counsel and Canada in consultation with the Independent Reviewer.
- 29. The decision of the Independent Reviewer is final without any further right of appeal or judicial review.

SCHEDULE D

ESTATE CLAIMS PROCESS FOR DAY SCHOLAR COMPENSATION PAYMENT

Where There is an Executor/Administrator/Trustee/Liquidator

1. The Claimant shall:
 - a. complete the appropriate Claim Form;
 - b. provide evidence that the Day Scholar is deceased;
 - c. provide evidence of when the Day Scholar died; and
 - d. provide evidence that they have been appointed as the executor, administrator, trustee, or liquidator.
2. The Claim Form will contain release, indemnity, and hold harmless provisions in favour of Canada, the representative plaintiffs, Class Counsel, the Claims Administrator, and the Independent Reviewer.
3. The Claims Administrator will assess the Claim in accordance with the Claims Process.
4. Payment of any approved Claim will be made payable to “the estate of” the deceased Day Scholar.

Where There is no Executor/Administrator/Trustee/Liquidator

5. The Claimant shall:
 - a. complete the appropriate Claim Form;
 - b. provide evidence that the Day Scholar is deceased;
 - c. provide evidence of when the Day Scholar died;
 - d. provide an attestation/declaration that the Day Scholar did not have a will and that no executor, administrator, trustee, or liquidator has been appointed by the court;

- e. provide proof of their relationship to the Day Scholar, which may take the form of an attestation/declaration from a third party;
 - f. provide an attestation/declaration from the Claimant that there is/are no higher priority heir(s);
 - g. list all individuals (if any) at the same priority level of heirs as the Claimant; and
 - h. provide the written consent of all individuals (if any) at the same priority level of heirs as the Claimant for the Claimant to submit a claim on behalf of the deceased Day Scholar.
6. The Claim Form will contain release, indemnity, and hold harmless provisions in favour of Canada, the representative plaintiffs, class counsel, the Claims Administrator, and the Independent Reviewer.
7. The Claims Administrator will assess the Claim in accordance with the Claims Process but will only make a payment for an approved Claim or communicate a dismissed Claim with a right of reconsideration in accordance with the provisions below. In cases where the Claim is dismissed with no right of reconsideration, the Claims Administrator will inform the Claimant in accordance with the Claims Administrator's normal process.
8. If no additional Claims with respect to the same deceased Day Scholar are received by the Claims Administrator before the Ultimate Claims Deadline, the Claims Administrator shall:
- a. in the case of a Claim that is approved, pay the Claimant; and
 - b. in the case of a Claim that is dismissed, advise the Claimant of the dismissal in accordance with paragraph 17 of the Claims Process. The Claimant is able to seek reconsideration in accordance with the Claims Process.

9. If the Claims Administrator receives another Claim with respect to the same deceased Day Scholar before the Ultimate Claims Deadline, where the Claimant is the estate executor, administrator, trustee, or liquidator, the Claims Administrator shall dismiss the Claim from the non-executor, administrator, trustee, or liquidator Claimant, without any right of reconsideration.
10. If any additional Claim(s) with respect to the same deceased Day Scholar is/are received by the Claims Administrator before the Ultimate Claims Deadline, from a Claimant who is not the estate executor, administrator, trustee, or liquidator, and who is of a different priority level of heirs than the previous Claimant(s), the Claims Administrator shall contact the Claimant with the lower priority to inquire as to whether that Claimant disputes the existence of the higher priority level heir. If the existence of a higher priority level heir is disputed, the matter shall be referred to the Independent Reviewer for a determination regarding which Claimant has the highest valid priority level and deem them to be the Designated Representative of the deceased Day Scholar. The decision of the Independent Reviewer is final without any right of appeal or judicial review. The Independent Reviewer shall inform the Claims Administrator of their decision, and the Claims Administrator shall:
 - a. in the case of a Claim that is approved, pay the Designated Representative; and
 - b. in the case of a Claim that is dismissed, advise the Claimant of the dismissal in accordance with paragraph 17 of the Claims Process. The Designated Representative is able to seek reconsideration in accordance with the Claims Process.
11. If any additional Claim(s) with respect to the same deceased Day Scholar is/are received by the Claims Administrator before the Ultimate Claims Deadline, from a Claimant who is not the estate executor, administrator, trustee, or liquidator and who is of the same priority level of heirs as the previous Claimant(s), the Claims Administrator shall reject all of the Claims and notify each Claimant accordingly.

Notwithstanding the Ultimate Claims Deadline, the Claimants who submitted competing Claims will then have three months to submit one new Claim signed by all previously competing Claimants designating one Designated Representative on behalf of all of them and any other heirs. Upon receipt of the new Claim, the Claims Administrator shall:

- a. in the case of a Claim that is approved, pay the Designated Representative;
- b. in the case of a Claim that is dismissed, advise the Claimant of the dismissal in accordance with paragraph 17 of the Claims Process. The Designated Representative is able to seek reconsideration in accordance with the Claims Process.

Priority Level of Heirs

12. The priority level of heirs follows the distribution of property intestacy provisions of the Indian Act and all terms have the definitions as set out in the Indian Act.
13. The priority level of heirs from highest to lowest priority are as follows:
 - a. surviving spouse or common-law partner;
 - b. children;
 - c. grandchildren;
 - d. parents;
 - e. siblings; and
 - f. children of siblings.

SCHEDULE FDAY SCHOLARS REVITALIZATION SOCIETY PLAN

The Parties have agreed to settle the claims of the Survivor Class and the Descendant Class (“Survivors”, “Descendants”) in the Gottfriedson v. AGC proceeding. Under the Settlement Agreement, the Parties have agreed that Canada will fund $50 million to establish the Day Scholars Revitalization Society (the “Society”). The Parties agree the intention of the Society will be to support Survivors and Descendants in healing, wellness, education, language, culture, heritage, and commemoration activities and programs.

The monies will be used by the Society to support activities and programs for the benefit of the Survivors and Descendants as follows:

- a. to revitalize and protect the Survivors’ and Descendants’ Indigenous languages;
- b. to protect and revitalize the Survivors’ and Descendants’ Indigenous cultures;
- c. to pursue healing and wellness for the Survivors and Descendants;
- d. to protect the Survivors’ and Descendants’ Indigenous heritage; and,
- e. to promote education and commemoration.

The activities and programs will not duplicate those of the Government of Canada. Grants will be made to Survivors and Descendants for activities and programs designed to support healing and address any losses to languages, culture, wellness, and heritage that Survivors suffered while attending Indian Residential Schools as Day Scholars.

The Society will be incorporated under the B.C. Societies Act prior to the Implementation Date and will be properly registered in each jurisdiction in Canada to the extent required by those jurisdictions. The Society will have between 5 and 11 Directors. One of those Directors will be named by Canada, but will not be a Government employee. The Parties will ensure the other Directors provide adequate regional representation from across Canada.

The Society will have a small administrative staff and will retain financial consultants to provide investment advice. Once funds have been invested, the expenses of the Society will be funded from investment income.

Advisory Board

The Directors will be guided by an Advisory Board consisting of individuals, appointed by the Directors, who provide regional representation, understanding and knowledge of the loss and revitalization of Indigenous languages, cultures, wellness and heritage.

The Advisory Board shall advise the Directors regarding all activities of the Directors in the pursuit of the activities of the Society, including the development and implementation of a policy for applications to obtain funding from the Society in that pursuit.

SCHEDULE G

ORDER

THIS COURT ORDERS that:

1. The above captioned proceeding is certified as a class proceeding with the following conditions:

a. The Class shall be defined as:

The Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc Indian Band and the Sechelt Indian Band and any other Indian Band(s) which:

- (i) has or had some members who are or were members who were Survivors, or in whose community a Residential School is located; and
- (ii) is specifically added to this claim with one or more specifically Identified Residential Schools.

b. The Class's Representative Plaintiffs shall be:

Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc Indian Band; and Sechelt Indian Band.

c. The nature of the claims of the Class are:

Breaches of fiduciary and constitutionally mandated duties, breach of Aboriginal Rights, breaches of International Conventions and/or Covenants, and breaches of international law committed by or on behalf of Canada for which Canada is liable.

- d. The relief claimed by the Class is as follows:
- i. a Declaration that the Sechelt Indian Band and Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc Indian Band, and all members of the Class, have Aboriginal Rights to speak their traditional languages, to engage in their traditional customs and religious practices;
 - ii. a Declaration that Canada owed and was in breach of the fiduciary, constitutionally-mandated, statutory and common law duties, as well as breaches of International Conventions and Covenants, and breaches of international law, to the Class members in relation to the purpose, establishment, funding, operation, supervision, control, maintenance, obligatory attendance of Survivors at, and support of, the SIRS and the KIRS and other Identified Residential Schools;
 - iii. a Declaration that the Residential Schools Policy and the KIRS, the SIRS and Identified Residential Schools caused Cultural, Linguistic and Social Damage and irreparable harm to the Class;
 - iv. a Declaration that Canada was or is in breach of the Class members' linguistic and cultural rights (Aboriginal Rights or otherwise), as well as breaches of International Conventions and Covenants, and breaches of international law, as a consequence of its establishment, funding, operation, supervision, control and maintenance, and obligatory attendance of Survivors at and support of the Residential Schools Policy, and the Identified Residential Schools;

- v. a Declaration that Canada is liable to the Class members for the damages caused by its breach of fiduciary and constitutionally mandated duties and Aboriginal Rights, as well as breaches of International Conventions and Covenants, and breaches of international law, in relation to the purpose, establishment, funding, operation, supervision, control and maintenance, and obligatory attendance of Survivors at and support of the Identified Residential Schools;
 - vi. non-pecuniary and pecuniary damages and special damages for breach of fiduciary and constitutionally mandated duties and Aboriginal Rights, as well as breaches of International Conventions and Covenants, and breaches of international law, including amounts to cover the ongoing cost of care and development of wellness plans for members of the bands in the Class, as well as the costs of restoring, protecting and preserving the linguistic and cultural heritage of the Class for which Canada is liable;
 - vii. The construction and maintenance of healing and education centres in the Class communities and such further and other centres or operations as may mitigate the losses suffered and that this Honourable Court may find to be appropriate and just;
 - viii. exemplary and punitive damages for which Canada is liable; and
 - ix. pre-judgment and post-judgment interest and costs.
- e. The common questions of law or fact are:

- a. Through the purpose, operation or management of any of the Residential Schools during the Class Period, did the Defendant breach a fiduciary duty owed to the Class not to destroy their language and culture?
- b. Through the purpose, operation or management of any of the Residential Schools during the Class Period, did the Defendant breach the cultural and/or linguistic rights, be they Aboriginal Rights or otherwise, of the Class?
- c. If the answer to any of (a)-(b) above is yes, can the Court make an aggregate assessment of the damages suffered by the Class as part of the common issues trial?
- d. If the answer to any of (a)-(b) above is yes, was the Defendant guilty of conduct that justifies an award of punitive damages; and
- e. If the answer to (d) above is yes, what amount of punitive damages ought to be awarded?
- f. The following definitions apply to this Order:
 - a. “Aboriginal(s)”, “Aboriginal Person(s)” or “Aboriginal Child(ren)” means a person or persons whose rights are recognized and affirmed by the Constitution Act, 1982, s. 35;
 - b. “Aboriginal Right(s)” means any or all of the Aboriginal and treaty rights recognized and affirmed by the Constitution Act, 1982, s. 35;

- c. “Agreement” means the Indian Residential Schools Settlement Agreement dated May 10, 2006, entered into by Canada to settle claims relating to Residential Schools as approved in the orders granted in various jurisdictions across Canada;
- d. “Canada” means the Defendant, Her Majesty the Queen;
- e. “Class Period” means 1920 to 1997;
- f. “Cultural, Linguistic and Social Damage” means the damage or harm caused by the creation and implementation of Residential Schools and Residential Schools Policy to the educational, governmental, economic, cultural, linguistic, spiritual and social customs, practices and way of life, traditional governance structures, as well as to the community and individual security and wellbeing, of Aboriginal Persons;
- g. “Identified Residential School(s)” means the KIRS or the SIRS or any other Residential School specifically identified as a member of the Band Class;
- h. “KIRS” means the Kamloops Indian Residential School;
- i. “Residential Schools” means all Indian Residential Schools recognized under the Agreement and listed in Schedule “A” appended to this Order which Schedule may be amended from time to time by Order of this Court;
- j. “Residential Schools Policy” means the policy of Canada with respect to the implementation of Indian Residential Schools;

- k. “Survivors” means all Aboriginal persons who attended as a student or for educational purposes for any period at a Residential School, during the Class Period, excluding, for any individual Survivor, such periods of time for which that Survivor received compensation by way of the Common Experience Payment under the Agreement. For greater clarity, Survivors are all those who were members of the formerly certified Survivor Class in this proceeding, whose claims were settled on terms set out in the Settlement Agreement signed on [DATE], and approved by the Federal Court on [DATE]; and
- l. “SIRS” means the Sechelt Indian Residential School.
- g. Members of the Class are the representative plaintiff Indian Bands as well as those Indian Bands that opted in by the opt-in deadline previously set by this Court.
- h. Either party may apply to this Court to amend the list of Residential Schools set out in Schedule “A” hereto, for the purpose of this proceeding.

RELIEF SOUGHT

1. The Representative Plaintiffs, on behalf of Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc Indian Band and Sechelt Indian Band, and on behalf of the members of the Class, claim:

- (a) a Declaration that the Sechelt Indian Band (referred to as the shíshálh or shíshálh band) and Tk'emlúps Band, and all members of the certified Class of Indian Bands, have Aboriginal Rights to speak their traditional languages and engage in their traditional customs and religious practices;
- (b) a Declaration that Canada owed and was in breach of fiduciary, constitutionally-mandated, statutory and common law duties as well as breaches of International Conventions and Covenants, and breaches of international law, to the Class members in relation to the purpose, establishment, funding, operation, supervision, control, maintenance, obligatory attendance of Survivors at, and support of, the SIRS and the KIRS and other Identified Residential Schools;
- (c) a Declaration that the Residential Schools Policy and the KIRS, the SIRS and Identified Residential Schools caused Cultural, Linguistic and Social Damage and irreparable harm to the Class;
- (d) a Declaration that Canada was or is in breach of the Class members' linguistic and cultural rights, (Aboriginal Rights or otherwise), as well as breaches of International Conventions and Covenants, and breaches of international law, as a consequence of its establishment, funding, operation, supervision, control and maintenance, and obligatory attendance of Survivors at and support of the Residential Schools Policy, and the Identified Residential Schools;
- (e) a Declaration that Canada is liable to the Class members for the damages caused by its breach of fiduciary, constitutionally-mandated, statutory and common law duties and Aboriginal Rights as well as breaches of International Conventions and Covenants, and breaches of international law, in relation to the purpose, establishment, funding, operation, supervision, control and maintenance, and obligatory attendance of Survivors at and support of the Identified Residential Schools;
- (f) non-pecuniary and pecuniary general damages and special damages for breach of fiduciary, constitutionally-mandated, statutory and common law duties and Aboriginal Rights, as well as breaches of International Conventions and Covenants, and breaches of international law, including amounts to cover the ongoing cost of care and development of wellness plans for individual members of the bands in the Class, as well as the costs of restoring, protecting and preserving the linguistic and cultural heritage of the Bands for which Canada is liable;
- (g) the construction of healing centres in the Class communities by Canada;

- (h) exemplary and punitive damages for which Canada is liable;
- (i) pre-judgment and post-judgment interest;
- (j) the costs of this action; and
- (k) such further and other relief as this Honourable Court may deem just.

DEFINITIONS

2. The following definitions apply for the purposes of this Claim:

- (c) “Act” means the Indian Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-5 and its predecessors as have been amended from time to time;
- (d) “Agents” means the servants, contractors, agents, officers and employees of Canada and the operators, managers, administrators and teachers and staff of each of the Residential Schools;
- (e) “Agreement” means the Indian Residential Schools Settlement Agreement dated May 10, 2006 entered into by Canada to settle claims relating to Residential Schools as approved in the orders granted in various jurisdictions across Canada;
- (f) “Class” means the Tk’emlúps te Secwépemc Indian Band and the shíshálh band and any other Aboriginal Indian Band(s) which:
 - (i) has or had some members who are or were Survivors, or in whose community a Residential School is located; and
 - (ii) is specifically added to this claim with one or more specifically identified Residential Schools.
- (g) “Canada” means the Defendant, Her Majesty the Queen in right of Canada as represented by the Attorney General of Canada;
- (h) “Class Period” means 1920 to 1997;
- (i) “Cultural, Linguistic and Social Damage” means the damage or harm caused by the creation and implementation of Residential Schools and Residential Schools Policy to the educational, governmental, economic, cultural, linguistic, spiritual and social customs, practices and way of life, traditional governance structures, as well as to the community and individual security and wellbeing, of Aboriginal Persons;

- (j) “Identified Residential School(s)” means the KIRS or the SIRS Residential School;
- (k) “KIRS” means the Kamloops Indian Residential School;
- (l) “Residential Schools” means all Indian Residential Schools recognized under the Agreement;
- (m) “Residential Schools Policy” means the policy of Canada with respect to the implementation of Indian Residential Schools;
- (n) “SIRS” means the Sechelt Indian Residential School;
- (o) “Survivors” means all Aboriginal persons who attended as a student or for educational purposes for any period at a Residential School, during the Class Period excluding, for any individual class member, such periods of time for which that class member received compensation by way of the Common Experience Payment under the Indian Residential Schools Settlement Agreement. For greater clarity, Survivors are all those who were members of the formerly certified Survivor Class in this proceeding, whose claims were settled on terms set out in the Settlement Agreement signed on [DATE], and approved by the Federal Court on [DATE].

THE PARTIES

The Plaintiffs

3. The Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc Indian Band and the shíshálh band are Aboriginal Indian Bands and they both act as Representative Plaintiffs for the Class. The Class members represent the collective interests and authority of each of their respective communities.

The Defendant

4. Canada is represented in this proceeding by the Attorney General of Canada. The Attorney General of Canada represents the interests of Canada and the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Canada and predecessor Ministers who were responsible for “Indians” under s.91 (24) of the Constitution Act, 1867, and who were, at all material times, responsible for the formation and implementation of the Residential Schools Policy, and the maintenance and operation of the KIRS and the SIRS.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

5. Over the course of the last several years, Canada has acknowledged the devastating impact of its Residential Schools Policy on Canada’s Aboriginal Peoples. Canada’s Residential Schools Policy was designed to eradicate Aboriginal culture and identity and assimilate the Aboriginal Peoples of Canada into Euro-Canadian society. Through this policy, Canada ripped away the foundations of identity for generations of Aboriginal People and caused incalculable harm to both individuals and communities.

6. The direct beneficiary of the Residential Schools Policy was Canada as its obligations would be reduced in proportion to the number, and generations, of Aboriginal Persons who would no longer recognize their Aboriginal identity and would reduce their claims to rights under the Act and Canada’s fiduciary, constitutionally-mandated, statutory and common law duties.

7. Canada was also a beneficiary of the Residential Schools Policy, as the policy served to weaken the claims of Aboriginal Peoples to their traditional lands and resources. The result was a severing of Aboriginal People from their cultures, traditions and ultimately their lands and resources. This allowed for exploitation of those lands and resources by Canada, not only without Aboriginal Peoples’ consent but also, contrary to their interests, the Constitution of Canada and the Royal Proclamation of 1763.

8. The truth of this wrong and the damage it has wrought has now been acknowledged by the Prime Minister on behalf of Canada, and through the pan-Canadian settlement of the claims of those who resided at Canada's Residential Schools by way of the Agreement implemented in 2007. Notwithstanding the truth and acknowledgement of the wrong and the damages caused, many members of Canada's Aboriginal communities were excluded from the Agreement, not because they did not attend Residential Schools and suffer Cultural, Linguistic and Social Damage, but simply because they did not reside at Residential Schools.

9. This claim is on behalf of the members of the Class, consisting of the Aboriginal communities within which the Residential Schools were situated, or whose members are or were Survivors.

The Residential School System

10. Residential Schools were established by Canada prior to 1874, for the education of Aboriginal Children. Commencing in the early twentieth century, Canada began entering into formal agreements with various religious organizations (the "Churches") for the operation of Residential Schools. Pursuant to these agreements, Canada controlled, regulated, supervised and directed all aspects of the operation of Residential Schools. The Churches assumed the day-to-day operation of many of the Residential Schools under the control, supervision and direction of Canada, for which Canada paid the Churches a per capita grant. In 1969, Canada took over operations directly.

11. As of 1920, the Residential Schools Policy included compulsory attendance at Residential Schools for all Aboriginal Children aged 7 to 15. Canada removed most Aboriginal Children from their homes and Aboriginal communities and transported them to Residential Schools which were often long distances away. However, in some cases, Aboriginal Children lived in their homes and communities and were similarly required to attend Residential Schools as day students and not residents. This practice applied to even more children in the later years of the Residential Schools Policy. While at Residential School, all Aboriginal Children were confined and deprived of their heritage, their support networks and their way of life, forced to adopt a foreign language and a culture alien to them and punished for non-compliance.

12. The purpose of the Residential Schools Policy was the complete integration and assimilation of Aboriginal Children into the Euro-Canadian culture and the obliteration of their traditional language, culture, religion and way of life. Canada set out and intended to cause the Cultural, Linguistic and Social Damage which has harmed Canada's Aboriginal Peoples and Nations.

13. Canada chose to be disloyal to its Aboriginal Peoples, implementing the Residential Schools Policy in its own self-interest, including economic self-interest, and to the detriment and exclusion of the interests of the Aboriginal Persons to whom Canada owed fiduciary and constitutionally-mandated duties. The intended eradication of Aboriginal identity, culture, language, and spiritual practices, to the extent successful, results in the reduction of the obligations owed by Canada in proportion to the number of individuals, over generations, who would no longer identify as Aboriginal and who would be less likely to make claims to their rights as Aboriginal Persons.

The Effects of the Residential Schools Policy on the Class Members

Tk'emlúps Indian Band

14. Tk'emlúpsemc, 'the people of the confluence', now known as the Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc Indian Band are members of the northernmost of the Plateau People and of the Interior-Salish Secwépemc (Shuswap) speaking peoples of British Columbia. The Tk'emlúps Indian Band was established on a reserve now adjacent to the City of Kamloops, where the KIRS was subsequently established.

15. Secwepemctsin is the language of the Secwépemc, and it is the unique means by which the cultural, ecological, and historical knowledge and experience of the Secwépemc people is understood and conveyed between generations. It is through language, spiritual practices and passage of culture and traditions including their rituals, drumming, dancing, songs and stories, that the values and beliefs of the Secwépemc people are captured and shared. From the Secwépemc perspective all aspects of Secwépemc knowledge, including their culture, traditions, laws and languages, are vitally and integrally linked to their lands and resources.

16. Language, like the land, was given to the Secwépemc by the Creator for communication to the people and to the natural world. This communication created a reciprocal and cooperative relationship between the Secwépemc and the natural world which enabled them to survive and flourish in harsh environments. This knowledge, passed down to the next generation orally, contained the teachings necessary for the maintenance of Secwépemc culture, traditions, laws and identity.

17. For the Secwépemc, their spiritual practices, songs, dances, oral histories, stories and ceremonies were an integral part of their lives and societies. These practices and traditions are absolutely vital to maintain. Their songs, dances, drumming and traditional ceremonies connect the Secwépemc to their land and continually remind the Secwépemc of their responsibilities to the land, the resources and to the Secwépemc people.

18. Secwépemc ceremonies and spiritual practices, including their songs, dances, drumming and passage of stories and history, perpetuate their vital teachings and laws relating to the harvest of resources, including medicinal plants, game and fish, and the proper and respectful protection and preservation of resources. For example, in accordance with Secwépemc laws, the Secwépemc sing and pray before harvesting any food, medicines, and other materials from the land, and make an offering to thank the Creator and the spirits for anything they take. The Secwépemc believe that all living things have spirits and must be shown utmost respect. It was these vital, integral beliefs and traditional laws, together with other elements of Secwépemc culture and identity, that Canada sought to destroy with the Residential Schools Policy.

Shíshálh band

19. The shíshálh Nation, a division of the Coast Salish First Nations, originally occupied the southern portion of the lower coast of British Columbia. The shíshálh People settled the area thousands of years ago, and occupied approximately 80 village sites over a vast tract of land. The shíshálh People are made up of four sub-groups that speak the language of Shashishalhem, which is a distinct and unique language, although it is part of the Coast Salish Division of the Salishan Language.

20. Shíshálh tradition describes the formation of the shíshálh world (Spelmulh story). Beginning with the creator spirits, who were sent by the Divine Spirit to form the world, they carved out valleys leaving a beach along the inlet at Porpoise Bay. Later, the transformers, a male raven and a female mink, added details by carving trees and forming pools of water.

21. The shíshálh culture includes singing, dancing and drumming as an integral part of their culture and spiritual practices, a connection with the land and the Creator and passing on the history and beliefs of the people. Through song and dance the shíshálh People would tell stories, bless events and even bring about healing. Their songs, dances and drumming also signify critical seasonal events that are integral to the shíshálh. Traditions also include making and using masks, baskets, regalia and tools for hunting and fishing. It was these vital, integral beliefs and traditional laws, together with other elements of the shíshálh culture and identity, that Canada sought to destroy with the Residential Schools Policy.

The Impact of the Residential schools

22. For all of the Aboriginal Children who were compelled to attend the Residential Schools, rigid discipline was enforced as per the Residential Schools Policy. While at school, children were not allowed to speak their Aboriginal language, even to their parents, and thus members of these Aboriginal communities were forced to learn English.

23. Aboriginal culture was strictly suppressed by the school administrators in compliance with the policy directives of Canada including the Residential Schools Policy. At the SIRS, members of shishalh were forced to burn or give to the agents of Canada centuries-old totem poles, regalia, masks and other “paraphernalia of the medicine men” and to abandon their potlatches, dancing and winter festivities, and other elements integral to the Aboriginal culture and society of the shíshálh and Secwépemc peoples.

24. Because the SIRS was physically located in the shíshálh community, Canada’s eyes, both directly and through its Agents, were upon the elders and they were punished severely for practising their culture or speaking their language or passing this on to future generations. In the midst of that scrutiny, members of the shíshálh band struggled, often unsuccessfully, to practice, protect and preserve their songs, masks, dancing or other cultural practices.

25. The Tk’emlúps te Secwépemc suffered a similar fate due to their proximity to the KIRS.

26. The children at the Residential Schools were taught to be ashamed of their Aboriginal identity, culture, spirituality and practices. They were referred to as, amongst other derogatory epithets, “dirty savages” and “heathens” and taught to shun their very identities. The Class members’ Aboriginal way of life, traditions, cultures and spiritual practices were supplanted with the Euro-Canadian identity imposed upon them by Canada through the Residential Schools Policy.

27. The Class members have lost, in whole or in part, their traditional economic viability, self-government and laws, language, land base and land-based teachings, traditional spiritual practices and religious practices, and the integral sense of their collective identity.

28. The Residential Schools Policy, delivered through the Residential Schools, wrought cultural, linguistic and social devastation on the communities of the Class and altered their traditional way of life.

Canada’s Settlement with Former Residential School Residents

29. From the closure of the Residential Schools until the late 1990’s, Canada’s Aboriginal communities were left to battle the damages and suffering of their members as a result of the Residential Schools Policy, without any acknowledgement from Canada. During this period, Residential School survivors increasingly began speaking out about the horrible conditions and abuse they suffered, and the dramatic impact it had on their lives. At the same time, many survivors committed suicide or self-medicated to the point of death. The deaths devastated the life and stability of the communities represented by the Class.

30. In January 1998, Canada issued a Statement of Reconciliation acknowledging and apologizing for the failures of the Residential Schools Policy. Canada admitted that the Residential Schools Policy was designed to assimilate Aboriginal Persons and that it was wrong to pursue that goal. The Plaintiffs plead that the Statement of Reconciliation by Canada is an admission by Canada of the facts and duties set out herein and is relevant to the Plaintiffs' claim for damages, particularly punitive damages.

31. The Statement of Reconciliation stated, in part, as follows:

Sadly, our history with respect to the treatment of Aboriginal people is not something in which we can take pride. Attitudes of racial and cultural superiority led to a suppression of Aboriginal culture and values. As a country we are burdened by past actions that resulted in weakening the identity of Aboriginal peoples, suppressing their languages and cultures, and outlawing spiritual practices. We must recognize the impact of these actions on the once self-sustaining nations that were disaggregated, disrupted, limited or even destroyed by the dispossession of traditional territory, by the relocation of Aboriginal people, and by some provisions of the Indian Act. We must acknowledge that the results of these actions was the erosion of the political, economic and social systems of Aboriginal people and nations.

Against the backdrop of these historical legacies, it is a remarkable tribute to the strength and endurance of Aboriginal people that they have maintained their historic diversity and identity. The Government of Canada today formally expresses to all Aboriginal people in Canada our profound regret for past actions of the Federal Government which have contributed to these difficult pages in the history of our relationship together.

One aspect of our relationship with Aboriginal people over this period that requires particular attention is the Residential School System. This system separated many children from their families and communities and prevented them from speaking their own languages and from learning about their heritage and cultures. In the worst cases, it left legacies of personal pain and distress that continued to reverberate in Aboriginal communities to this date. Tragically, some children were the victims of physical and sexual abuse.

The Government of Canada acknowledges the role it played in the development and administration of these schools. Particularly to those individuals who experienced the tragedy of sexual and physical abuse at Residential Schools, and who have carried this burden believing that in some way they must be responsible, we wish to emphasize that what you experienced was not your fault and should never have happened. To those of you who suffered this tragedy at Residential Schools, we are deeply sorry. In dealing with the legacies of the Residential School program, the Government of Canada proposes to work with First Nations, Inuit, Metis people, the Churches and other interested parties to resolve the longstanding issues that must be addressed. We need to work together on a healing strategy to assist individuals and communities in dealing with the consequences of this sad era of our history...

32. Reconciliation is an ongoing process. In renewing our partnership, we must ensure that the mistakes which marked our past relationship are not repeated. The Government of Canada recognizes that policies that sought to assimilate Aboriginal people, women and men, were not the way to build a strong community...On June 11, 2008, Prime Minister Stephen Harper on behalf of Canada, delivered an apology (“Apology”) that acknowledged the harm done by Canada’s Residential Schools Policy:

For more than a century, Indian Residential Schools separated over 150,000 Aboriginal children from their families and communities. In the 1870’s, the federal government, partly in order to meet its obligation to educate Aboriginal children, began to play a role in the development and administration of these schools. Two primary objectives of the Residential Schools system were to remove and isolate children from the influence of their homes, families, traditions and cultures, and to assimilate them into the dominant culture. These objectives were based on the assumption Aboriginal cultures and spiritual beliefs were inferior and unequal. Indeed, some sought, as it was infamously said, “to kill the Indian in the child”. Today, we recognize that this policy of assimilation was wrong, has caused great harm, and has no place in our country. [emphasis added]

33. In this Apology, the Prime Minister made some important acknowledgments regarding the Residential Schools Policy and its impact on Aboriginal Children:

The Government of Canada built an educational system in which very young children were often forcibly removed from their homes, often taken far from their communities. Many were inadequately fed, clothed and housed. All were deprived of the care and nurturing of their parents, grandparents and communities. First Nations, Inuit and Métis languages and cultural practices were prohibited in these schools.

Tragically, some of these children died while attending residential schools and others never returned home.

The government now recognizes that the consequences of the Indian Residential Schools policy were profoundly negative and that this policy has had a lasting and damaging impact on Aboriginal culture, heritage and language.

The legacy of Indian Residential Schools has contributed to social problems that continue to exist in many communities today.

We now recognize that it was wrong to separate children from rich and vibrant cultures and traditions, that it created a void in many lives and communities, and we apologize for having done this. We now recognize that, in separating children from their families, we undermined the ability of many to adequately parent their own children and sowed the seeds for generations to follow, and we apologize for having done this. We now recognize that, far too often, these institutions gave rise to abuse or neglect and were inadequately controlled, and we apologize for failing to protect you. Not only did you suffer these abuses as children, but as you became parents, you were powerless to protect your own children from suffering the same experience, and for this we are sorry.

The burden of this experience has been on your shoulders for far too long. The burden is properly ours as a Government, and as a country. There is no place in Canada for the attitudes that inspired the Indian Residential Schools system to ever prevail again. You have been working on recovering from this experience for a long time and in a very real sense, we are now joining you on this journey. The Government of Canada sincerely apologizes and asks the forgiveness of the Aboriginal peoples of this country for failing them so profoundly.

Canada's Breach of Duties to the Class Members

34. From the formation of the Residential Schools Policy to its execution in the form of forced attendance at the Residential Schools, Canada caused incalculable losses to the Class members.

35. The Class members have all been affected by a crippling or elimination of traditional ceremonies and a loss of the hereditary governance structure which allowed for the ability to govern their peoples and their lands.

Canada's Duties

36. Canada was responsible for developing and implementing all aspects of the Residential Schools Policy, including carrying out all operational and administrative aspects of Residential Schools. While the Churches were used as Canada's Agents to assist Canada in carrying out its objectives, those objectives and the manner in which they were carried out were the obligations of Canada. Canada was responsible for:

- (a) the administration of the Act and its predecessor statutes as well as all other statutes relating to Aboriginal Persons and all Regulations promulgated under these Acts and their predecessors during the Class Period;
- (b) the management, operation and administration of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and its predecessors and related Ministries and Departments, as well as the decisions taken by those ministries and departments;
- (c) the construction, operation, maintenance, ownership, financing, administration, supervision, inspection and auditing of the Residential Schools and for the creation, design and implementation of the program of education for Aboriginal Persons in attendance;
- (d) the selection, control, training, supervision and regulation of the operators of the Residential Schools, including their employees, servants, officers and agents, and for the care and education, control and well being of Aboriginal Persons attending the Residential Schools;
- (e) preserving, promoting, maintaining and not interfering with Aboriginal Rights, including the right to retain and practice their culture, spirituality, language and traditions and the right to fully learn their culture, spirituality, language and traditions from their families, extended families and communities; and
- (f) the care and supervision of all Survivors while they were in attendance at the Residential Schools during the Class Period.

37. Further, Canada has at all material times committed itself to honour international law in relation to the treatment of its people, which obligations form minimum commitments to Canada's Aboriginal Peoples, including the Class, and which have been breached. In particular, Canada's breaches include the failure to comply with the terms and spirit of:

- (a) the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, 78 U.N.T.S. 277, entered into force Jan. 12, 1951,, and in particular Article 2(b), (c) and (e) of that convention, by engaging in the intentional destruction of the culture of Aboriginal Children and communities, causing profound and permanent cultural injuries to the Class;
- (b) the Declaration of the Rights of the Child (1959) G.A. res. 1386 (XIV), 14 U.N. GAOR Supp. (No. 16) at 19, U.N. Doc. A/4354 by failing to provide Aboriginal Children with the means necessary for normal development, both materially and spiritually, and failing to put them in a position to earn a livelihood and protect them against exploitation;
- (c) the Convention on the Rights of the Child, GA res. 44/25, annex, 44 UN GAOR Supp. (No. 49) at 167, U.N. Doc. A/44/49 (1989); 1577 UNTS 3; 28 ILM 1456 (1989), and in particular Articles 29 and 30 of that convention, by failing to provide Aboriginal Children with education that is directed to the development of respect for their parents, their cultural identities, language and values, and by denying the right of Aboriginal Children to enjoy their own cultures, to profess and practise their own religions and to use their own languages;
- (d) the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, G.A. res. 2200A (XXI), 21 U.N. GAOR Supp. (No. 16) at 52, U.N. Doc. A/6316 (1966), 999 U.N.T.S. 171, entered into force Mar. 23, 1976, in particular Articles 1 and 27 of that convention, by interfering with Class members' rights to retain and practice their culture, spirituality, language and traditions, the right to fully learn their culture, spirituality, language and traditions from their families, extended families and communities and the right to teach their culture, spirituality, language and traditions to their own children, grandchildren, extended families and communities;
- (e) the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man, O.A.S. Res. XXX, adopted by the Ninth International Conference of American States (1948), reprinted in Basic Documents Pertaining to Human Rights in the Inter-American System, OEA/Ser.L.V//II.82 doc.6 rev.1 at 17 (1992), and in particular Article XIII, by violating Class members' right to take part in the cultural life of their communities;
- (f) the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, G.A. Res. 61/295, U.N. Doc. A/RES/61/295 (Sept. 13, 2007), 46 I.L.M. 1013 (2007), endorsed by Canada 12 November 2010, and in particular article 8, 2(d), which commits to the provision of effective mechanisms for redress for forced assimilation.

38. Canada's obligations under international law inform Canada's common law, statutory, fiduciary, constitutionally-mandated and other duties, and a breach of the aforementioned international obligations is evidence of, or constitutes, a breach under domestic law.

Breach of Fiduciary and Constitutionally-Mandated Duties

39. Canada has constitutional obligations to, and a fiduciary relationship with, Aboriginal People in Canada. Canada created, planned, established, set up, initiated, operated, financed, supervised, controlled and regulated the Residential Schools and established the Residential Schools Policy. Through these acts, and by virtue of the Constitution Act 1867, the Constitution Act, 1982, and the provisions of the Act, as amended, Canada owed a fiduciary duty to Class members.

40. Canada's constitutional duties include the obligation to uphold the honour of the Crown in all of its dealings with Aboriginal Peoples, including the Class members. This obligation arose with the Crown's assertion of sovereignty from the time of first contact and continues through post-treaty relationships. This is and remains an obligation of the Crown and was an obligation on the Crown at all material times. The honour of the Crown is a legal principle which requires the Crown to operate at all material times in its relations with Aboriginal Peoples from contact to post-treaty in the most honourable manner to protect the interests of the Aboriginal Peoples.

41. Canada's fiduciary duties obliged Canada to act as a protector of Class members' Aboriginal Rights, including the protection and preservation of their language, culture and their way of life, and the duty to take corrective steps to restore the Plaintiffs' culture, history and status, or assist them to do so. At a minimum, Canada's duty to Aboriginal Persons included the duty not to deliberately reduce the number of the beneficiaries to whom Canada owed its duties.

42. The fiduciary and constitutional duties owed by Canada extend to the Class because the Residential Schools Policy was intended to, and did, undermine and seek to destroy the way of life established and enjoyed by these Nations whose identities were and are viewed as collective.

43. Canada acted in its own self-interest and contrary to the interests of Aboriginal Children, not only by being disloyal to, but by actually betraying the Aboriginal Children and communities whom it had a duty to protect. Canada wrongfully exercised its discretion and power over Aboriginal People, and in particular children, for its own benefit. The Residential Schools Policy was pursued by Canada, in whole or in part, to eradicate what Canada saw as the “Indian Problem”. Namely, Canada sought to relieve itself of its moral and financial responsibilities for Aboriginal People, the expense and inconvenience of dealing with cultures, languages, habits and values different from Canada’s predominant Euro-Canadian heritage, and the challenges arising from land claims.

44. In breach of its ongoing fiduciary, constitutionally-mandated, statutory and common law duties to the Class, Canada failed, and continues to fail, to adequately remediate the damage caused by its wrongful acts, failures and omissions. In particular, Canada has failed to take adequate measures to ameliorate the Cultural, Linguistic and Social Damage suffered by the Class, notwithstanding Canada’s admission of the wrongfulness of the Residential Schools Policy since 1998.

Breach of Aboriginal Rights

45. The shishálh and Tk’emlúps people, and indeed all members of the Class have exercised laws, customs and traditions integral to their distinctive societies prior to contact with Europeans. In particular, and from a time prior to contact with Europeans, these Nations have sustained their individual members, communities and distinctive cultures by speaking their languages and practicing their customs and traditions.

46. As a result of Residential School Policy, Class members were denied the ability to exercise and enjoy their Aboriginal Rights in the context of their collective expression within the Bands, some particulars of which include, but are not limited to:

- (a) shisháhlh, Tk'emlúps and other Aboriginal cultural, spiritual and traditional activities have been lost or impaired;
- (b) the traditional social structures, including the equal authority of male and female leaders have been lost or impaired;
- (c) the shisháhlh, Tk'emlúps and other Aboriginal languages have been lost or impaired;
- (d) traditional shisháhlh, Tk'emlúps and Aboriginal parenting skills have been lost or impaired;
- (e) shisháhlh, Tk'emlúps and other Aboriginal skills for gathering, harvesting, hunting and preparing traditional foods have been lost or impaired; and,
- (f) shisháhlh, Tk'emlúps and Aboriginal spiritual beliefs have been lost or impaired.

47. Canada had at all material times and continues to have a duty to protect the Class members' Aboriginal Rights, including the exercise of their spiritual practices and traditional protection of their lands and resources, and an obligation not to undermine or interfere with the Class members' Aboriginal Rights. Canada has failed in these duties, without justification, through its Residential Schools Policy.

Vicarious Liability

48. Canada is vicariously liable for the negligent performance of the fiduciary, constitutionally-mandated, statutory and common law duties of its Agents.

49. Additionally, the Plaintiffs hold Canada solely responsible for the creation and implementation of the Residential Schools Policy and, furthermore:

- a. The Plaintiffs expressly waive any and all rights they may possess to recover from Canada, or any other party, any portion of the Plaintiffs' loss that may be attributable to the fault or liability of any third-party and for which Canada might reasonably be entitled to claim from any one or more third-party for contribution, indemnity or an apportionment at common law, in equity, or pursuant to the British Columbia Negligence Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 333, as amended; and
- b. The Plaintiffs will not seek to recover from any party, other than Canada, any portion of their losses which have been claimed, or could have been claimed, against any third-parties.

Damages

50. As a consequence of the breach of fiduciary, constitutionally-mandated, statutory and common law duties, and breach of Aboriginal Rights by Canada and its Agents, for whom Canada is vicariously liable, the Class has suffered from the loss of the ability to fully exercise their Aboriginal Rights collectively, including the right to have a traditional government based on their own languages, spiritual practices, traditional laws and practices.

Grounds for Punitive and Aggravated Damages

51. Canada deliberately planned the eradication of the language, religion and culture of the Class. The actions were malicious and intended to cause harm, and in the circumstances punitive and aggravated damages are appropriate and necessary.

Legal Basis of Claim

52. The Class members are Aboriginal Indian Bands

53. The Class members' Aboriginal Rights existed and were exercised at all relevant times pursuant to the Constitution Act, 1982, s. 35, being Schedule B to the Canada Act 1982 (UK), 1982, c. 11.

54. At all material times, Canada owed the Plaintiffs and Class members a special and constitutionally-mandated duty of care, good faith, honesty and loyalty pursuant to Canada's constitutional obligations and Canada's duty to act in the best interests of Aboriginal People and especially Aboriginal Children who were particularly vulnerable. Canada breached those duties, causing harm.

55. The Class members are comprised of Aboriginal Peoples who have exercised their respective laws, customs and traditions integral to their distinctive societies prior to contact with Europeans. In particular, and from a time prior to contact with Europeans to the present, the Aboriginal Peoples who comprise the Class members have sustained their people, communities and distinctive culture by exercising their respective laws, customs and traditions in relation to their entire way of life, including language, dance, music, recreation, art, family, marriage and communal responsibilities, and use of resources.

Constitutionality of Sections of the Indian Act

56. The Class members plead that any section of the Act and its predecessors and any Regulation passed under the Act and any other statutes relating to Aboriginal Persons that provide or purport to provide the statutory authority for the eradication of Aboriginal People through the destruction of their languages, culture, practices, traditions and way of life, are in violation of sections 25 and 35(1) of the Constitution Act 1982, sections 1 and 2 of the Canadian Bill of Rights,

R.S.C. 1985, as well as sections 7 and 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and should therefore be treated as having no force and effect.

57. Canada deliberately planned the eradication of the language, spirituality and culture of the Plaintiffs and Class members.

58. Canada's actions were deliberate and malicious and in the circumstances, punitive, exemplary and aggravated damages are appropriate and necessary.

59. The Plaintiffs plead and rely upon the following:

Federal Courts Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. F-7, s. 17;

Federal Courts Rules, SOR/98-106, Part 5.1 Class Proceedings;

SA MAJESTÉ LA REINE DU CHEF DU CANADA

DÉFENDERESSE

CONVENTION DE RÈGLEMENT DU RECOURS COLLECTIF CONCERNANT LES SURVIVANTS ET DESCENDANTS D'ÉLÈVES D'EXTERNATS

ATTENDU QUE :

A. Le Canada et des organismes religieux ont géré des pensionnats indiens, dont la mission consistait à éduquer de jeunes autochtones et dans lesquels des enfants ont subi des préjudices.

B. Le 8 mai 2006, le Canada a conclu la Convention de règlement relative aux pensionnats indiens, qui prévoit une indemnisation et d'autres prestations, y compris le paiement d'expérience commune, liées la fréquentation de pensionnats indiens.

C. Le 15 août 2012, les demandeurs ont déposé un recours collectif putatif devant la Cour fédérale du Canada portant le n° du dossier T-1542-12, Gottfriedson et al. c. Sa Majesté la Reine du chef du Canada (le « recours »). Le 11 juin 2013, une déclaration amendée a été déposée et le 26 juin 2015, une nouvelle déclaration modifiée a été déposée.

D. Le recours a été certifié comme recours collectif par une ordonnance de la Cour fédérale datée du 18 juin 2015, au nom de trois sous-groupes : le groupe des survivants, le groupe des descendants et le groupe des bandes.

E. Les parties ont l'intention de parvenir à un règlement équitable et exhaustif des réclamations du groupe des survivants et du groupe des descendants, et souhaitent en outre promouvoir la vérité, la guérison, l'éducation, la commémoration et la réconciliation. Ils ont négocié cette convention en gardant ces objectifs à l'esprit.

F. Sous réserve de l'ordonnance d'approbation du règlement, les réclamations des membres du groupe des survivants et des membres du groupe des descendants seront réglées conformément aux conditions énoncées dans cette convention.

G. Les parties ont convenu de maintenir les réclamations du groupe des bandes, nonobstant le règlement des réclamations du groupe des survivants et du groupe des descendants. Il a également été convenu que la présente convention ne portera pas atteinte aux droits des parties en ce qui concerne la poursuite du litige relatif aux réclamations des membres du groupe des bandes dans le cadre du recours.

EN CONSÉQUENCE, compte tenu des accords et engagements mutuels décrits dans la présente, les parties conviennent de ce qui suit :

« Date limite ultime des réclamations » désigne la date qui tombe trois (3) mois après la date limite des réclamations.

2. Aucune admission de fait ou de responsabilité

- 2.01 La présente convention ne constitue pas une admission de la part du Canada, ni une constatation par la Cour, d'un fait quelconque, ou d'une responsabilité du Canada concernant l'une ou l'autre des réclamations formulées dans les demandes ou le plaidoyer des demandeurs dans le cadre de l'action, telles qu'elles sont actuellement formulées dans la nouvelle déclaration modifiée, qu'elles ont été formulées dans des versions antérieures ou qu'elles pourraient être formulées à l'avenir.
- 2.02 Sans limiter la portée de ce qui précède, il est entendu que les parties conviennent que, dans le cadre de litiges ultérieurs concernant les réclamations du groupe des bandes, les parties ne soutiendront pas que l'existence de la présente convention ou de toute autre disposition des présentes constitue une reconnaissance de la part des parties, ou une constatation par la Cour, de tout fait ou de toute loi, ou une reconnaissance de la responsabilité du Canada, se rapportant aux réclamations formulées par le groupe des bandes dans le cadre de l'action, ou un règlement ou une résolution des réclamations du groupe des bandes dans le cadre de l'action. Toutefois, aucune disposition susmentionnée ni aucune autre disposition de la présente convention n'empêche les parties de faire référence ou de s'appuyer par ailleurs sur l'existence de la convention et de l'indemnité payée ou payable en vertu de celle-ci dans toute procédure, le cas échéant.

3. Titres

- 3.01 La division de la présente convention en paragraphes, titres et l'ajout d'annexes visent uniquement à en faciliter la consultation et ne sauraient affecter l'interprétation de la présente convention.

4. Sens étendu

- 4.01 Dans les présentes, le singulier comprend le pluriel et vice versa, le masculin ou le féminin s'applique aux personnes de l'un ou de l'autre sexe, et le mot personne comprend les particuliers, les partenariats, les associations, les fiducies, les organismes non constitués en société, les sociétés et les autorités gouvernementales. L'expression « y compris » signifie « y compris, sans restreindre la généralité de ce qui précède ».

5. Ambiguïté

- 5.01 Les parties reconnaissent qu'elles ont examiné les modalités de la présente convention et qu'elles ont contribué à les établir, et elles conviennent que toute règle d'interprétation selon laquelle les ambiguïtés seront réglées à l'encontre des parties chargées de la rédaction ne s'appliquera pas à l'interprétation des présentes.

6. Renvois législatifs

- 6.01 Dans la présente convention, à moins que l'objet ou le contexte n'exige une interprétation différente ou sauf disposition contraire des présentes, toute référence à une loi renvoie à cette loi telle qu'elle a été promulguée à la date de son entrée en vigueur ou telle qu'elle a pu être modifiée, promulguée de nouveau ou remplacée, et comprend tout règlement pris en vertu de celle-ci.

7. Jour de prise de mesures

- 7.01 Si le délai dans lequel une mesure doit être prise en vertu des présentes expire ou lors d'un jour non ouvrable, cette mesure peut être prise le prochain jour ouvrable suivant cette journée.

8. Ordonnance définitive

- 8.01 Aux fins des présentes, un jugement ou une ordonnance devient définitif à l'expiration du délai d'appel ou de demande d'autorisation d'en appeler d'un jugement ou d'une ordonnance, sans qu'un appel ne soit porté ou sans qu'on ait demandé l'autorisation d'interjeter appel ou, dans les cas contraires, lorsque l'appel ou la demande d'autorisation et les autres appels ont été tranchés et que tout autre dernier délai d'appel est expiré.

9. Devise

- 9.01 Tous les montants en devise dans les présentes sont indiqués en dollars canadiens.

10. Indemnité globale

- 10.01 Il est entendu que les montants payables en vertu des présentes sont inclusifs de tout intérêt avant ou après jugement ou de tout autre montant pouvant être réclamé par les membres du groupe des survivants ou les membres du groupe des descendants au Canada en raison des réclamations abandonnées.

11. Annexes

- 11.01 Les annexes suivantes sont incorporées aux présentes et en font partie intégrante :

Annexe A : Nouvelle déclaration modifiée, déposée le 26 juin 2015

Annexe B : Ordonnance d'autorisation, datée du 18 juin 2015

Annexe C : Processus de règlement des revendications

Annexe D : Processus de réclamation successorale

Annexe E : Liste des pensionnats indiens concernés par le processus réclamation

Annexe F : Plan de distribution du Fonds de revitalisation destiné aux anciens élèves externes

Annexe G : Projet d'ordonnance d'autorisation modifié (re : réclamations du groupe des bandes)

Annexe H : Projet de deuxième déclaration modifiée, projet sans description des modifications antérieures ou actuellement proposées.(re : réclamations du groupe des bandes)

12. Aucune autre obligation

12.01 Toute action, cause d'action, responsabilité, réclamation et demande de quelque nature que ce soit visant à réclamer des dommages-intérêts, des contributions, des indemnités, des coûts, des dépenses et des intérêts que tout membre du groupe des survivants ou du groupe des descendants a déjà eus, a actuellement ou pourrait avoir à l'avenir en rapport avec l'action contre le Canada, que ces réclamations ont été présentées ou auraient pu l'être dans le cadre de toute procédure, sera définitivement réglée selon les conditions énoncées dans la présente convention à la date de l'ordonnance d'approbation, et le Canada n'aura aucune autre responsabilité que celles énoncées dans les présentes.

13. Intégralité de la convention

- 13.01 La présente convention constitue la convention complète entre les parties en ce qui concerne les réclamations du groupe des survivants et du groupe des descendants présentées dans le cadre de l'action, et annule et remplace tous les accords et conventions antérieurs ou autres conclus entre les parties à cet égard. Il n'existe aucune déclaration, aucune garantie, aucune modalité, aucune condition, aucun engagement, aucune entente ou aucune convention accessoire, expresse, implicite ou statutaire entre les parties, en ce qui concerne l'objet des présentes, autre que ce qui est expressément énoncé ou mentionné dans les présentes.

14. Portée de la Convention

- 14.01 La présente convention est exécutoire et s'applique au profit des parties, des membres du groupe des survivants, des membres du groupe des descendants et de leurs héritiers, ayants droit, représentants désignés et représentants personnels respectifs.

15. Réclamation du groupe des bandes

- 15.01 Rien dans les présentes n'a pour but de porter atteinte aux droits des parties en ce qui concerne la poursuite du litige relatif aux réclamations du groupe des bandes dans le cadre de l'action.
- 15.02 Les réclamations du groupe des bandes qui sont maintenues sont énoncées dans le projet d'ordonnance d'autorisation modifiée (re : réclamations du groupe des bandes), joint à titre d'annexe G et le projet de deuxième déclaration modifiée concernant les réclamations du groupe des bandes (re : réclamations du groupe des bandes), joint à titre d'annexe H.

16. Lois applicables

- 16.01 La présente convention est régie par les lois de la province ou du territoire où réside le membre du groupe des survivants ou le membre du groupe des descendants et par les lois du Canada qui s'y appliquent et est interprétée conformément à celles-ci.

17. Exemplaires

- 17.01 La présente convention peut être signée en plusieurs exemplaires, chacun étant réputé être un original et, pris dans leur ensemble, étant réputé constituer une seule et même convention.

18. Langues officielles

- 18.01 Le Canada préparera la traduction française des présentes pour utilisation lors des audiences d'approbation du règlement devant la Cour. Dès que possible après la signature de la présente convention, le Canada prendra des dispositions pour la préparation d'une version française faisant autorité. La version française aura le même poids et la même force de loi que la version anglaise.

19. Caractère exécutoire

- 19.01 Cette convention deviendra exécutoire à compter de sa date d'entrée en vigueur, et liera toutes les parties, tous les membres du groupe des survivants et du groupe et tous les membres du groupe des descendants. L'ordonnance d'approbation de la Cour constitue une approbation des présentes à l'égard de tous les membres du groupe des survivants et des membres du groupe des descendants.

20. Indivisibilité de la convention

- 20.01 Aucune disposition de la présente convention n'entrera en vigueur tant que la Cour n'aura pas approuvé les présentes.

LE FONDS DE REVITALISATION DESTINÉ AUX ANCIENS ÉLÈVES EXTERNES

21. Fonds de revitalisation destiné aux anciens élèves externes

- 21.01 Le Canada accepte de verser la somme de cinquante millions de dollars (50 000 000,00 $) au Fonds de revitalisation destiné aux anciens élèves externes pour financer des activités, destinées aux membres du groupe des survivants et les membres du groupe des descendants, visant à promouvoir la guérison, le mieux-être, l'éducation, la langue, la culture, le patrimoine et la commémoration.
- 21.02 Les sommes indiquées au paragraphe 21.01 de la présente seront versées par le Canada à la Société de revitalisation pour les élèves externes dans les trente (30) jours suivant la date de mise en œuvre.

SOCIÉTÉ DE REVITALISATION POUR LES ÉLÈVES EXTERNES

22. Création de la Société de revitalisation pour les élèves externes

- 22.01 Les parties conviennent que la Société de revitalisation pour les élèves externes utilisera le Fonds pour financer des activités destinées aux membres du groupe des survivants et les membres du groupe des descendants, visant à promouvoir la guérison, le mieux-être, l'éducation, la langue, la culture, le patrimoine et la commémoration. L'argent du Fonds sera détenu par la Société de revitalisation pour les élèves externes, qui sera constituée en tant qu'organisme « sans but lucratif » en vertu de la British Columbia Societies Act (S.B.C. 2015, c. 18), de toute législation fédérale analogue ou de toute loi de l'une des provinces ou de l'un des territoires avant la date de mise en œuvre. La Société sera indépendante du gouvernement du Canada, ce dernier ayant toutefois le droit de nommer un représentant au sein de son conseil d'administration.
- 22.02 Un projet de plan de Fonds de revitalisation destiné aux anciens élèves des externats est joint aux présentes à titre d'annexe F.

- 22.03 Le Fonds est destiné à soutenir les membres du groupe des survivants et les membres du groupe des descendants en complément aux programmes du gouvernement fédéral et ne sauraient en faire double emploi.

23. Administrateurs

- 23.01 Les cinq premiers administrateurs de la Société seront nommés par les parties.
- 23.02 Le conseil d'administration de la Société aura une représentation nationale et sera composé d'un administrateur nommé par le Canada. Le représentant nommé par le Canada ne sera pas un salarié ou un fonctionnaire du Canada.

24. Responsabilités des administrateurs

- 24.01 Les administrateurs de la Société géreront ou superviseront la gestion des activités et des affaires de la Société de revitalisation pour les élèves externes, qui recevra, détiendra, investira, gèrera et décaissera les sommes décrites dans les dispositions sur le Fonds contenues dans les présentes et toute autre somme transférée dans le Fonds en vertu de la présente convention dans le but de financer des activités visant à promouvoir la guérison, le mieux-être, l'éducation, la langue, la culture, le patrimoine et la commémoration pour les membres du groupe des survivants et les membres du groupe des descendants.

INDEMNITÉS POUR LES DEMANDEURS INDIVIDUELS

25. Indemnité liée à la fréquentation d'externat

- 25.01 Le Canada versera la somme de dix mille dollars (10 000 $) à titre de dommages-intérêts généraux non pécuniaires, sans aucune déduction, à chaque demandeur dont la réclamation a été approuvée dans le cadre du processus de réclamation.

25.02 Le demandeur a droit au versement d'une indemnité lié à la fréquentation d'externat et sa réclamation sera approuvée s'il satisfait aux critères d'admissibilité suivants :

- a. la réclamation concerne un ancien élève externe qui était vivant le 30 mai 2005;
- b. la réclamation est remise à l'administrateur des réclamations avant la date limite ultime des réclamations;
- c. la réclamation concerne la fréquentation par d'anciens élèves externes de pensionnats indiens figurant sur la liste 1 ou la liste 2 de l'annexe E pendant les périodes qui y sont indiquées pour toute partie d'une année scolaire donnée satisfaisant aux trois conditions suivantes, à savoir qu'il doit s'agir d'une année scolaire pour laquelle l'ancien élève externe ou l'exécuteur testamentaire, le représentant ou l'héritier qui a présenté une demande à la place de l'ancien élève :
 - i. n'a pas reçu un paiement d'expérience commune en vertu de la CRRPI;
 - ii. n'a pas reçu et ne recevra pas d'indemnisation en vertu du règlement McLean;
 - iii. n'a pas reçu une indemnisation en vertu de tout autre règlement concernant une école figurant à l'Annexe K du règlement McLean.

25.03 Pour plus de clarté, pour toute année scolaire au cours de laquelle un membre du groupe des survivants était admissible au paiement d'expérience commune en vertu de la CRRPI, mais qui n'en a pas fait la demande, aucune réclamation relative au paiement d'indemnité lié à la fréquentation d'externat en vertu de la présente convention ne peut être faite en ce qui concerne ce membre du groupe des survivants pour cette année scolaire.

26. Aucune limite pour les réclamations

- 26.01 Il a été convenu qu'il n'y a pas de limite ou de plafond imposé au Canada en ce qui concerne son obligation de payer les réclamations approuvées. Toutes les réclamations approuvées seront entièrement payées par le Canada.

27. Transfert de fonds par le Canada

- 27.01 Conformément au processus de réclamation, le Canada transférera des fonds directement à l'administrateur des réclamations pour garantir le paiement des indemnités en ce qui concerne les réclamations approuvées.

28. Prestations sociales

- 28.01 Le Canada fera de son mieux pour obtenir l'accord des provinces et des territoires afin que la réception de tout paiement en vertu des présentes n'affecte pas le montant, la nature ou la durée des prestations sociales ou des prestations d'aide sociale payables à un demandeur en vertu des lois de toute province ou de tout territoire du Canada.
- 28.02 En outre, le Canada fera de son mieux pour obtenir l'accord des ministères du gouvernement du Canada concernés pour que la réception de tout paiement en vertu des présentes n'affecte pas le montant, la nature ou la durée de toute prestation sociale ou d'aide sociale payable à un demandeur en vertu de tout programme fédéral de prestations sociales, y compris la Sécurité de la vieillesse et le Régime de pensions du Canada.

MISE EN ŒUVRE DE LA PRÉSENTE CONVENTION

29. L'action

- 29.01 La nouvelle déclaration modifiée dans le cadre de l'action est jointe aux présentes à titre d'annexe A.

- 29.02 Les parties conviennent que les demandeurs solliciteront l'autorisation de la Cour, sur consentement et dans le cadre de la demande d'approbation des présentes, de déposer le projet de deuxième déclaration modifiée dans le cadre de l'action, qui est jointe à titre d'annexe H.

30. Ordonnance d'autorisation

- 30.01 L'ordonnance d'autorisation est jointe à titre d'annexe B.
- 30.02 Les parties conviennent que les demandeurs solliciteront une ordonnance de la Cour, sur consentement et dans le cadre de la demande d'approbation de la présente convention par la Cour, qui émettra l'ordonnance d'autorisation modifiée, laquelle est jointe à titre d'annexe G.

31. Plans de notification

- 31.01 Les parties conviennent que les demandeurs solliciteront une ordonnance de la Cour, sur consentement, approuvant le plan de notification de la convention de règlement, par lequel les membres du groupe des survivants et les membres du groupe des descendants seront notifiés de la convention, de ses modalités, de la procédure à suivre pour obtenir de plus amples informations et de la procédure à suivre pour faire part de leurs commentaires avant et pendant l'audience d'approbation du règlement.
- 31.02 Les parties conviennent, en outre, que les demandeurs solliciteront une ordonnance de la Cour, sur consentement et dans le cadre de la demande d'approbation de la convention par la Cour, approuvant un plan de notification de l'approbation du règlement, par lequel les membres du groupe des survivants et les membres du groupe des descendants seront notifiés de l'ordonnance d'approbation et de la procédure de demande d'indemnisation.
- 31.03 Le Canada accepte de payer les frais de mise en œuvre du plan de notification de la convention de règlement et du plan de notification de l'approbation du règlement.

RÉCLAMATIONS FAITES PAR LES REPRÉSENTANTS PERSONNELS ET LES REPRÉSENTANTS DÉSIGNÉS

32. Indemnité en cas de décès

- 32.01 Si un ancien élève externe est mort le 30 mai 2005 ou meurt après, une réclamation peut être soumise au nom des héritiers ou de la succession de l'ancien élève externe décédé, conformément au processus de réclamation de la succession décrit à l'annexe D.

33. Personne frappée d'incapacité

- 33.01 Si un ancien élève externe jour soumet une réclamation à l'administrateur des réclamations avant la date limite ultime des réclamations et que la réclamation est approuvée, mais que l'ancien élève est ou devient frappé d'incapacité avant de recevoir une indemnité liée à la fréquentation d'externat, cette indemnité sera versée à son représentant personnel.

34. Exclusion de responsabilité relative aux réclamations

- 34.01 Le Canada, l'administrateur des réclamations, les avocats du groupe et l'examineur indépendant ne seront pas responsables, et seront de fait dégagés de toute responsabilité par les demandeurs, en ce qui concerne les réclamations, demandes reconventionnelles, poursuites, actions, causes d'action, demandes, dommages, pénalités, blessures, compensations, jugements, dettes, coûts (y compris, mais sans s'y limiter, les honoraires d'avocat, les débours et les dépenses) ou toute autre responsabilité de quelque nature que ce soit découlant d'un paiement ou d'un non-paiement à un représentant personnel ou à un représentant désigné dans le cadre de la présente convention et de toute ordonnance du tribunal l'approuvant.

PROCESSUS DE RÉCLAMATION

35. Principes régissant l'administration des réclamations

35.01 Le processus de réclamation se veut rapide, peu coûteux, convivial, sensible aux aspects culturels et tenant compte des traumatismes subis. L'objectif est de réduire au minimum le fardeau imposé aux demandeurs qui formulent leurs réclamations et de limiter toute probabilité de nouveau traumatisme au cours du processus de réclamation. L'administrateur des réclamations et l'examineur indépendant doivent, en l'absence de motifs raisonnables contraires, tenir pour acquis que le demandeur agit honnêtement et de bonne foi. Lors de l'examen d'une demande, l'administrateur des réclamations et l'examineur indépendant tireront toutes les conclusions raisonnables et favorables possibles en faveur du demandeur.

36. Processus de règlement des revendications

36.01 Le processus de réclamation est décrit à l'annexe C.

ADMINISTRATEUR DES RÉCLAMATIONS

37. Fonctions de l'administrateur des réclamations

37.01 Les fonctions et les responsabilités de l'administrateur des réclamations sont les suivantes :

- a. élaborer, installer et mettre en œuvre des systèmes ainsi que des formulaires et fournir des renseignements, des lignes directrices et des procédures pour le traitement des réclamations par copie papier ou par voie électronique, conformément à la présente convention;
- b. élaborer, installer et mettre en œuvre des systèmes et des procédures pour le paiement des indemnités des anciens élèves externes conformément à la présente convention;

- c. prévoir l'embauche du personnel requis pour lui permettre de s'acquitter de ses fonctions, et assurer leur formation et leur instruction;
- d. tenir des comptes exacts ou s'assurer de la tenue de comptes exacts en ce qui concerne ses activités et son administration, y compris la préparation des états financiers, des rapports et des dossiers exigés par la Cour;
- e. présenter aux parties un rapport mensuel sur les réclamations reçues et réglées, et sur les pensionnats indiens concernés par les réclamations;
- f. répondre aux demandes de renseignements concernant les réclamations, examiner les réclamations, prendre des décisions relatives aux réclamations, communiquer ses décisions conformément à la présente convention et fournir des renseignements aux demandeurs concernant le processus de réexamen tel que décrit dans le processus de réclamation;
- g. communiquer avec les demandeurs en anglais ou en français, selon la préférence du demandeur, et, si un demandeur exprime le désir de communiquer dans une langue autre que l'anglais ou le français, faire de son mieux pour répondre à cette demande;
- h. toutes les autres fonctions et responsabilités que la Cour peut lui assigner.

38. Nomination de l'administrateur des réclamations

- 38.01 L'administrateur des réclamations sera nommé par la Cour sur recommandation des parties.

39. Fonctions de l'examineur indépendant

- 39.01 Le rôle de l'examineur indépendant est de statuer sur toute demande de réexamen présentée par un demandeur conformément au processus de réclamation décrit à l'annexe C. Le ou les examineurs indépendants seront nommés par la Cour sur recommandation des parties.

40. Coûts du processus de réclamation

40.01 Les coûts du processus de réclamation, y compris ceux de l'administrateur des réclamations et de l'examineur indépendant, seront payés par le Canada.

41. Ordonnance d'approbation

41.01 Les parties conviennent de demander à la Cour une ordonnance d'approbation des présentes sous une forme convenue par les parties et comprendra notamment une disposition :

- a. incorporant par renvoi la présente convention dans son intégralité, y compris toutes les annexes;
- b. indiquant et stipulant que l'ordonnance lie tous les membres du groupe des survivants et du groupe des descendants, y compris les personnes frappées d'incapacité;
- c. indiquant et stipulant que les réclamations du groupe des survivants et du groupe des descendants énoncés dans la première déclaration modifiée, déposée le 26 juin 2015, sont rejetées, et donnant effet aux quittances et aux clauses connexes énoncées aux articles 42.01 et 43.01 afin de garantir le règlement de toutes les réclamations du groupe des survivants et du groupe des descendants.

42. Règlement des réclamations du groupe des survivants et du groupe des descendants

42.01 L'ordonnance d'approbation demandée à la Cour déclarera que :

- a. chaque membre du groupe des survivants ou, s'il est décédé, sa succession (ci-après « le cédant du survivant »), a donné quittance entière et définitive au Canada, ses fonctionnaires, ses agents, ses gestionnaires et ses employés, de toute action, cause d'action, responsabilité en vertu common law, en droit civil du Québec et découlant de la loi, contrats, réclamations et demandes de quelque nature que ce soit, qu'elle ait été déposée pour le groupe des survivants dans la première déclaration modifiée déposée le 26 juin 2015 dans le cadre de l'action, ou qui aurait pu être déposée par tout cédant individuel du survivant dans le cadre d'une action civile, qu'elle soit connue ou inconnue, pour des dommages, contributions, indemnités, coûts, dépenses et intérêts que ce cédant a détenus, détient ou pourrait détenir du fait de sa fréquentation en qualité d'élève externe dans un pensionnat indien, à tout moment.

- b. chaque membre du groupe des descendants ou, s'il est décédé, sa succession (ci-après « le cédant du descendant »), a donné quittance entière et définitive au Canada, ses fonctionnaires, ses agents, ses gestionnaires et ses employés, de toute action, cause d'action, responsabilité en vertu common law, en droit civil du Québec et découlant de la loi, contrats, réclamations et demandes de quelque nature que ce soit, qu'elle ait été déposée pour le groupe des descendants dans la première déclaration modifiée déposée le 26 juin 2015 dans le cadre de l'action, ou qui aurait pu être déposée par tout cédant individuel du descendant dans le cadre d'une action civile, qu'elle soit connue ou inconnue, pour des dommages, contributions, indemnités, coûts, dépenses et intérêts que ce cédant a détenus, détient ou pourrait détenir du fait de la fréquentation d'un membre de sa famille en qualité d'élève externe dans un pensionnat indien, à tout moment.
- c. Toutes les causes d'actions ou réclamations formulées par les membres du groupe des survivants et les membres du groupe des descendants, ainsi que leurs demandes de réparation pécuniaire, de mesure de redressement déclaratoire ou autre, dans la première déclaration de réclamation modifiée déposée le 26 juin 2015, sont rejetées d'un commun accord par les parties sans examen de leur bien-fondé, et ne seront pas traitées lors de l'examen des réclamations du groupe des bandes.

- d. le Canada peut invoquer les quittances susmentionnées comme pour se défendre dans le cadre de toute action en justice visant à obtenir des indemnités du Canada pour les réclamations du groupe des survivants et du groupe des descendants, telles qu'elles sont énoncées dans la première déclaration modifiée. Il est toutefois entendu que les quittances susmentionnées et l'ordonnance d'approbation ne doivent pas être interprétées comme si elles avaient pour effet de décharger, exclure ou supprimer toute cause d'action ou réclamation que les membres du groupe de la bande pourraient avoir en droit en tant que personnes morales distinctes ou en tant que personne juridique ayant la qualité et l'autorité pour soumettre des réclamations fondées en droit pour la violation des droits collectifs de leurs peuples autochtones respectifs, y compris dans la mesure où de telles causes d'action, réclamations, violations de droits ou manquements à des obligations dues au groupe des bandes sont décrites dans la première déclaration modifiée déposée le 26 juin 2015, même si ces causes d'action, réclamations, violations de droits ou manquements à des obligations sont fondées sur une faute présumée commise à l'égard des membres du groupe des survivants ou des membres du groupe des descendants énoncée ailleurs dans l'un ou l'autre de ces documents.
- e. tout cédant de survivant et tout cédant de descendant est réputé convenir que s'il présente une réclamation, une demande ou s'ils engagent une action ou une procédure contre une personne, des personnes ou une personnalité dans laquelle une réclamation pourrait être faite contre le Canada pour des dommages-intérêts, une contribution, une indemnité ou tout autre dédommagement, en vertu d'une loi, de la common law ou du droit civil du Québec, en ce qui concerne les allégations et les faits énoncés dans le cadre de l'action, y compris toute réclamation contre des provinces ou des territoires ou d'autres personnalités juridiques ou groupes, y compris, mais sans s'y limiter, des organismes religieux ou autres qui ont joué un rôle quelconque dans les pensionnats indiens, le cédant d'un survivant ou d'un descendant limitera expressément sa réclamation de manière à exclure toute forme de responsabilité du Canada.

- f. lorsqu'une décision définitive concernant une réclamation est prise dans le cadre du processus de réclamation et conformément à celui-ci, chaque cédant de survivant ou de descendant est également réputé avoir accepté de quittance les parties, les avocats du groupe, les avocats du Canada, l'administrateur des réclamations, l'examineur indépendant et toute autre partie participant au processus de réclamation, de toute réclamation découlant ou pouvant découler de l'application du processus de réclamation, y compris, mais sans s'y limiter, de l'insuffisance de l'indemnité reçue.

43. Contrepartie réputée du Canada

- 43.01 Les obligations et les responsabilités du Canada qui sont prévues par les présentes constituent la contrepartie pour les quittances et autres engagements énoncés dans les présentes et cette contrepartie constitue un règlement complet et final de toute demande dont il est question dans les présentes. Les cédants des survivants et les cédants des descendants n'ont droit qu'aux prestations prévues et aux indemnités payables en vertu des présentes, en tout ou en partie, comme seul recours pour telle action, cause d'action, responsabilité, réclamation ou demande.

HONORAIRES ET DÉBOURS

44. Honoraires et débours des avocats du groupe

- 44.01 Tous les honoraires et débours des avocats du groupe, ainsi que les honoraires proposés par les représentants des demandeurs, sont soumis à l'accord sur les honoraires, qui doit être examiné et approuvé par la Cour.
- 44.02 L'approbation de l'accord d'honoraires n'est pas liée à l'approbation par la cour de la présente convention. Le refus de la Cour d'approuver l'accord d'honoraires, en tout ou en partie, n'aura aucun effet sur l'approbation ou la mise en œuvre de la présente convention.

45. Aucuns autres frais ou débours ne sera facturé

- 45.01 Les parties reconnaissent que c'est leur intention que tous les paiements aux membres du groupe des survivants en vertu des présentes soient effectués sans aucune déduction à titre d'honoraires ou de débours.

EXPIRATION ET CONDITIONS

46. Expiration de la convention

- 46.01 La présente convention sera en vigueur tant que toutes les obligations qu'elle contient n'aurent pas été remplies et que la Cour ordonne qu'elle soit terminée.

47. Modifications

- 47.01 Sauf disposition contraire expresse de la présente convention, aucune modification ne sera apportée à celle-ci, y compris aux annexes, à moins que les parties y consentent par écrit et que la Cour l'approuve.

48. Incessibilité

- 48.01 Aucun montant payé en vertu des présentes ne peut faire l'objet d'une cession, et toute cession est nulle d'une nullité absolue, sauf disposition expresse dans les présentes. Si un élève externe est décédé ou est réputé frappé d'incapacité et que la réclamation a été approuvée, les indemnités dues seront versées à son représentant désigné ou à son représentant personnel, respectivement.

CONFIDENTIALITÉ

49. Confidentialité

49.01 Tout renseignement fourni, créé ou obtenu dans le cadre de la présente convention, qu'il soit écrit ou oral, sera traité de façon confidentielle par les parties et les avocats du groupe, les demandeurs, l'administrateur des réclamations et l'examineur indépendant et ne sera pas utilisé à d'autres fins que celles du présent règlement, à moins que les parties n'en disposent autrement, que la présente convention ou la législation fédérale, provinciale ou territoriale applicable en matière de protection de la vie privée ne l'autorise ou que la Cour ne l'ordonne.

50. Destruction des renseignements et des documents du demandeur

50.01 L'administrateur des réclamations détruira, dans les deux (2) ans suivant le versement effectif de la totalité de l'indemnité, tous les renseignements et documents relatifs aux demandeurs qu'il a en sa possession, à moins que le demandeur, le représentant désigné ou le représentant personnel ne demande expressément la restitution de ces renseignements au cours de la période de deux (2) ans. Dès réception d'une telle demande, l'administrateur des réclamations transmettra au demandeur les renseignements exigés.

50.02 Dans les deux (2) ans suivant une décision de réexamen, l'examineur indépendant détruira tous les renseignements et documents du demandeur en sa possession, à moins qu'un demandeur, un représentant désigné ou un représentant personnel ne demande spécifiquement la restitution de ces renseignements au cours de la période de deux (2) ans. Dès réception d'une telle demande, l'examineur indépendant transmettra au demandeur les renseignements exigés.

50.03 Avant la destruction des documents, l'administrateur des réclamations et l'examineur indépendant doivent établir une liste indiquant (i) le nom de l'élève externe, (ii) l'année ou les années scolaires où il a fréquenté le ou les pensionnats et (iii) le ou les pensionnats indiens en raison desquels l'indemnité à la fréquentation d'externat a été versée, et la remettre au Canada. Nonobstant toute autre disposition de la présente convention, cette liste doit être conservée par le Canada de façon strictement confidentielle et ne peut être utilisée que dans le cadre d'une procédure judiciaire ou de règlement, le cas échéant, pour démontrer quelles personnes ont reçu l'indemnité liée à la fréquentation d'externat et pour quelle(s) année(s) scolaire(s) et concernant quel(s) pensionnat(s) indien(s), ce à quoi les parties conviendront sans autre preuve.

51. Confidentialité des négociations

- 51.01 À moins que les parties n'en conviennent autrement, l'engagement de confidentialité concernant les discussions et toutes les communications, écrites ou orales, faites dans le cadre et en marge des négociations débouchant sur les échanges de lettres d'offre et d'acceptation, et le présent accord restent en vigueur.

COOPÉRATION

52. Coopération avec le Canada

- 52.01 Dès la signature de la présente convention, les représentants des demandeurs et les avocats du groupe coopéreront avec le Canada et feront de leur mieux pour obtenir l'approbation de la présente convention par la Cour. Ils feront en outre des efforts raisonnables pour obtenir le soutien et la participation des membres du groupe des survivants et des membres du groupe des descendants en ce qui concerne toutes les présentes.

53. Annonces publiques

- 53.01 À la date convenue, les parties feront des annonces publiques visant à soutenir la présente convention et continueront de s'exprimer publiquement en faveur de celle-ci.

Shelly Nadine Hoehn est née le 23 juin 1952 et a fréquenté le SIRS pendant huit ans, entre 1958 et 1966. Shelly Nadine Hoehn est proposée comme représentante des demandeurs du groupe des survivants.~~

9. La demanderesse, Daphne Paul, réside sur les terres de la bande shishálh en Colombie-Britannique. Daphne Paul est née le 13 janvier 1948 et a fréquenté le SIRS pendant huit ans, entre 1953 et 1961. Daphne Paul est proposée comme représentante des demandeurs pour le groupe des survivants.

10. La demanderesse, Violet Catherine Gottfriedson, réside dans la réserve de la bande indienne Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc en Colombie-Britannique. Violet Catherine Gottfriedson est née le 30 mars 1945 et a fréquenté le KIRS pendant quatre ans, entre 1958 et 1962. Violet Catherine Gottfriedson est proposée comme représentante des demandeurs du groupe des survivants.

~~11. — La demanderesse, Doreen Louise Seymour, réside dans la réserve de la bande indienne Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc en Colombie-Britannique. Doreen Louise Seymour est née le 7 septembre 1955 et a fréquenté le KIRS pendant cinq ans, entre 1961 et 1966. Doreen Louise Seymour est proposée comme représentante des demandeurs du groupe des survivants.~~

{01447063.2}

12. La demanderesse, Charlotte Anne Victorine Gilbert (née Larue), réside à Williams Lake en Colombie-Britannique. Charlotte Anne Victorine Gilbert est née le 24 mai 1952 et a fréquenté le KIRS pendant sept ans, entre 1959 et 1966. Charlotte Anne Victorine Gilbert est proposée comme représentante des demandeurs du groupe des survivants.

~~13. Le demandeur, Victor Fraser (également connu sous le nom de Victor Frezie), réside dans la réserve de la bande indienne Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc, en Colombie-Britannique. Victor Fraser est né le 11 juin 1957 et a fréquenté le SIRS pendant six ans, entre 1962 et 1968. Victor Fraser est proposé comme représentant des demandeurs pour le groupe des survivants.~~

14. La demanderesse, Diena Marie Jules, réside dans la réserve de la bande indienne Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc en Colombie-Britannique. Diena Marie Jules est née le 12 septembre 1955 et a fréquenté le KIRS pendant six ans, entre 1962 et 1968. Diena Marie Jules est ~~proposée comme~~ représentante des demandeurs du groupe des survivants.

~~15. Le demandeur, Aaron Joe, réside sur des terres de la bande shishálh. Aaron Joe est né le 19 janvier 1972 et est le fils de Valerie Joe, qui a fréquenté le SIRS en tant qu'élève externe. Aaron Joe est proposé comme représentant des demandeurs pour le groupe des descendants.~~

16. La demanderesse, Rita Poulsen, réside sur des terres de la bande shishálh. Rita Poulsen est née le 8 mars 1974 et est la fille de Randy Joe, qui a fréquenté le SIRS en tant qu'élève externe. Rita Poulsen est ~~proposée comme~~ représentante des demandeurs pour le groupe des descendants.

17. La demanderesse, Amanda Deanne Big Sorrel Horse, réside dans la réserve de la bande indienne Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc. Amanda Deanne Big Sorrel Horse est née le 26 décembre 1974 et est la fille de Jo-Anne Gottfriedson qui a fréquenté le KIRS pendant six ans entre 1961 et 1967. Amanda Deanne Big Sorrel Horse est ~~proposée comme~~ représentante des demandeurs pour le groupe des descendants.

19. Les demandeurs individuels ainsi que les membres proposés du groupe des survivants et des descendants sont en grande partie des membres de la bande shíshálh et de la bande indienne Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc, et des membres des Premières nations du Canada ou sont les fils et les filles de membres de ces communautés autochtones. Les demandeurs individuels et les membres du groupe des survivants et des descendants sont des personnes autochtones au sens de l'article 35 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982.

Le Défendeur

20. Dans cette procédure, le Canada est représenté par le Procureur général du Canada. Le procureur général du Canada représente les intérêts du Canada et du ministre des Affaires autochtones et du Développement du Nord canadien et des ministres qui l'ont précédé, qui étaient responsables des « Indiens » en vertu de l'article 91(24) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, et qui étaient, à tous les moments importants, responsables de l'élaboration et de la mise en œuvre de la politique sur les pensionnats, ainsi que du maintien et du fonctionnement du KIRS et du SIRS.

EXPOSÉ DES FAITS

21. Ces dernières années, le Canada a reconnu les conséquences désastreuses de sa politique des pensionnats sur les peuples autochtones du Canada. La politique des pensionnats du Canada a été élaborée dans le but d'éradiquer la culture et l'identité autochtones et d'assimiler les peuples autochtones du Canada à la société euro-canadienne. Par cette politique, le Canada a détruit les fondements de l'identité de générations d'Autochtones et a causé des dommages incommensurables aux personnes et aux communautés.

22. Le bénéficiaire direct de la politique des pensionnats indiens était le Canada, car ses obligations seraient réduites en proportion du nombre, et des générations, d'Autochtones qui ne reconnaîtraient plus leur identité autochtone et réduiraient leurs revendications de droits en vertu de la Loi et des obligations fiduciaires, constitutionnelles, statutaires et de common law du Canada.

23. La politique des pensionnats a également été profitable au Canada, car elle a permis d'affaiblir les demandes d'indemnisation des peuples autochtones en ce qui concerne leurs terres et leurs ressources traditionnelles. Il en a résulté une séparation des peuples autochtones de leurs cultures, de leurs traditions et, en fin de compte, de leurs terres et de leurs ressources. Cela a permis l'exploitation de ces terres et ressources par le Canada, non seulement sans le consentement des peuples autochtones, mais aussi, contrairement à leurs intérêts, à la Constitution du Canada et à la Proclamation royale de 1763.

24. La réalité de cette injustice et les dommages qu'elle a causés sont désormais reconnus par le premier ministre, au nom du Canada, et par le règlement pancanadien des demandes d'indemnisation des personnes ayant résidé dans les pensionnats du Canada, dans le cadre de la convention mise en œuvre en 2007. En dépit de la confirmation de la réalité des torts et des préjudices causés, un grand nombre de membres des communautés autochtones du Canada ont été exclus de la convention, non pas parce qu'ils n'ont pas fréquenté les pensionnats et subi des préjudices culturels, linguistiques et sociaux, mais simplement parce qu'ils n'étaient pas résidents dans les pensionnats.

25. Cette demande d'indemnisation est faite au nom des membres du groupe des survivants, c'est-à-dire ceux qui ont fréquenté un pensionnat indien ~~recensé~~ pour les préjudices culturels, linguistiques et sociaux résultant de cette fréquentation, ainsi qu'au nom du groupe des descendants, qui sont les descendants de première génération des membres du groupe des survivants, ainsi que du groupe des bandes, qui est constitué des communautés autochtones dans lesquelles se trouvaient les pensionnats indiens ~~recensés, ou auxquelles appartiennent leurs membres et dans lesquelles vivent la majorité des membres~~ du groupe des survivants et des descendants.

26. Les demandes d'indemnisation des représentants des demandeurs proposés concernent les préjudices subis à la suite de leur fréquentation des pensionnats KIRS et SIRS et à leur exposition à la politique des pensionnats. Elles ne concernent pas les demandes d'indemnisation découlant de leur internat au KIRS ou au SIRS pour lequel une indemnisation spécifique a été versée en vertu de la convention. La présente demande vise à obtenir une indemnisation pour les victimes de cette politique dont les demandes ont été ignorées par le Canada et ont été exclues de l'indemnisation prévue par la convention.

Le système des pensionnats

27. Les pensionnats ont été créés par le Canada avant 1874, pour l'éducation des enfants autochtones. Au début du vingtième siècle, le Canada a conclu des conventions officielles avec diverses organisations religieuses (les « Églises ») pour l'exploitation des pensionnats. En vertu de ces conventions, le Canada contrôlait, réglementait, supervisait et dirigeait tous les aspects du fonctionnement des pensionnats. Les Églises ont assumé le fonctionnement quotidien de nombreux pensionnats sous le contrôle, la supervision et la direction du Canada, qui leur versait une subvention par tête. En 1969, le Canada a pris en main la gestion de ces établissements.

28. À partir de 1920, la politique des pensionnats indiens prévoyait la fréquentation obligatoire des pensionnats pour tous les enfants autochtones âgés de 7 à 15 ans. Le Canada a retiré la plupart des enfants autochtones de leur foyer et de leur communauté, puis les a envoyés dans des pensionnats qui se trouvaient souvent très loin de chez eux. Cependant, il arrivait que des enfants autochtones vivent chez eux et dans leur communauté et soient obligés de fréquenter les pensionnats en tant qu'externes et non en tant qu'internes. Cette pratique concernait encore plus d'enfants au cours des dernières années de la politique des pensionnats. Durant leurs années en pensionnat, tous les enfants autochtones étaient confinés et privés de leur héritage, de leurs réseaux de soutien et de leur mode de vie, forcés d'adopter une langue étrangère ainsi qu'une culture qui leur était étrangère, et punis en cas de non-conformité.

29. L'objectif de la politique des pensionnats indiens était l'intégration et l'assimilation complètes des enfants autochtones dans la culture euro-canadienne ainsi que la suppression de leur langue, culture, religion et mode de vie traditionnels. Le Canada a intentionnellement causé les préjudices culturels, linguistiques et sociaux dont ont souffert les peuples et les nations autochtones du Canada. En plus de la cruauté inhérente à la fréquentation forcée par les membres du groupe des survivants dans le cadre de cette même politique des pensionnats, de nombreux enfants fréquentant les pensionnats ont également été victimes d'abus psychologiques, physiques, sexuels et émotionnels, qui se sont poursuivis jusqu'en 1997, date à laquelle le dernier pensionnat a été fermé.

30. Le Canada a fait preuve de déloyauté envers ses peuples autochtones en mettant en œuvre la politique des pensionnats dans son propre intérêt, y compris son intérêt économique, au détriment et à l'exclusion des intérêts des Autochtones envers lesquels le Canada avait des obligations fiduciaires et constitutionnelles. Si elle réussit, l'éradication intentionnelle de l'identité, de la culture, de la langue ainsi que des pratiques spirituelles et ~~de la religion~~ autochtones, réduirait sur plusieurs générations le nombre de personnes auxquelles le Canada est redevable, parce qu'elles ne s'identifieraient plus comme autochtones et elles seraient moins susceptibles de revendiquer leurs droits en tant qu'autochtones.

Les conséquences de la politique des pensionnats sur les membres du recours collectif

La bande indienne Tk'emlúps

31. Tk'emlúpsmc, « le peuple du confluent », aujourd'hui connu sous le nom de bande indienne Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc, fait partie du peuple du plateau le plus septentrional et des peuples de langue salish de l'intérieur Secwépemc (Shuswap) de la Colombie-Britannique. La bande indienne Tk'emlúps a été établie sur une réserve aujourd'hui adjacente à la ville de Kamloops, où le KIRS a été établi par la suite. La plupart, voire la totalité, des élèves qui ont fréquenté le KIRS en externes étaient ou sont membres de la bande indienne Tk'emlúps, résidant ou ayant résidé dans la réserve.

32. Le secwepemctsin est la langue des Secwépemc, et c'est l'unique moyen par lequel les connaissances et l'expérience culturelles, écologiques et historiques du peuple Secwépemc sont comprises et transmises de génération en génération. C'est par la langue, les pratiques spirituelles et le passage de la culture et des traditions, y compris les rituels, les tambours, les danses, les chansons et les histoires, que les valeurs et les croyances du peuple Secwépemc sont comprises et transmises. Du point de vue des Secwépemc, tous les aspects du savoir des Secwépemc, y compris leur culture, leurs traditions, leurs lois et leurs langues, sont fondamentalement et intégralement liés à leurs terres et à leurs ressources.

33. La langue, comme la terre, a été donnée aux Secwépemc par le Créateur pour communiquer avec le peuple et le monde naturel. Cette communication a créé une relation de réciprocité et de coopération entre les Secwépemc et le monde naturel qui leur a permis de survivre et de s'épanouir dans des environnements hostiles. Ces connaissances, transmises oralement à la génération suivante, contenaient les enseignements nécessaires au maintien de la culture, des traditions, des lois et de l'identité des Secwépemc.

34. Pour les Secwépemc, leurs pratiques spirituelles, leurs chants, leurs danses, leurs histoires orales, leurs récits et leurs cérémonies font partie intégrante de leur vie et de leur société. Il est absolument vital de maintenir ces pratiques et ces traditions. Leurs chants, leurs danses, leurs tambours et leurs cérémonies traditionnelles relient les Secwépemc à leur terre et leur rappellent continuellement leurs responsabilités envers la terre, les ressources et le peuple Secwépemc.

35. Les cérémonies et les pratiques spirituelles des Secwépemc, y compris leurs chants, leurs danses, leurs tambours ainsi que le passage des récits et de l'histoire, perpétuent leurs enseignements et leurs lois vitales concernant la récolte des ressources, y compris les plantes médicinales, le gibier et le poisson, de même que la protection et la préservation adéquates et respectueuses des ressources. À titre d'exemple, conformément aux lois Secwépemc, les Secwépemc chantent et prient avant de récolter toute nourriture, tout médicament et toute autre matière provenant de la terre, et font une offrande pour remercier le Créateur ainsi que les esprits pour tout ce qu'ils prennent. Les Secwépemc croient que tous les êtres vivants ont un esprit et qu'il faut leur témoigner le plus grand respect. Ce sont ces croyances vitales et intégrantes ainsi que ces lois traditionnelles, de même que d'autres éléments de la culture et de l'identité secwépemc, que le Canada a voulu faire disparaître avec la politique des pensionnats.

La bande shíshálh

36. La nation shíshálh, une division des Premières nations salish de la côte, occupait à l'origine la partie sud de la côte sud de la Colombie-Britannique. Le peuple shíshálh a colonisé la région il y a des milliers d'années et a occupé environ 80 sites de villages sur un vaste territoire. Le peuple shíshálh est composé de quatre sous-groupes qui parlent la langue shashishalhem, qui est une langue distincte et unique, bien qu'elle fasse partie de la division salish du littoral de la langue salish.

37. La tradition shíshálh décrit la formation du monde shíshálh (histoire de Spelmulh). Au commencement, les esprits créateurs ont été envoyés par l'Esprit divin pour former le monde. Ils ont creusé des vallées laissant une plage le long de la crique de Porpoise Bay. Plus tard, les transformateurs, un corbeau mâle et un vison femelle, ont ajouté des détails en sculptant des arbres et en formant des bassins d'eau.

38. Le chant, la danse et le tambour font partie intégrante de la culture shíshálh et de ses pratiques spirituelles. Ils permettent d'établir un lien avec la terre et le Créateur et de transmettre l'histoire ainsi que les croyances du peuple. Par le chant et la danse, le peuple shíshálh racontait des histoires, bénissait des événements et pouvait même guérir. Leurs chants, leurs danses et leurs tambours marquent également les événements saisonniers importants qui font partie intégrante du peuple shíshálh. Les traditions comprennent également la fabrication et l'utilisation de masques, de paniers, de parures et d'outils pour la chasse et la pêche. Ce sont ces croyances vitales et intégrantes ainsi que ces lois traditionnelles, de même que d'autres éléments de la culture et de l'identité shíshálh, que le Canada a voulu faire disparaître avec la politique des pensionnats.

Les répercussions des pensionnats recensés

39. Pour tous les enfants autochtones qui ont été forcés de fréquenter les pensionnats recensés, une discipline stricte a été appliquée dans le cadre de la politique des pensionnats. À l'école, les enfants n'étaient pas autorisés à parler leur langue autochtone, même avec leurs parents, et les membres de ces communautés autochtones étaient donc forcés d'apprendre l'anglais.

40. La culture autochtone était rigoureusement supprimée par les administrateurs de l'école, conformément aux directives du Canada, et notamment à la politique des pensionnats. Au SIRS, les membres du peuple shishalh convertis au catholicisme ont été contraints de brûler ou de donner aux agents du Canada des totems, des insignes, des masques et autres « attirails des guérisseurs » séculaires et d'abandonner leurs potlachs, leurs danses et leurs festivités hivernales, ainsi que d'autres éléments faisant partie intégrante de la culture et de la société autochtones des peuples shishálh et Secwépemc.

41. Étant donné que le SIRS se trouvait dans la communauté shishálh, l'Église et le gouvernement du Canada surveillaient, directement et par l'intermédiaire de leurs agents, les aînés, qui étaient sévèrement punis s'ils pratiquaient leur culture, parlaient leur langue ou la transmettaient aux jeunes générations. En dépit de cette surveillance, les membres du groupe ont essayé, souvent sans succès, de pratiquer, de protéger et de préserver leurs chants, leurs masques, leurs danses et leurs autres pratiques culturelles.

42. Les Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc ont subi un sort similaire en raison de leur voisinage avec le KIRS.

43. Les enfants qui fréquentaient les pensionnats recensés ont été endoctrinés par le christianisme et ont appris à avoir honte de leur identité, de leur culture, de leur spiritualité et de leurs pratiques autochtones. On les qualifiait, entre autres épithètes désobligeantes, de « sales sauvages » et de « païens » et on leur apprenait à rejeter leur identité. Le mode de vie, les traditions, les cultures et les pratiques spirituelles autochtones des membres du recours collectif ont été supplantés par l'identité euro-canadienne qui leur a été imposée par le Canada dans le cadre de la politique des pensionnats indiens.

44. Cette mise en œuvre de la politique relative aux pensionnats indiens a causé un préjudice supplémentaire aux membres de la classe des survivants des pensionnats recensés, à qui l'on avait enseigné à l'école que les enseignements traditionnels de leurs parents, de leurs grands-parents et de leurs aînés n'avaient aucune valeur et, dans certains cas, qu'il s'agissait de pratiques et de croyances « païennes », et qui, en rentrant chez eux à la fin de la journée scolaire rejetaient les enseignements de leurs parents, de leurs grands-parents et de leurs aînés.

45. Les attaques contre leurs traditions, leurs lois, leur langue et leur culture à travers la mise en œuvre de la politique des pensionnats indiens par le Canada, directement ou par l'intermédiaire de ses agents, ont continué à miner les membres individuels du groupe des survivants, causant une perte d'estime de soi, une dépression, une anxiété, des idées suicidaires, des suicides, des maladies physiques sans causes claires, des difficultés à être parents, des difficultés à maintenir des relations positives, l'abus de substances et la violence, entre autres préjudices et pertes, qui ont tous eu des répercussions sur le groupe des descendants.

46. Les membres du groupe des bandes ont perdu, en partie ou en totalité, leur viabilité économique traditionnelle, leur autonomie gouvernementale et leurs lois, leur langue, leur assise territoriale et leurs enseignements fondés sur la terre, leurs pratiques spirituelles traditionnelles de même que leurs pratiques religieuses, ainsi que le sens intégral de leur identité collective.

47. La politique des pensionnats, mise en œuvre par l'intermédiaire des pensionnats recensés, a dévasté culturellement, linguistiquement et socialement les communautés du groupe des bandes et a modifié leur mode de vie traditionnel.

Le règlement du Canada avec les anciens internes des pensionnats indiens 48. Depuis la fermeture des pensionnats recensés dans les années 1970 jusqu'à la fin des années 1990, les communautés autochtones du Canada ont dû faire face aux préjudices et aux souffrances de leurs membres, conséquence de la politique des pensionnats, sans aucune considération de la part du Canada. À cette époque, les survivants des pensionnats ont commencé à parler de plus en plus ouvertement des conditions horribles et des abus qu'ils ont subis, ainsi que des conséquences dramatiques que cela a eues sur leur vie. De plus, de nombreux survivants se sont suicidés ou ont fait de l'automédication jusqu'à en décéder. Ces décès ont dévasté non seulement les membres du groupe des survivants et du groupe des descendants, mais aussi la vie et la stabilité des communautés représentées par le groupe des bandes.

49. En janvier 1998, le Canada a publié une déclaration de réconciliation, par laquelle il admettait les erreurs de la politique sur les pensionnats indiens et s'en excusait. Le Canada a admis que la politique des pensionnats avait été conçue pour assimiler les Autochtones et qu'il avait eu tort de poursuivre cet objectif. Les demandeurs avancent que la déclaration de réconciliation du Canada constitue une admission par le Canada des faits et des obligations énoncés aux présentes et qu'elle constitue un argument valable pour la demande de dommages-intérêts des demandeurs, en particulier les dommages-intérêts punitifs.

50. La déclaration de réconciliation stipule, en partie, ce qui suit :

Nous ne pouvons malheureusement pas être fiers de la façon dont nous avons traité les Autochtones par le passé. Une attitude fondée sur un sentiment de supériorité raciale et culturelle a conduit à la suppression de la culture et des valeurs autochtones. En tant que pays, nous portons le fardeau des actions passées qui ont eu pour effet d'affaiblir l'identité des peuples autochtones, de faire disparaître leurs langues ainsi que leurs cultures et de rendre illégales leurs pratiques spirituelles. Nous devons admettre les conséquences de ces actions sur les nations autrefois autonomes qui ont été divisées, déstructurées, restreintes ou même détruites par la spoliation des territoires traditionnels, par la réinstallation des Autochtones et par certains articles de la loi sur les Indiens. Nous devons admettre que ces actions ont eu pour résultat de miner les systèmes politiques, économiques et sociaux des peuples et des nations autochtones.

Compte tenu des séquelles historiques, la force et l'endurance des peuples autochtones, qui ont su préserver leur diversité et leur identité historiques, sont remarquables. Le gouvernement du Canada exprime aujourd'hui officiellement à tous les Autochtones du Canada son profond regret pour les actions passées du gouvernement fédéral qui ont conduit à ces pages sombres de l'histoire de nos relations.

Un des volets de notre relation avec les Autochtones qui requiert une attention particulière durant cette période est le système des pensionnats. Ce système a séparé de nombreux enfants de leur famille et de leur communauté et les a empêchés de parler leur propre langue et de connaître leur patrimoine et leur culture. Dans certains cas, il a laissé des séquelles en ce qui concerne la souffrance et le désespoir qui se répercutent encore aujourd'hui dans les communautés autochtones. Malheureusement, certains enfants ont été victimes d'abus physiques et sexuels.

Le gouvernement du Canada reconnaît le rôle qu'il a joué dans la conception et l'administration de ces écoles. Nous tenons à dire aux personnes qui ont vécu le drame des abus physiques et sexuels dans les pensionnats indiens et qui ont porté ce fardeau en croyant que, d'une certaine façon, cela était leur faute, que ce qu'elles ont vécu n'aurait jamais dû se produire. Nous présentons nos plus sincères excuses à ceux d'entre vous qui ont subi ces événements dramatiques dans les pensionnats indiens. En ce qui concerne les séquelles du programme des pensionnats, le gouvernement du Canada propose de travailler avec les Premières nations, les Inuits, les Métis, les Églises et les autres parties intéressées pour résoudre les problèmes de longue date qui doivent être réglés. Nous devons travailler ensemble sur une stratégie permettant d'aider les personnes et les communautés à surmonter les conséquences de cette triste page de notre histoire...

La réconciliation est un processus continu. En renouvelant notre partenariat, nous devons veiller à ce que les erreurs qui ont marqué notre relation passée ne se répètent pas. Le gouvernement du Canada reconnaît que les politiques visant à assimiler les Autochtones, hommes et femmes, ne permettent pas de créer une communauté forte...

51. Le 10 mai 2006 ou vers cette date, le Canada a signé une convention visant à indemniser principalement les personnes ayant été internes dans les pensionnats indiens.

52. La convention prévoit deux types d'indemnisation individuelle : le paiement d'expérience commune (« PEC ») pour le fait d'avoir été interne dans un pensionnat, et une indemnisation fondée sur un processus d'évaluation indépendant (« PEI ») pour offrir des indemnités pour certains sévices subis et les préjudices causés par ces sévices.

53. Le PEC consistait en une indemnité pour les anciens internes d'un pensionnat d'un montant de 10 000 $ pour la première année scolaire ou partie d'une année scolaire et de 3 000 $ supplémentaires pour chaque année scolaire ou partie d'année scolaire suivante d'internat. Le PEC était versé aux internes, car il avait été admis que l'expérience de l'assimilation était préjudiciable et devait faire l'objet d'une indemnisation, indépendamment du fait que l'élève ait subi des violences physiques, sexuelles ou autres pendant son internat. L'autre indemnisation était versée dans le cadre du PEI. Le PEC n'était offert qu'aux anciens internes alors que, dans certains cas, le PEI était offert non seulement aux anciens internes, mais aussi aux autres jeunes qui se trouvaient légalement dans les locaux d'un pensionnat, y compris les anciens externes.

54. La mise en œuvre de la convention marquait la première fois que le Canada acceptait de verser une indemnisation pour les préjudices culturels, linguistiques et sociaux. Le Canada a refusé de verser une indemnité aux membres du groupe des survivants, à savoir les élèves qui ont fréquenté les ~~pensionnats recensés ou d'autres~~ pensionnats, mais qui n'étaient pas internes.

55. La convention a été approuvée par les cours supérieures provinciales et territoriales de la Colombie-Britannique au Québec, en passant par les Territoires du Nord-Ouest, le Territoire du Yukon et le Nunavut, et la convention a été mise en œuvre à compter du 20 septembre 2007.

56. Le 11 juin 2008, le premier ministre Stephen Harper, a présenté ses excuses (« excuses ») au nom du Canada, reconnaissant ainsi les torts causés par la politique canadienne en matière de pensionnats indiens :

Durant plus d'un siècle, les pensionnats indiens ont séparé plus de 150 000 enfants autochtones de leurs familles et de leurs communautés. Dans les années 1870, le gouvernement fédéral, en partie pour respecter son obligation d'éduquer les enfants autochtones, a commencé à jouer un rôle dans le développement et l'administration de ces écoles. Les deux principaux objectifs du système des pensionnats étaient de retirer et d'isoler les enfants de l'influence de leur foyer, de leur famille, de leurs traditions et de leur culture, et de les assimiler à la culture dominante. Ces objectifs reposaient sur l'hypothèse que les cultures et les croyances spirituelles autochtones étaient inférieures et n'avaient pas la même valeur. En fait, certains voulaient, comme il a été dit de façon tristement célèbre, « tuer les Indiens dans l'œuf ». Aujourd'hui, nous sommes conscients que cette politique d'assimilation était erronée, qu'elle a causé de grands préjudices et qu'elle n'a pas sa place dans notre pays. [souligné]

57. En présentant ces excuses, le Premier ministre a reconnu certains faits importants concernant la politique des pensionnats indiens et son impact sur les enfants autochtones :

Le gouvernement du Canada a mis sur pied un système d'éducation dans lequel de très jeunes enfants étaient souvent retirés de force de leur foyer, parfois emmenés loin de leur communauté. Beaucoup étaient mal nourris, habillés et logés. Tous ont été privés des soins et de l'éducation de leurs parents, grands-parents et communautés. Les langues et les pratiques culturelles des Premières nations, des Inuits et des Métis étaient interdites dans ces écoles. Ce qui est tragique, c'est que certains de ces enfants sont morts pendant qu'ils fréquentaient les pensionnats et que d'autres ne sont jamais rentrés chez eux.

Le gouvernement reconnaît maintenant que les conséquences de la politique des pensionnats indiens ont été extrêmement négatives et que cette politique a eu des répercussions durables et dévastatrices sur la culture, le patrimoine et la langue autochtones.

Les conséquences des pensionnats indiens ont contribué aux problèmes sociaux qui existent encore aujourd'hui dans de nombreuses communautés.

Nous sommes conscients aujourd'hui que nous avons eu tort de séparer les enfants de cultures et de traditions riches et vivantes, que cela a créé un vide dans de nombreuses vies et communautés, et nous nous excusons de l'avoir fait. Nous réalisons aujourd'hui qu'en séparant les enfants de leurs familles, nous avons empêché un grand nombre d'entre eux d'élever convenablement leurs propres enfants et avons semé les graines pour les générations suivantes, et nous sommes désolés d'avoir agi ainsi. Nous sommes aujourd'hui conscients que, bien trop souvent, ces institutions ont donné lieu à des abus ou à des négligences et n'étaient pas suffisamment contrôlées, et nous sommes désolés de ne pas avoir su vous protéger. Non seulement vous avez souffert de ces abus pendant votre enfance, mais en devenant parents, vous n'avez pas pu empêcher vos propres enfants de subir la même expérience, et nous en sommes désolés.

Le fardeau de cette expérience pèse sur vos épaules depuis bien trop longtemps. Ce fardeau nous incombe en tant que gouvernement et en tant que pays. Aujourd'hui, il n'y a aucune chance qu'au Canada, le genre de mentalités qui ont conduit au système des pensionnats indiens puisse à nouveau exister. Vous essayez depuis longtemps de vous relever de cette expérience et, de manière très concrète, nous nous joignons maintenant à vous dans cette quête. Le gouvernement du Canada présente des excuses sincères aux peuples autochtones de ce pays et leur demande de lui pardonner d'avoir si gravement manqué à ses obligations envers eux.

58. Malgré les excuses et le fait que le Canada ait reconnu avoir agi injustement, ainsi que l'appel à la reconnaissance des communautés autochtones du Canada et de la Commission de vérité et de réconciliation dans son rapport provisoire de février 2012, le fait que le Canada ait exclu le groupe des survivants de la convention témoigne de son manque de considération vis-à-vis des membres du groupe des survivants. Le Canada continue, comme il l'a fait des années 1970 jusqu'en 2006 concernant les « élèves internes », de nier les préjudices subis par les demandeurs individuels et les membres du groupe des survivants, des descendants et des bandes.

Le manquement du Canada à ses obligations envers les membres des recours collectifs

59. Depuis l'élaboration de la politique sur les pensionnats jusqu'à sa mise en œuvre sous forme de fréquentation forcée des pensionnats recensés, le Canada a gravement manqué à ses obligations envers les membres du groupe des survivants et, ce faisant, a détruit les fondements de l'identité individuelle des membres du groupe des survivants, a volé le patrimoine des membres du groupe des descendants et a infligé des pertes incalculables aux membres du groupe des bandes.

60. Les membres du groupe des survivants, les membres du groupe des descendants et les membres du groupe des bandes ont tous souffert du dysfonctionnement familial, de la pénalisation ou de la suppression des cérémonies traditionnelles ainsi que de la perte de la structure de gouvernance héréditaire qui leur permettait de gouverner leurs peuples et leurs terres.

61. Pendant qu'ils fréquentaient le pensionnat recensé, les membres du groupe des survivants étaient extrêmement vulnérables, et le Canada avait envers eux les plus grandes responsabilités fiduciaires, morales, statutaires, constitutionnelles et de common law, y compris, mais sans s'y limiter, l'obligation de protéger les droits autochtones ainsi que leur culture, leur langue et leur manière de vivre. Le Canada n'a pas respecté ces obligations et a manqué en particulier à sa responsabilité d'assurer la sécurité et le bien-être des survivants pendant leur séjour dans les pensionnats recensés.

Les obligations du Canada

62. Le Canada était responsable de l'élaboration et de la mise en œuvre de tous les aspects de la politique relative aux pensionnats indiens, y compris de tous les volets opérationnels et administratifs. Bien que les Églises aient souvent servi d'agents du Canada pour l'aider à réaliser ses objectifs, ces objectifs et la manière dont ils sont réalisés relèvent des obligations du Canada.

Le Canada était responsable de :

{01447063.2}

- (a) l'administration de la Loi et des lois qui l'ont précédée ainsi que de toutes les autres lois relatives aux Autochtones et de tous les règlements promulgués en vertu de ces lois et des lois qui les ont précédées au cours de la période visée par le recours;
- (b) la gestion, le fonctionnement et l'administration du ministère des Affaires indiennes et du Nord canadien et de ses prédécesseurs et des ministères et départements connexes, ainsi que les décisions prises par ces ministères et services;
- (c) la construction, le fonctionnement, l'entretien, la propriété, le financement, l'administration, la supervision, l'inspection et la vérification des pensionnats recensés, ainsi que la création, la conception et la mise en œuvre du programme d'éducation des Autochtones qui les fréquentent;
- (d) la sélection, le contrôle, la formation, la supervision et la réglementation des personnes responsables des pensionnats recensés, y compris leurs employés, préposés, agents et mandataires, ainsi que des soins, de l'éducation, du contrôle et du bien-être des Autochtones qui fréquentent les pensionnats recensés;
- (e) la préservation, la valorisation, le respect des droits autochtones et la non-ingérence, y compris le droit de garder et de pratiquer leur culture, leur spiritualité, leur langue et leurs traditions et le droit d'apprendre pleinement leur culture, leur spiritualité, leur langue et leurs traditions auprès de leur famille, de leur famille élargie et de leur communauté; et
- (f) la prise en charge et la supervision de tous les membres du groupe des survivants pendant qu'ils fréquentaient les pensionnats recensés au cours de la période concernée par le recours.

63. De plus, le Canada s'est engagé, à chaque occasion importante, à respecter le droit international en ce qui concerne le traitement de son peuple, obligations qui constituent des engagements minimums envers les peuples autochtones du Canada, y compris les groupes de survivants, de descendants et de bandes, et qui ont été violées. Plus particulièrement, les violations commises par le Canada englobent le non-respect des conditions et de l'esprit de :

- (a) la Convention pour la prévention et la répression des crimes de génocide, 78 U.N.T.S. 277, entrée en vigueur le 12 janvier 1951, et plus particulièrement l'article 2(b), (c) et (e) de cette convention, en procédant de manière intentionnelle à la destruction de la culture des enfants et des communautés autochtones, causant des préjudices culturels, psychologiques, émotionnels et physiques profonds et permanents au groupe;
- (b) la Déclaration des droits de l'enfant (1959)? Résolution AG 1386 (XIV), 14 N.U. GAOR Supp. (No 16) à 19, N.U. Doc. A/4354 en ne fournissant pas aux enfants autochtones les moyens nécessaires à leur épanouissement normal, tant sur le plan matériel que spirituel, et en ne leur offrant pas la possibilité de gagner leur vie et de se protéger contre toute forme d'exploitation;

- (c) la Convention sur les droits de l'enfant, Résolution AG 44/25, annexe, 44 NU GAOR Supp. (No 49) à 167, N.U. Doc. A/44/49 (1989); 1577 UNTS 3; 28 ILM 1456 (1989), et plus particulièrement les articles 29 et 30 de cette convention, en ne fournissant pas aux enfants autochtones une éducation visant à développer le respect de leurs parents, de leur identité culturelle, de leur langue et de leurs valeurs, et en niant le droit des enfants autochtones de jouir de leur propre culture, de professer et de pratiquer leur propre religion et d'utiliser leur propre langue;
- (d) le Pacte international relatif aux droits civils et politiques, Résolution AG 2200A (XXI), 21 N.U. GAOR Supp. (No 16) à 52, N.U. Doc. A/6316 (1966), 999 U.N.T.S. 171, entrée en vigueur le 23 mars 1976, et plus particulièrement les articles 1 et 27 de cette convention, en portant atteinte aux droits des membres du recours collectif de conserver et de pratiquer leur culture, leur spiritualité, leur langue et leurs traditions, au droit d'apprendre pleinement leur culture, leur spiritualité, leur langue et leurs traditions auprès de leurs familles, de leurs familles élargies et de leurs communautés, et au droit d'enseigner leur culture, leur spiritualité, leur langue et leurs traditions à leurs propres enfants, petits-enfants, familles élargies et communautés.
- (e) la Déclaration américaine des droits et devoirs de l'homme, OEA (Organisation des États Américains) Résolution XXX, adoptée lors de la neuvième conférence internationale des États américains (1948), reproduite dans les Basic Documents Pertaining to Human Rights in the Inter-American System (documents généraux relatifs aux droits de l'homme dans le système interaméricain), OEA/Ser.L.V//II.82 doc 6 rev.1 à 17 (1992), et en particulier l'article XIII, en violant le droit des membres du groupe de participer à la vie culturelle de leur communauté.
- (f) la Déclaration des Nations Unies sur les droits des peuples autochtones, Résolution AG 61/295, N.U. Doc. A/RES/61/295 (13 sept. 2007), 46 I.L.M. 1013 (2007), entérinée par le Canada le 12 novembre 2010, et plus particulièrement l'article 8, 2(d), qui s'engage à fournir des mécanismes efficaces de réparation pour l'assimilation forcée.

64. Les obligations du Canada en vertu du droit international servent de référence pour les devoirs du Canada en common law, les obligations statutaires, fiduciaires, constitutionnelles et autres, et une violation des obligations internationales susmentionnées est une preuve ou constitue une violation en vertu du droit national.

Violation des obligations fiduciaires et constitutionnelles

{01447063.2}

65. Le Canada a des obligations constitutionnelles et une relation fiduciaire avec les peuples autochtones du Canada. Le Canada a créé, planifié, établi, mis en place, initié, géré, financé, supervisé, contrôlé et réglementé les pensionnats recensés et a élaboré la politique sur les pensionnats. Par ces actes, et en vertu de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982, et des dispositions de la Loi, telle que modifiée, le Canada a assumé le pouvoir et l'obligation d'agir en qualité de fiduciaire en ce qui concerne l'éducation et le bien-être des membres du groupe.

66. Les obligations constitutionnelles du Canada comprennent l'obligation de préserver l'honneur de la Couronne dans toutes ses relations avec les peuples autochtones, y compris les membres du groupe. Cette obligation découle de l'affirmation de la souveraineté de la Couronne dès le premier contact et se poursuit dans le cadre des relations postérieures à la signature des traités. C'est et cela reste une obligation de la Couronne et c'était une obligation de la Couronne à chaque occasion importante. L'honneur de la Couronne est un principe juridique qui exige de la Couronne qu'elle agisse à chaque occasion importante dans ses relations avec les peuples autochtones, depuis le contact jusqu'aux relations post-traités, de la manière la plus honorable possible afin de protéger les intérêts des peuples autochtones.

67. En vertu de ses obligations fiduciaires, le Canada est tenu d'agir en tant que protecteur des droits ancestraux des membres du groupe, y compris la protection et la préservation de leur langue, de leur culture et de leur mode de vie, ainsi que l'obligation de prendre des mesures de réparation pour rétablir la culture, l'histoire et le statut des demandeurs, ou de les aider à le faire. À tout le moins, l'obligation du Canada envers les Autochtones comprenait l'obligation de ne pas réduire délibérément le nombre des bénéficiaires envers lesquels le Canada avait des obligations.

68. Les obligations fiduciaires du Canada et les autres obligations imposées par le mandat constitutionnel assumé par le Canada s'étendent au groupe des descendants parce que l'objectif de la prise en charge de l'éducation du groupe des survivants était d'éradiquer la culture et l'identité de ces enfants autochtones, leur enlevant ainsi leur capacité, à l'âge adulte, de transmettre aux générations suivantes les bases linguistiques, spirituelles, culturelles et comportementales de leur peuple, ainsi que leur capacité d'établir des relations avec leur famille et leur communauté et, en fin de compte, leur capacité de s'identifier comme des Autochtones envers qui le Canada avait des obligations.

69. Les obligations fiduciaires et constitutionnelles du Canada s'étendent à la catégorie des bandes parce que la politique sur les pensionnats avait pour but, et a effectivement eu pour effet, de miner et de chercher à détruire le mode de vie établi et apprécié par ces nations dont les identités étaient et sont considérées comme collectives.

70. Le Canada a agi dans son propre intérêt et à l'encontre des intérêts des enfants autochtones, non seulement en étant déloyal envers les enfants et les communautés autochtones qu'il avait le devoir de protéger, mais en les trahissant en plus. Le Canada a exercé à tort son pouvoir discrétionnaire et son autorité sur les Autochtones, et en particulier sur les enfants, pour son seul bénéfice. Le Canada a appliqué une partie ou la totalité de la politique des pensionnats pour faire disparaître ce qu'il considérait comme le « problème indien ». Plus précisément, le Canada cherchait à se libérer de ses responsabilités morales et financières à l'égard des Autochtones, des dépenses et des inconvénients liés au fait de devoir composer avec des cultures, des langues, des habitudes et des valeurs différentes de l'héritage euro-canadien prédominant au Canada, ainsi que des défis découlant des revendications territoriales.

71. En violation de ses obligations fiduciaires, constitutionnelles, statutaires et de common law envers les groupes de survivants, de descendants et de bandes, le Canada n'a pas réparé, et continue sur la même voie, les préjudices causés par ses agissements abusifs, ses manquements et ses négligences. Plus précisément, le Canada n'a pas pris de mesures adéquates pour réparer les préjudices culturels, linguistiques et sociaux subis par les survivants, les descendants et les membres des bandes, et ce, malgré le fait que le Canada ait reconnu le caractère abusif de la politique des pensionnats indiens depuis 1998.

Violation des droits autochtones

72. Les peuples shishálh et Tk'emlúps, et de fait tous les membres du groupe des bandes, dont descendent les demandeurs individuels, ont pratiqué des lois, des coutumes et des traditions qui faisaient partie intégrante de leurs sociétés distinctives avant le contact avec les Européens. En particulier, avant le contact avec les Européens, ces nations ont soutenu leurs membres individuels, leurs communautés et leurs cultures distinctives en parlant leurs langues et en pratiquant leurs coutumes et traditions.

73. Durant la période où les membres du groupe des survivants ont fréquenté les pensionnats recensés, conformément à la politique sur les pensionnats, on leur a appris à parler anglais, on les a punis pour avoir utilisé leurs langues traditionnelles et on leur a fait honte de leur langue et de leur mode de vie traditionnels. Par conséquent, en raison de leur fréquentation des pensionnats recensés, la capacité des membres survivants du recours collectif à parler leurs langues traditionnelles et à pratiquer leur shishálh, leur Tk'emlúps et d'autres activités spirituelles, religieuses et culturelles a été gravement compromise et, dans certains cas, entièrement perdue. Ces membres du recours collectif se sont vus refuser la capacité de faire valoir et de jouir de leurs droits ancestraux, tant individuellement que dans le contexte de leur expression collective au sein des bandes, parmi lesquels figurent, sans s'y limiter, certaines particularités :

- (a) les activités culturelles, spirituelles et traditionnelles autochtones (shishálh, Tk'emlúps et autres) ont été perdues ou altérées;
- (b) les structures sociales traditionnelles, y compris l'autorité égale des dirigeants masculins et féminins, ont été perdues ou altérées;
- (c) les langues shishálh, tk'emlúps et autres langues autochtones ont été perdues ou altérées;
- (d) les compétences parentales traditionnelles des shishálh, des Tk'emlúps et des Autochtones ont été perdues ou altérées;
- (e) les compétences des shishálh, des Tk'emlúps et des autres Autochtones en matière de cueillette, de récolte, de chasse et de préparation des aliments traditionnels ont été perdues ou altérées; et,
- (f) le shishálh, le Tk'emlúps et les croyances spirituelles autochtones ont été perdus ou altérés.

74. L'ingérence dans les droits ancestraux du groupe des survivants a entraîné la même perte pour leurs descendants et leurs communautés, à savoir les groupes de descendants et de bandes, ce qui était le résultat recherché par le Canada.

75. Le Canada avait, à tout moment important, et continue d'avoir l'obligation de protéger les droits ancestraux des membres des recours collectifs, y compris pour ce qui est de la mise en œuvre de leurs pratiques spirituelles et de la protection traditionnelle de leurs terres et de leurs ressources, ainsi que l'obligation de ne pas miner ou entraver les droits ancestraux des demandeurs individuels et des membres des recours collectifs. Le Canada a manqué à ces obligations, sans justification, à travers sa politique en matière de pensionnats.

Infliction intentionnelle de souffrances morales

{01447063.2}

76. La conception et la mise en œuvre de la politique des pensionnats en tant que programme d'assimilation visant à éradiquer la culture autochtone constituait une conduite flagrante, extrême et scandaleuse qui était manifestement calculée pour provoquer les dommages culturels, sociaux et linguistiques, ainsi que les souffrances morales découlant de ces dommages, qui ont été effectivement subis par les membres des groupes de survivants et de descendants.

Négligence donnant lieu à des abus spirituels, ~~physiques, sexuels,~~ émotionnels et mentaux

77. Par l'intermédiaire de ses mandataires, le Canada a fait preuve de négligence et a manqué à ses obligations de diligence envers le groupe des survivants, dont voici quelques exemples :

- (a) il a omis de présélectionner et de sélectionner comme il se doit les personnes à qui ~~il a délégué~~ la gestion des pensionnats recensés et qu'il a embauchées directement ou par l'intermédiaire de ses mandataires, de superviser et de contrôler comme il se doit les activités des pensionnats ~~recensés~~ et de protéger les enfants autochtones contre les abus spirituels, ~~physiques, sexuels,~~ émotionnels et mentaux commis dans les pensionnats ~~recensés~~; par conséquent, les membres du groupe des survivants ont subi de tels abus et le Canada en est responsable;
- (b) il n'a pas réagi de manière appropriée ou n'a pas réagi du tout à la divulgation des abus commis dans les pensionnats ~~recensés~~ et, en fait, il a couvert ces abus et supprimé les informations relatives à ces abus; et
- (c) il n'a pas reconnu les préjudices subis et n'en a pas tenu compte lorsqu'ils se sont produits, afin de prévenir d'autres préjudices et, dans la mesure du possible, d'offrir aux victimes de ces préjudices un traitement adapté.

Responsabilité du fait d'autrui

78. Par l'intermédiaire de ses mandataires, le Canada a violé son obligation de diligence envers le groupe des survivants, ce qui a entraîné des préjudices pour ce groupe, et il est responsable du fait d'autrui pour toutes les violations et tous les abus commis en son nom.

79. De plus, ou à titre subsidiaire, le Canada est responsable du fait d'autrui pour négligence de l'exécution des obligations fiduciaires, constitutionnelles, statutaires et de common law de ses agents.

{01447063.2}

80. De même, les demandeurs tiennent le Canada pour seul responsable de la création et de la mise en œuvre de la Politique sur les pensionnats indiens et qui plus est :

- a. Les demandeurs renoncent expressément à tout droit qu'ils pourraient avoir d'obtenir du Canada, ou de toute autre partie, toute partie des pertes subies par les demandeurs qui pourrait être imputable à la faute ou à la responsabilité d'un tiers et pour laquelle le Canada pourrait raisonnablement être en droit de réclamer à un ou plusieurs tiers une contribution, une indemnité ou une répartition en common law, en équité ou en vertu de la loi sur la négligence de la Colombie-Britannique, R.S.B.C. 1996 c 333, telle que modifiée; et
- b. Les demandeurs ne chercheront pas à obtenir de toute partie, autre que le Canada, une partie des pertes qui ont été réclamées, ou auraient pu être réclamées, auprès de tiers.

Préjudices

81. En raison de la violation des obligations fiduciaires, constitutionnelles, statutaires et de common law, de l'infliction intentionnelle de souffrances morales et des violations des droits autochtones par le Canada et ses agents, pour lesquels le Canada est responsable du fait d'autrui, les membres du groupe des survivants, y compris les représentants des demandeurs, ont souffert de préjudices et de blessures, notamment :

- (a) la perte de la langue, de la culture, de la spiritualité et de l'identité autochtone;
- (b) des préjudices émotionnels et psychologiques
- (c) l'isolement de leur famille, de leur communauté et de leur Nation
- (d) la privation des éléments fondamentaux d'une éducation, y compris l'alphabétisation de base;
- (e) une dégradation de la santé mentale et émotionnelle, pouvant aller jusqu'à un handicap permanent;
- (f) une incapacité à faire confiance aux autres, à nouer ou à entretenir des relations intimes, à participer à une vie familiale normale ou à maîtriser sa colère;
- (g) une tendance à la toxicomanie;
- (h) l'isolement de la communauté, de la famille, du conjoint et des enfants;

{01447063.2}

- (i) une altération de la capacité à apprécier et à participer à des activités récréatives, sociales, culturelles, sportives et professionnelles;
- (j) une altération de la capacité à fonctionner sur le lieu de travail et une altération permanente de la capacité à gagner un revenu;
- (k) la privation de l'éducation et des compétences nécessaires pour obtenir un emploi rémunéré;
- (l) la nécessité d'un traitement psychologique, psychiatrique et médical continu pour les maladies et autres troubles résultant de l'expérience des pensionnats;
- (m) le dysfonctionnement sexuel;
- (n) la dépression, l'anxiété et le dysfonctionnement émotionnel
- (o) les tendances suicidaires;
- (p) la douleur et la souffrance;
- (q) la perte d'estime de soi et les sentiments de dévalorisation, de honte, de peur et de solitude;
- (r) les cauchemars, les retours en arrière et les problèmes de sommeil;
- (s) la peur, l'humiliation et l'embarras en tant qu'enfant et adulte;
- (t) la confusion et la désorientation sexuelles en tant qu'enfant et jeune adulte;
- (u) l'incapacité à exprimer ses émotions d'une manière normale et saine;
- (v) la perte de la capacité à participer aux pratiques et aux devoirs culturels ou à s'en acquitter;
- (w) la perte de la capacité à vivre dans leur communauté et leur nation; et
- (x) une douleur et une souffrance émotionnelles et psychologiques constantes et intenses.

82. En conséquence de la violation des obligations fiduciaires, constitutionnelles, statutaires et de common law, ainsi que de l'infliction intentionnelle de dommages et de la violation des droits ancestraux par le Canada et ses agents, pour lesquels le Canada est responsable du fait d'autrui, les membres du groupe des descendants, y compris les représentants des demandeurs, ont subi des dommages et des préjudices, notamment :

{01447063.2}

- (a) leurs relations avec les membres survivants du groupe ont été altérées, endommagées et faussées en raison des expériences des membres survivants du groupe dans les pensionnats recensés; et,
- (b) leur culture et leurs langues ont été minées et, dans certains cas, éradiquées par, entre autres, comme il a été mentionné, l'assimilation forcée des membres du groupe des survivants à la culture euro-canadienne par l'intermédiaire des pensionnats recensés.

83. En raison de la violation des obligations fiduciaires, constitutionnelles, statutaires et de common law, et de l'infliction intentionnelle de dommages et de la violation des droits ancestraux par le Canada et ses agents, pour lesquels le Canada est responsable du fait d'autrui, le groupe des bandes a souffert de la perte de la capacité d'exercer pleinement ses droits ancestraux collectivement, y compris le droit d'avoir un gouvernement traditionnel fondé sur leurs propres langues, pratiques spirituelles, lois et pratiques traditionnelles et de voir ces traditions pleinement respectées par les membres des groupes de survivants et de descendants ainsi que les générations suivantes, toutes ces pertes étant directement liées aux pertes individuelles des dommages culturels, linguistiques et sociaux des membres des groupes de survivants et de descendants.

Motifs des dommages-intérêts punitifs et aggravés

84. Le Canada a délibérément planifié l'éradication de la langue, de la religion et de la culture des membres du groupe des survivants et des membres du groupe des descendants, ainsi que la disparition du groupe des bandes. Les actions étaient malveillantes et visaient à causer un préjudice, et compte tenu des circonstances, des dommages-intérêts punitifs et aggravés sont appropriés et nécessaires.

85. Les membres du groupe affirment que le Canada et ses agents étaient parfaitement au courant des nombreux abus physiques, psychologiques, émotionnels, culturels et sexuels dont étaient victimes les membres du groupe des survivants dans les pensionnats recensés.

{01447063.2}

86. En dépit de cette information, le Canada a maintenu les pensionnats en activité et n'a pris aucune mesure, ou du moins aucune mesure raisonnable, pour protéger les membres survivants du recours collectif contre ces abus et les préjudices graves en résultant. Compte tenu des circonstances, le fait de ne pas avoir agi sur la base de ces informations pour protéger les enfants vulnérables confiés à la garde du Canada équivaut à une insouciance déréglée et téméraire concernant leur sécurité et rend les dommages-intérêts punitifs et aggravés à la fois appropriés et nécessaires.

Fondement juridique de la demande d'indemnisation

87. Les membres du groupe des survivants et des descendants sont des Indiens au sens de la Loi sur les Indiens, R.S.C. 1985, c. 1-5. Les membres du groupe des bandes sont des bandes composées d'indiens ainsi définis.

88. Les droits ancestraux des membres du recours collectif existaient et étaient pratiqués à toutes les époques concernées en vertu de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982, article 35, soit l'annexe B de la Loi de 1982 sur le Canada (R.-U.), 1982, c 11.

89. À tous les moments importants, le Canada avait une obligation spéciale et constitutionnelle de diligence, de bonne foi, d'honnêteté et de loyauté envers les demandeurs et les membres du groupe en vertu des obligations constitutionnelles du Canada et de l'obligation du Canada d'agir dans l'intérêt supérieur des Autochtones et particulièrement des enfants autochtones qui étaient particulièrement vulnérables. Le Canada a violé ces obligations, causant ainsi un préjudice.

90. Les membres du groupe sont des descendants de peuples autochtones qui ont pratiqué leurs lois, coutumes et traditions respectives qui faisaient partie intégrante de leurs sociétés distinctes avant le contact avec les Européens. Plus précisément, et ce, avant le contact avec les Européens jusqu'à aujourd'hui, les peuples autochtones dont descendent les demandeurs et les membres du recours collectif ont assuré la pérennité de leur peuple, de leurs communautés et de leur culture distinctive en appliquant leurs lois, coutumes et traditions respectives à l'ensemble de leur mode de vie, y compris la langue, la danse, la musique, les loisirs, l'art, la famille, le mariage et les responsabilités communautaires, ainsi que l'utilisation des ressources.

Constitutionnalité des articles de la Loi sur les Indiens

91. Les membres du recours collectif affirment que tous les articles de la Loi et de ses prédécesseurs, tous les règlements adoptés en vertu de la Loi et toutes les autres lois relatives aux Autochtones qui fournissent ou prétendent fournir l'autorité légale pour l'éradication des Autochtones par la destruction de leurs langues, de leur culture, de leurs pratiques, de leurs traditions et de leur mode de vie, violent les articles 25 et 35(1) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982, les articles 1 et 2 de la Déclaration canadienne des droits, L.R.C. 1985, ainsi que les articles 7 et 15 de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés et doivent donc être considérés comme étant sans effet.

92. Le Canada a délibérément planifié l'éradication de la langue, de la spiritualité et de la culture des demandeurs et des membres du groupe.

93. Les actions du Canada étaient délibérées et malveillantes et compte tenu des circonstances, des dommages punitifs, exemplaires et aggravés sont appropriés et nécessaires.

94. Les demandeurs invoquent et se fondent sur les éléments suivants :

Loi sur les Cours fédérales, L.R.C., 1985, c. F-7, art. 17;

Règles des Cours fédérales, DORS/98-106, Partie 5.1 Recours collectifs;

ORDONNANCE

POUR LES RAISONS INVOQUÉES le 3 juin 2015, publiées sous le numéro 2015 FC 706;

LE TRIBUNAL ORDONNE ce qui suit :

1. L'instance susmentionnée est certifiée en tant que recours collectif aux conditions suivantes :

a. Les groupes sont définis comme suit :

Groupe des survivants : tous les Autochtones qui ont fréquenté en tant qu'élève ou à des fins éducatives, quelle que soit la période un pensionnat indien, au cours de la période concernée par le recours collectif, à l'exclusion, pour tout membre du groupe, des périodes pour lesquelles ce membre a reçu une indemnité au titre du paiement d'expérience commune en vertu de la convention de règlement relative aux pensionnats indiens.

Groupe des descendants : la première génération de toutes les personnes qui sont des descendants des membres du groupe des survivants ou des personnes qui ont été légalement ou traditionnellement adoptées par un membre du groupe des survivants ou son conjoint.

Groupe bandes : la bande indienne Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc et la bande indienne Sechelt et toute autre bande indienne qui :

(i) a ou avait des membres qui sont ou étaient membres du groupe des survivants, ou dont la communauté abrite un pensionnat; et

- (ii) qui est spécifiquement ajoutée à la présente demande d'indemnisation avec un ou plusieurs pensionnats expressément désignés.

b. Les représentants des demandeurs sont :

Pour le groupe des survivants :

Violet Catherine Gottfriedson

Charlotte Anne Victorine Gilbert

Diena Marie Jules

Darlene Matilda Bulpit

Frederick Johnson

Daphne Paul

Pour le groupe des descendants :

Amanda Deanne Big Sorrel Horse

Rita Poulsen

Pour le groupe des bandes :

La bande indienne Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc

La bande indienne Sechelt

c. Les demandes d'indemnisation portent sur :

La violation des obligations fiduciaires et constitutionnelles, la violation des droits autochtones, l'infliction intentionnelle de souffrances mentales, la violation des conventions ou des pactes internationaux, la violation du droit international et la négligence commise par le Canada ou en son nom et pour laquelle le Canada est considéré comme responsable.

d. Le redressement demandé est le suivant :

Par le groupe des survivants :

- i. une déclaration selon laquelle le Canada a manqué à ses obligations fiduciaires, constitutionnelles, statutaires et de common law envers les représentants des demandeurs du groupe des survivants et les autres membres du groupe des survivants en ce qui concerne l'objet, l'établissement, le financement, le fonctionnement, la supervision, le contrôle, l'entretien, la fréquentation obligatoire des membres du groupe des survivants et le soutien des pensionnats indiens;
- ii. une déclaration selon laquelle les membres du groupe des survivants ont des droits ancestraux de parler leurs langues traditionnelles, de s'adonner à leurs coutumes et pratiques religieuses traditionnelles et de se gouverner de leur manière traditionnelle;
- iii. une déclaration selon laquelle le Canada a violé les droits linguistiques et culturels (droits ancestraux ou autres) du groupe des survivants;
- iv. une déclaration selon laquelle la politique sur les pensionnats et les pensionnats indiens ont causé des dommages culturels, linguistiques et sociaux et un préjudice irréparable au groupe des survivants;
- v. une déclaration selon laquelle le Canada est responsable envers les représentants des demandeurs du groupe des survivants et les autres membres du groupe des survivants de préjudices causés par le non-respect des obligations fiduciaires, constitutionnelles, statutaires et de common law, ainsi que de droits ancestraux, de souffrances morales infligées

- intentionnellement, et de violations des conventions et des pactes internationaux, de même que du droit international, en ce qui concerne l'objectif, la création, le financement, le fonctionnement, la supervision, le contrôle et l'entretien, la fréquentation obligatoire par les membres du groupe des survivants ainsi que le soutien des pensionnats indiens;
- vi. des dommages-intérêts généraux pour négligence, violation d'obligations fiduciaires, d'obligations découlant de la Constitution, de la loi et de la common law, de droits ancestraux et d'infliction intentionnelle de souffrances morales, ainsi que pour violation de conventions et de pactes internationaux, et pour violation du droit international, négligence et infliction intentionnelle de souffrances morales dont le Canada est responsable;
 - vii. des dommages-intérêts pécuniaires et des dommages-intérêts spéciaux pour négligence, perte de revenu, perte de capacité lucrative, perte de perspectives économiques, perte de possibilités d'éducation, violation d'obligations fiduciaires, constitutionnelles, statutaires et de common law ainsi que de droits ancestraux et pour infliction intentionnelle de souffrances morales, ainsi que des violations de conventions et de pactes internationaux, de même que des violations du droit international, y compris des montants pour couvrir le coût des soins, et pour restaurer, protéger et préserver le patrimoine linguistique et culturel des membres du groupe des survivants dont le Canada est responsable;
 - viii. des dommages-intérêts exemplaires et punitifs dont le Canada est responsable; et
 - ix. des intérêts et coûts antérieurs et postérieurs au jugement.

Par le groupe des descendants :

- i. une déclaration selon laquelle le Canada a manqué à ses obligations fiduciaires, constitutionnelles, statutaires et de common law envers les représentants des demandeurs du groupe des descendants et les autres membres du groupe des descendants en ce qui concerne l'objet, l'établissement, le financement, le fonctionnement, la supervision, le contrôle, l'entretien, la fréquentation obligatoire des membres du groupe des survivants et le soutien des pensionnats recensés;
- ii. une déclaration selon laquelle le groupe des descendants ont des droits ancestraux de parler leurs langues traditionnelles, de s'adonner à leurs coutumes et pratiques religieuses traditionnelles et de se gouverner de leur manière traditionnelle
- iii. une déclaration selon laquelle le Canada a violé les droits linguistiques et culturels (droits ancestraux ou autres) du groupe des descendants;
- iv. une déclaration selon laquelle la politique sur les pensionnats et les pensionnats recensés ont causé des dommages culturels, linguistiques et sociaux ainsi qu'un préjudice irréparable au groupe des descendants;
- v. une déclaration selon laquelle le Canada est responsable envers les représentants des demandeurs du groupe des descendants et les autres membres du groupe des descendants pour les dommages causés par la violation de ses obligations fiduciaires et constitutionnelles et des droits autochtones, ainsi que par les violations des conventions et pactes internationaux et du droit international, en ce qui concerne l'objectif, la création, le financement, le fonctionnement, la supervision, le contrôle et l'entretien, de même que la fréquentation obligatoire des pensionnats par les membres du groupe des survivants et le soutien de ces pensionnats;

- vi. des dommages-intérêts généraux pour violation des obligations fiduciaires et constitutionnelles et des droits ancestraux, ainsi que des violations des conventions et pactes internationaux, de même que des violations du droit international, dont le Canada est responsable;
- vii. des dommages-intérêts pécuniaires et dommages-intérêts spéciaux pour violation des obligations fiduciaires et constitutionnelles et des droits ancestraux, ainsi que des violations de conventions et de pactes internationaux, de même que des violations du droit international, y compris des montants pour couvrir le coût des soins, et pour restaurer, protéger et préserver le patrimoine linguistique et culturel des membres du groupe des survivants dont le Canada est responsable;
- viii. des dommages-intérêts exemplaires et punitifs dont le Canada est responsable; et
- ix. des intérêts et coûts antérieurs et postérieurs au jugement.

Par le groupe des bandes :

- i. une déclaration selon laquelle la bande indienne Sechelt et la bande indienne Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc, ainsi que tous les membres du groupe des bandes ont des droits ancestraux de parler leurs langues traditionnelles, de s'adonner à leurs coutumes et pratiques religieuses traditionnelles et de se gouverner de leur manière traditionnelle;

- ii. une déclaration selon laquelle le Canada a manqué à ses obligations fiduciaires, constitutionnelles, statutaires et de common law, ainsi qu'aux conventions et pactes internationaux et au droit international, envers les membres du groupe des bandes en ce qui concerne l'objet, l'établissement, le financement, le fonctionnement, la supervision, le contrôle, l'entretien, la fréquentation obligatoire des membres du groupe des survivants et le soutien des pensionnats SIRS (pensionnat indien de Sechelt) et KIRS (pensionnat indien de Kamloops) et d'autres pensionnats recensés;
- iii. une déclaration selon laquelle la politique sur les pensionnats SIRS et KIRS ainsi que les pensionnats recensés ont causé des dommages culturels, linguistiques et sociaux et un préjudice irréparable au groupe des bandes;
- iv. une déclaration selon laquelle le Canada a violé ou viole les droits ancestraux, les droits linguistiques et culturels des membres du groupe des bandes (droits ancestraux ou autres), ainsi que les conventions et les pactes internationaux de même que le droit international, du fait de la création, du financement, le fonctionnement, la supervision, le contrôle et l'entretien, la fréquentation obligatoire par les membres du groupe des survivants ainsi que le soutien des pensionnats recensés;
- v. une déclaration selon laquelle le Canada est responsable envers les membres du groupe des bandes de préjudices causés par le non-respect des obligations fiduciaires et constitutionnelles ainsi que de droits ancestraux, de même que de violations des conventions et des pactes internationaux, et du droit international, en ce qui concerne l'objectif, la création, le financement, le fonctionnement, la supervision, le contrôle et l'entretien, la fréquentation obligatoire par les membres du groupe des survivants ainsi que le soutien des pensionnats recensés;

- vi. des dommages-intérêts non pécuniaires et pécuniaires ainsi que des dommages-intérêts spéciaux pour violation des obligations fiduciaires et constitutionnelles et des droits ancestraux, ainsi que des violations des conventions et des pactes internationaux, de même que des violations du droit international, y compris des montants pour couvrir en continu le coût des soins de manière individuelle pour les membres du groupe des bandes, et pour restaurer, ainsi que les coûts de restauration, de protection et de préservation du patrimoine linguistique et culturel des bandes dont le Canada est responsable;
- vii. La construction et l'entretien de centres de guérison et d'éducation dans les communautés du groupe des bandes, ainsi que d'autres centres ou opérations susceptibles d'atténuer les pertes subies et que cette honorable Cour pourrait juger appropriés et justes;
- viii. des dommages-intérêts exemplaires et punitifs dont le Canada est responsable; et
- ix. des intérêts et coûts antérieurs et postérieurs au jugement.

e. Les questions communes de droit ou de fait sont les suivantes :

- a. Dans le cadre de l'objectif, du fonctionnement ou de la gestion de l'un des pensionnats au cours de la période concernée par le recours collectif, le défendeur a-t-il manqué à une obligation fiduciaire envers les survivants, les descendants et le groupe de la bande, ou l'un d'entre eux, de ne pas détruire leur langue et leur culture?

- b. Dans le cadre de l'objectif, du fonctionnement ou de la gestion de l'un des pensionnats au cours de la période concernée par le recours collectif, le défendeur a-t-il violé les droits culturels ou linguistiques, qu'il s'agisse de droits ancestraux ou autres, du groupe des survivants, des descendants et des bandes, ou de l'un d'entre eux?
- c. Dans le cadre de l'objectif, du fonctionnement ou de la gestion de l'un des pensionnats au cours de la période concernée par le recours collectif, le défendeur a-t-il manqué à un devoir de diligence envers le groupe des survivants de les protéger de tout préjudice psychologique pouvant donner lieu à des poursuites judiciaires?
- d. Dans le cadre de l'objectif, du fonctionnement ou de la gestion de l'un des pensionnats au cours de la période concernée par le recours collectif, le défendeur a-t-il manqué à un devoir de diligence envers le groupe des survivants de les protéger de tout préjudice psychologique pouvant donner lieu à des poursuites judiciaires?
- e. Si la réponse à l'un des points (a)-(d) ci-dessus est positive, la Cour peut-elle faire une évaluation globale des préjudices subis par le groupe dans le cadre du procès sur les questions communes?

- f. Si la réponse à l'un des points (a)-(d) ci-dessus est positive, le défendeur s'est-il rendu coupable d'une conduite qui justifie l'attribution de dommages-intérêts punitifs; et
 - g. Si la réponse au point (f) ci-dessus est positive, quel montant de dommages-intérêts punitifs devrait être accordé?
- f. Les définitions suivantes s'appliquent à la présente ordonnance :
- a. « Autochtone(s) », « Personne(s) autochtone(s) » ou « Enfant(s) autochtone(s) » désigne une ou plusieurs personnes dont les droits sont reconnus et confirmés par l'article 35 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982;
 - b. « Droits ancestraux » désigne une partie ou la totalité des droits ancestraux et des droits issus de traités reconnus et confirmés par l'article 35 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982;
 - c. « Loi » désigne la Loi sur les Indiens, L.R.C. de 1985, chapitre I-5 et ses versions antérieures, ainsi que les modifications qui y ont été apportées le cas échéant;
 - d. « Convention » désigne la convention de règlement relative aux pensionnats indiens datée du 10 mai 2006, conclue par le Canada pour régler les demandes d'indemnisation relatives aux pensionnats indiens, telles qu'elles ont été approuvées dans les ordonnances rendues par les diverses administrations canadiennes;
 - e. « Canada » désigne la défenderesse, Sa Majesté la Reine;

- f. « Période du recours » désigne les années 1920 à 1997;
 - g. « Préjudice culturel, linguistique et social » désigne les dommages ou les préjudices résultant de la création et de la mise en œuvre des pensionnats et de la politique relative aux pensionnats en matière d'éducation, de gouvernance, d'économie, de culture, de langue, de spiritualité et de coutumes sociales, de pratiques et de mode de vie, de structures de gouvernance traditionnelles, ainsi que de sécurité et de bien-être communautaires et individuels des Autochtones;
 - h. « Pensionnat(s) recensé(s) » désigne KIRS ou SIRS ou tout autre pensionnat expressément désigné en tant que membre du groupe des bandes;
 - i. « KIRS » désigne le pensionnat indien de Kamloops;
 - j. « Pensionnats » désigne tous les pensionnats indiens reconnus en vertu de la convention et figurant à l'annexe A jointe à la présente ordonnance, laquelle annexe peut être modifiée le cas échéant par ordonnance de la Cour;
 - k. « Politique sur les pensionnats indiens » désigne la politique du Canada relative à la mise en œuvre des pensionnats indiens; et
 - l. « SIRS » désigne le pensionnat indien de Sechelt.
- g. La forme et le contenu des avis aux membres du groupe doivent être approuvés par cette Cour. Les membres du groupe des survivants et des descendants auront jusqu'au 30 octobre 2015 pour se retirer, ou tout autre délai que cette Cour fixera. Les membres du groupe des bandes auront 6 mois pour décider de participer à partir de la date de publication de l'avis comme indiqué par la Cour, ou tout autre délai fixé par la Cour.

- h. L'une ou l'autre des parties peut demander à la Cour de modifier la liste des pensionnats figurant à l'annexe A aux fins de la présente procédure.

ANNEXE C

PROCESSUS DE RÉCLAMATIONS RELATIF AU PAIEMENT DES INDEMNITÉS
LIÉES À LA FRÉQUENTATION D'EXTERNATPrincipes régissant l'administration des réclamations

1. Les principes suivants régissent l'administration des réclamations (« Principes du processus de réclamation ») :
 - a. le processus de réclamation doit être rapide, peu coûteux, convivial, sensible aux aspects culturels et tenir compte des traumatismes subis;
 - b. le processus de réclamation doit minimiser le fardeau des demandeurs dans la poursuite de leurs réclamations;
 - c. le processus de réclamation doit limiter toute probabilité de nouveau traumatisme au cours du processus de réclamation;
 - d. l'administrateur des réclamations et l'examineur indépendant doivent supposer qu'un réclamant agit honnêtement et de bonne foi, sauf preuve raisonnable du contraire;
 - e. l'administrateur des réclamations et l'examineur indépendant tireront toutes les conclusions raisonnables et favorables possibles en faveur du demandeur.
2. Les principes du processus de réclamation ci-dessus doivent être appliqués tout au long du processus de réclamation, y compris lors de tout réexamen.

Critère d'admissibilité

3. Conformément à la convention de règlement, un demandeur a droit au paiement d'une indemnité liée à la fréquentation d'externat et sa réclamation sera approuvée, si le demandeur satisfait aux critères d'admissibilité suivants :
 - a. la réclamation concerne un ancien élève externe qui était vivant le 30 mai 2005;

- b. la réclamation est faite en raison de la fréquentation par cet élève externe d'un pensionnat indien figurant à l'annexe E pendant l'ensemble ou une partie d'une année scolaire pour laquelle il n'a pas reçu de paiement d'expérience commune en vertu de la CRRPI, n'a pas reçu et ne recevra pas d'indemnité en vertu du règlement McLean, et n'a pas reçu d'indemnité en vertu de tout autre règlement concernant une école figurant à l'annexe K du règlement McLean;
- c. la réclamation est remise à l'administrateur des réclamations avant la date limite de réclamation ultime.

Réception de réclamations

- 4. Pour demander un paiement d'indemnité liée à la fréquentation d'externat, tout demandeur doit remplir un formulaire de réclamation et le remettre à l'administrateur des réclamations avant la date limite des réclamations, par voie électronique ou en copie papier, selon les modalités établies par l'administrateur des réclamations.
- 5. Nonobstant la date limite de réclamation, un demandeur peut remettre un formulaire de réclamation accompagné d'une réclamation d'extension de la date limite de réclamation à l'administrateur des réclamations après la date limite de réclamation, mais avant la date limite ultime de réclamation. En aucun cas, l'administrateur des réclamations n'acceptera de formulaires de réclamation après la date limite ultime de réclamation, sauf dans les cas spécifiquement prévus par les présentes et par le processus de réclamation successorale décrit à l'annexe D.
- 6. L'administrateur des réclamations devra fournir au demandeur une confirmation de la réception de la réclamation.
- 7. L'administrateur des réclamations numérisera toutes les demandes en copie papier et conservera des copies électroniques qui seront utilisées uniquement aux fins prévues par les présentes.
- 8. L'administrateur des réclamations examinera chaque réclamation afin de s'assurer qu'elle est dûment remplie. En cas d'absence de toute information requise sur le formulaire de réclamation, le rendant ainsi incomplet, notamment en ce qui concerne une demande d'extension du délai de réclamation, l'administrateur des réclamations doit contacter le demandeur et pour lui demander de fournir les informations manquantes ou de lui remettre à nouveau le formulaire de réclamation. Le demandeur disposera de 60 jours, à compter de la date où l'administrateur des réclamations lui fait parvenir une telle demande, pour remettre à nouveau son formulaire de réclamation, peu importe si la date limite ultime des réclamations est dépassée.

9. L'administrateur des réclamations doit, sans prendre d'autres mesures, rejeter toute réclamation faite à l'égard d'une personne décédée le 29 mai 2005 ou avant.

Informations fournies par le Canada

10. L'administrateur des réclamations fournira au Canada une copie de chaque réclamation pour toute personne qui était vivante le 30 mai 2005. Ces copies ne seront utilisées qu'aux fins prévues par les présentes.
11. Le Canada examinera la réclamation en fonction de toute l'information en sa possession afin de :
 - a. établir si la personne en cause dans la réclamation ou l'exécuteur, le représentant ou l'héritier ayant présenté une réclamation à sa place a reçu un paiement d'expérience commune en vertu de la CRRPI pour l'une des années scolaires visées par la réclamation;
 - b. établir si la personne en cause dans la réclamation ou l'exécuteur, le représentant ou l'héritier ayant présenté une réclamation s'est vu refusé une demande de paiement d'expérience commune en vertu de la CRRPI pour l'une des années scolaires visées par la réclamation;
 - c. établir si la personne ou l'exécuteur, le représentant ou l'héritier ayant présenté une réclamation à sa place a reçu un paiement d'expérience commune en vertu d'un règlement concernant un des pensionnats figurant

- à l'annexe K du règlement McLean pour l'une de ces mêmes années scolaires visées par la réclamation;
- d. établir si la personne en cause a fréquenté une école ne figurant pas sur la liste 1 ou la liste 2 de l'annexe E pour l'une ou l'autre des années scolaires visées par la réclamation ;
- e. examiner toute autre information pouvant être pertinente pour une réclamation relative à une école figurant sur la liste 2 de l'annexe E.
12. Afin de s'assurer que la réclamation n'est pas refusée uniquement parce que le demandeur s'est trompé sur l'année ou les années scolaires au cours desquelles il a fréquenté un pensionnat à titre d'élève externe, le Canada examinera les dossiers de fréquentation du ou des pensionnats indiens visés par la réclamation pour les cinq années scolaires précédant et suivant l'année ou les années scolaires mentionnées dans la réclamation. Si, à la suite de ce processus, il s'avère que la personne en question était un élève externe au cours d'une ou de plusieurs années scolaires non réclamées, cette information sera fournie à l'administrateur des réclamations et la réclamation sera évaluée comme si elle comprenait cette ou ces années scolaires.
13. Le Canada peut transmettre à l'administrateur des réclamations toute information ou tout document confirmant ou infirmant la fréquentation d'un pensionnat à titre d'élève externe de la personne en cause dans les 45 jours suivant la réception d'une réclamation de l'administrateur des réclamations, mais il s'efforcera de le faire le plus rapidement possible afin de ne pas retarder sa décision relative à toute réclamation.

Évaluation par l'administrateur des réclamations

14. Lorsque la réclamation concerne une personne qui s'est vue refuser une demande de paiement d'expérience commune en vertu de la CRRPI pour une des années scolaires mentionnées dans la réclamation au motif qu'elle a fréquenté le ou les pensionnats indiens, mais n'y a pas résidé, peu importe le ou les pensionnats indiens cités dans la réclamation, l'administrateur des réclamations considérera que la réclamation est présumée valide, sous réserve des dispositions ci-dessous.

15. Pour toutes les autres réclamations, l'administrateur des réclamations déterminera d'abord si la réclamation est faite à l'égard d'un élève externe, conformément à la procédure suivante :
- a. lorsque la réclamation concerne un ou plusieurs pensionnats indiens figurant sur la liste 1 de l'annexe E au cours des périodes précisées dans cette liste, et que le formulaire de réclamation indique de façon positive que la réclamation concerne un individu qui a fréquenté le pensionnat en tant qu'élève externe, l'administrateur des réclamations considérera la réclamation comme étant présumée valide, sous réserve des dispositions ci-dessous;
 - b. lorsque la réclamation ne concerne qu'un ou plusieurs pensionnats indiens figurant sur la liste 2 de l'annexe E au cours des périodes précisées dans cette liste, et que le demandeur fournit une déclaration solennelle indiquant que l'individu visé par la réclamation était un élève externe et précisant le lieu de résidence de celui-ci pendant la période où cette personne était un élève externe, l'administrateur des réclamations examinera la réclamation et tout renseignement fourni par le Canada en vertu des paragraphes 11 à 13 ci-dessus. À moins que le Canada ait fourni des preuves positives démontrant, selon la prépondérance des probabilités, que la personne n'était pas un élève externe, la réclamation sera présumée valide, sous réserve des dispositions ci-dessous;
 - c. lorsque la réclamation ne nomme aucun pensionnat indien figurant à l'annexe E, l'administrateur des réclamations fera tout son possible pour déterminer la possibilité d'une erreur ou d'une erreur de nom dans le nom d'un pensionnat indien, notamment, en contactant le demandeur, le cas échéant. L'administrateur des réclamations doit corriger ces erreurs ou erreurs de nom. Si l'administrateur des réclamations est convaincu que la réclamation ne concerne aucun des pensionnats indiens énumérés à l'annexe E, il doit rejeter la réclamation.

16. L'administrateur des réclamations examinera toute information fournie par le Canada en vertu des paragraphes 11 à 13 ci-dessus ainsi que toute information en sa possession dans le cadre du règlement McLean. Si l'administrateur des réclamations estime qu'il existe des preuves positives démontrant, selon la prépondérance des probabilités, que pour toutes les années scolaires indiquées dans le formulaire de réclamation, la personne en cause ou l'exécuteur, le représentant ou l'héritier ayant présenté une réclamation à sa place :

- a. a reçu un paiement d'expérience commune en vertu de la CRRPI ;
- b. a reçu une indemnité dans le cadre de l'accord de McLean ;
- c. a reçu une indemnité dans le cadre de tout autre règlement concernant une école figurant à l'annexe K du règlement McLean ;
- d. a fréquenté une école qui ne figure pas à l'annexe E ;
- e. ou toute combinaison des alinéas (a), (b), (c), ou (d).

l'administrateur des réclamations doit rejeter la réclamation.

17. L'administrateur des réclamations informera tout demandeur dont la réclamation est rejetée en lui remettant une lettre en utilisant le moyen de communication choisi par le demandeur :

- a. indiquant clairement les raisons pour lesquelles la réclamation a été rejetée;
- b. dans l'éventualité où le demandeur a le droit de demander un réexamen :
 - i. informant le demandeur de son droit de demander un réexamen, de la procédure de demande de réexamen et de tout délai applicable;
 - ii. informant le demandeur de son droit d'avoir recours à l'assistance gratuite des avocats du groupe et de son droit d'avoir recours, à ses frais, à l'assistance d'un autre avocat de son choix;

- iii. accompagnée des copies de toutes les informations et de tous les documents ayant été pris en compte dans le cadre de la décision de l'administrateur des réclamations de rejeter la réclamation.

Réexamen

- 18. Un demandeur dont la réclamation est rejetée parce que :
 - a. sa réclamation concerne une école dont l'administrateur des réclamations est convaincu qu'elle n'est pas un pensionnat indien figurant à l'Annexe E ;
 - b. ou sa réclamation est faite au nom d'une personne décédée le 29 mai 2005 ou à une date antérieure,n'a pas le droit de demander un réexamen.
- 19. Un demandeur dont la réclamation est refusée pour toute autre raison a le droit de demander un réexamen à l'examineur indépendant. L'avis d'intention de demander un réexamen doit être remis à l'examineur indépendant dans les 60 jours suivant la date de la décision de l'administrateur des réclamations.
- 20. Le Canada n'a en aucun cas le droit de demander un réexamen.
- 21. Les demandeurs qui sollicitent un réexamen ont le droit, sans avoir à engager de frais, d'être représentés par un avocat du groupe aux fins du réexamen, ou de faire appel, à leurs frais, à un autre avocat de leur choix.
- 22. L'examineur indépendant fournira au demandeur un accusé de réception concernant l'avis d'intention de demander un réexamen et fournira au Canada une copie de cet avis.
- 23. L'examineur indépendant informera le demandeur qu'il a le droit de présenter de nouvelles preuves lors du réexamen. Le demandeur dispose de 60 jours pour présenter toute nouvelle preuve lors du réexamen, moyennant toute autre extension raisonnable du délai que le réclamant peut demander et que l'examineur indépendant peut accorder.

24. L'examineur indépendant fournira au Canada toute nouvelle preuve présentée par le demandeur et le Canada aura le droit de fournir des informations supplémentaires à l'examineur indépendant qui doit à toute nouvelle preuve fournie dans les 60 jours.
25. L'examineur indépendant étudiera alors chaque réclamation, notamment les documents justificatifs, de novo, et rendra une décision conformément aux principes du processus de réclamation énoncés ci-dessus. L'examineur indépendant devra en particulier :
 - a. présumer qu'un demandeur agit honnêtement et de bonne foi, en l'absence de motifs raisonnables du contraire;
 - b. tirer toutes les conclusions raisonnables et favorables possibles en faveur du demandeur.
26. Si l'examineur indépendant décide que la réclamation doit être acceptée, l'administrateur des réclamations et le demandeur en seront informés, et l'administrateur des réclamations paiera le demandeur sans délai.
27. Si l'examineur indépendant décide du rejet de la réclamation, il en informera le demandeur en lui adressant une lettre par le moyen de communication de son choix :
 - a. indiquant clairement les raisons pour lesquelles la réclamation a été rejetée;
 - b. accompagnée des copies de toutes les informations et de tous les documents ayant été pris en compte dans le cadre de la décision de l'examineur indépendant de rejeter la réclamation.
28. Toutes les demandes de réexamen doivent faire l'objet d'une décision de l'examineur indépendant dans les 30 jours suivant la réception de tout document de réponse fourni par le Canada ou l'expiration du délai accordé au Canada pour fournir des documents de réponse, selon la première éventualité. Si le demandeur ne présente pas de nouvelles preuves lors du réexamen, l'examineur indépendant doit rendre sa décision dans les 30 jours suivant l'expiration du délai accordé au demandeur pour fournir lesdites preuves. Les délais prévus dans cette section peuvent être modifiés par entente entre les avocats du groupe et le Canada, en consultation avec l'examineur indépendant.

29. La décision de l'examineur indépendant est définitive et sans appel.

Annexe DPROCESSUS DE RÉCLAMATIONS SUCCESSORALES RELATIF AU PAIEMENT
DES INDEMNITÉS LIÉES À LA FRÉQUENTATION D'EXTERNATLorsqu'il y a un exécuteur, un administrateur ou un liquidateur

1. Le demandeur doit :
 - a. remplir le formulaire de réclamations approprié;
 - b. fournir la preuve que l'élève externe est décédé;
 - c. fournir une preuve de la date du décès de l'élève externe;
 - d. fournir la preuve qu'il a été nommé exécuteur, administrateur ou liquidateur.
2. Le formulaire de réclamation doit contenir des dispositions relatives à l'exonération, à l'indemnisation et à l'exonération de responsabilité à l'endroit du Canada, des demandeurs, des avocats du recours collectif, de l'administrateur des réclamations et de l'examineur indépendant.
3. L'administrateur des réclamations évaluera la réclamation conformément au processus de réclamation.
4. Le paiement de toute réclamation approuvée sera versé à « la succession » de l'élève externe décédé.

Lorsqu'il n'y a pas d'exécuteur, d'administrateur ou de liquidateur

5. Le demandeur doit :
 - a. remplir le formulaire de réclamations approprié;
 - b. fournir la preuve que l'élève externe est décédé;
 - c. fournir une preuve de la date du décès de l'élève externe;
 - d. fournir une attestation ou une déclaration selon laquelle l'élève externe n'avait pas de testament et qu'aucun exécuteur, administrateur ou liquidateur n'a été nommé par la Cour;

- e. fournir une preuve du lien de parenté avec l'élève externe, qui peut être sous forme de l'attestation ou de la déclaration d'un tiers;
 - f. fournir une attestation ou une déclaration du demandeur selon laquelle il n'y a pas d'héritier(s) de rang supérieur;
 - g. dresser la liste de toutes les personnes (le cas échéant) ayant la même priorité en tant qu'héritiers que le demandeur;
 - h. fournir le consentement écrit de toutes les personnes (le cas échéant) ayant le même rang que le demandeur dans l'ordre de priorité des héritiers afin que le demandeur puisse soumettre une réclamation au nom de l'élève externe décédé.
6. Le formulaire de réclamation doit contenir des dispositions relatives à l'exonération, à l'indemnisation et à l'exonération de responsabilité à l'endroit du Canada, des demandeurs, des avocats du recours collectif, de l'administrateur des réclamations et de l'examineur indépendant.
7. L'administrateur des réclamations évaluera la réclamation conformément au processus de réclamation. Celui-ci n'effectuera de paiement que pour une réclamation approuvée ou communiquera une réclamation rejetée avec un droit de réexamen conformément aux dispositions ci-dessous. Dans les cas où la réclamation est rejetée sans droit de réexamen, l'administrateur des réclamations informera le demandeur conformément à la procédure normale à laquelle il est sujet.
8. Si l'administrateur des réclamations ne reçoit aucune autre réclamation concernant le même élève externe décédé avant la date limite ultime des réclamations, celui-ci doit :
- a. dans le cas d'une réclamation approuvée, payer le demandeur;
 - b. dans le cas d'une réclamation rejetée, informer le demandeur du rejet de la réclamation conformément au paragraphe 17 du processus de réclamation. Le demandeur peut solliciter un réexamen conformément au processus de réclamation.

9. Si l'administrateur des réclamations reçoit une autre réclamation concernant le même élève externe décédé avant la date limite ultime des réclamations et que le demandeur est l'exécuteur, l'administrateur ou le liquidateur de la succession, l'administrateur des réclamations rejettera la réclamation de tout demandeur qui n'est pas l'exécuteur, l'administrateur ou le liquidateur, sans droit de réexamen.
10. Si une ou plusieurs réclamations supplémentaires concernant le même élève externe décédé sont soumises à l'administrateur des réclamations avant la date limite ultime des réclamations par un demandeur n'étant ni exécuteur testamentaire ni du même rang que le ou les précédents demandeurs dans l'ordre de priorité des héritiers, l'administrateur des réclamations devra communiquer avec le demandeur réputé avoir le dernier rang dans l'ordre de priorité des héritiers afin de s'enquérir si ce dernier conteste l'existence d'un héritier d'un rang supérieur. Si l'existence d'un héritier ayant un rang supérieur est contestée, l'affaire sera renvoyée à l'examineur indépendant pour qu'il détermine lequel des demandeurs a priorité afin de désigner ce dernier comme représentant légal de l'élève externe défunt. La décision de l'examineur indépendant est définitive, sans aucun droit d'appel ou d'examen judiciaire. L'examineur indépendant doit informer l'administrateur des réclamations de sa décision, puis l'administrateur des réclamations doit :
 - a. dans le cas d'une réclamation approuvée, payer le représentant désigné;
 - b. dans le cas d'une réclamation rejetée, informer le demandeur du rejet de la réclamation conformément au paragraphe 17 du processus de réclamation. Le représentant désigné peut solliciter un réexamen conformément au processus de réclamation.
11. Si une ou plusieurs réclamations supplémentaires concernant le même élève externe décédé sont soumises à l'administrateur des réclamations avant la date limite ultime des réclamations par un demandeur n'étant pas exécuteur testamentaire, mais étant du même rang que le ou les demandeurs précédents dans l'ordre de priorité des héritiers, l'administrateur des réclamations devra rejeter toutes les réclamations et en aviser tous les demandeurs en bonne et due forme. Compte tenu de la date limite de soumission des réclamations, les demandeurs qui ont soumis des réclamations concurrentes auront alors trois mois pour soumettre une nouvelle réclamation signée par tous les demandeurs précédemment concurrents désignant un représentant légal pour leur compte ainsi que pour tout autre héritier. Dès réception de la nouvelle réclamation, l'administrateur des réclamations doit :

- a. dans le cas d'une réclamation approuvée, payer le représentant désigné;
- b. dans le cas d'une réclamation rejetée, informer le demandeur du rejet de la réclamation conformément au paragraphe 17 du processus de réclamation. Le représentant désigné peut solliciter un réexamen conformément au processus de réclamation.

Ordre de priorité des héritiers

12. L'ordre de priorité des héritiers correspond à celui prévu par les dispositions de la Loi sur les Indiens relatives à la distribution des biens ab intestat; tous les termes ont la même définition que celle qui figure dans la Loi sur les Indiens.
13. L'ordre de priorité des héritiers, du premier au dernier, est le suivant :
 - a. l'époux ou le conjoint de fait survivant;
 - b. les enfants;
 - c. les petits-enfants;
 - d. les parents;
 - e. les frères et sœurs;
 - f. les enfants des frères et sœurs.

PLAN DE LA SOCIÉTÉ DE REVITALISATION POUR LES ÉLÈVES EXTERNES

Les parties ont convenu de procéder au règlement des réclamations du groupe des survivants et du groupe des descendants (« survivants », « descendants ») dans le cadre du recours collectif Gottfriedson c. Canada. En vertu de la convention de règlement, les parties ont convenu que le Canada versera 50 millions de dollars pour créer la Société de revitalisation pour les élèves externes (la « société »). Les parties conviennent que la société a pour but de soutenir les survivants et les descendants dans le cadre d'activités et de programmes relatifs à la guérison, au bien-être, à l'éducation, à la langue, à la culture, à l'héritage et à la commémoration.

L'argent sera utilisé par la société pour financer des activités et des programmes au profit des survivants et des descendants ayant pour objectifs de :

- a. revitaliser et protéger les langues autochtones des survivants et des descendants;
- b. protéger et revitaliser les cultures autochtones des survivants et des descendants;
- c. rechercher la guérison et le bien-être des survivants et des descendants;
- d. protéger le patrimoine autochtone des survivants et des descendants;
- e. promouvoir l'éducation et la commémoration.

Les activités et les programmes ne sauraient faire double emploi à ceux du gouvernement du Canada. Des subventions seront accordées aux survivants et aux descendants pour financer des activités et des programmes destinés à favoriser la guérison et à remédier aux pertes de langues, de culture, de bien-être et de patrimoine que les survivants ont subies lorsqu'ils fréquentaient les pensionnats indiens en tant qu'élèves externes.

La société sera constituée en vertu de la Societies Act de la Colombie-Britannique avant la date de mise en œuvre et sera dûment enregistrée auprès de chaque gouvernement au Canada dans la mesure requise par ceux-ci. La société disposera de 5 à 11 administrateurs. L'un de ces administrateurs sera nommé par le gouvernement du Canada, mais ne sera employé par ce dernier. Les parties veilleront à ce que les autres administrateurs assurent une représentation régionale adéquate dans tout le Canada.

La société aura un personnel administratif restreint et fera appel à des consultants financiers pour lui fournir des conseils en matière d'investissement. Une fois les fonds investis, les dépenses de la Société seront financées par les revenus de placement.

Conseil consultatif

Les administrateurs seront encadrés par un conseil consultatif composé de personnes nommées par les administrateurs, qui s'assureront de la représentation régionale, la compréhension et la connaissance de la perte et de la revitalisation des langues, des cultures, du bien-être et du patrimoine autochtones.

Le conseil consultatif donnera son avis aux administrateurs sur toutes les activités des administrateurs quant aux activités de la société, y compris en ce qui concerne l'élaboration et la mise en œuvre d'une politique pour les demandes de financement de la société dans le cadre de celles-ci.

ORDONNANCE

LA COUR ORDONNE ce qui suit :

1. L'action susmentionnée est approuvée en tant que recours collectif aux conditions suivantes :
 - a. Le groupe (membres du recours collectif) est défini comme suit :

La bande indienne Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc, la bande indienne de Secheltm et toute autre bande qui :

 - (i) a ou avait des membres qui sont ou ont été membres du groupe des survivants, ou dont la communauté abrite un pensionnat indien;
 - (ii) est spécifiquement ajoutée à cette réclamation avec un ou plusieurs pensionnats spécifiquement déterminés.
 - b. Les représentants demandeurs de ce groupe sont :

la bande indienne de Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc;

la bande indienne de Sechelt.
 - c. Les réclamations sont fondées sur :

Des manquements à des obligations fiduciaires et constitutionnelles, la violation de droits ancestraux, des violations de conventions ou de pactes internationaux, des violations du droit international commise par le Canada ou pour son compte dont le Canada est redevable.
 - d. Les mesures de redressement demandées par le recours collectif sont les suivantes :
 - i. une déclaration portant que la bande indienne de Sechelt et la bande de pactes internationaux et des violations du droit international, en rapport avec les fins, l'établissement, le financement, l'administration, la supervision, le contrôle, l'entretien et le soutien des pensionnats déterminés et leur fréquentation obligatoire par les membres du groupe des survivants;

- vi. les dommages-intérêts non pécuniaires et pécuniaires et les dommages-intérêts spéciaux dont le Canada est redevable pour manquement à des obligations fiduciaires et constitutionnelles et violation de droits ancestraux ainsi que pour violations de conventions et de pactes internationaux et violations du droit international, y compris des montants pour défrayer le coût de soins en cours et pour restaurer, protéger et préserver le patrimoine linguistique et culturel du groupe;
 - vii. la construction et l'entretien de centres de guérison et d'éducation au sein des collectivités appartenant au groupe et les autres centres ou activités susceptibles d'atténuer les pertes subies et que la Cour estime indiqués et justes, le cas échéant;
 - viii. les dommages-intérêts exemplaires et punitifs dont le Canada est redevable;
 - ix. des intérêts et les dépens avant et après jugement.
- e. Les questions communes de fait ou de droit sont les suivantes :
- a. Du fait des fins, du fonctionnement ou de la gestion de l'un quelconque des pensionnats durant la période visée par le recours collectif, le défendeur a-t-il manqué à une obligation fiduciaire qu'il avait envers le groupe de ne pas détruire leur langue et leur culture?

Page : 4

- b. Du fait des fins, du fonctionnement ou de la gestion de l'un quelconque des pensionnats durant la période visée par le recours collectif, le défendeur a-t-il violé les droits culturels ou les droits linguistiques, ancestraux ou autres, du groupe;
- c. Si la réponse à l'une quelconque des questions énoncées ci-dessus aux alinéas a) à b) est oui, la Cour peut-elle procéder à une détermination globale du montant des dommages subis par le groupe dans le cadre du procès relatif aux questions communes?
- d. Si la réponse à l'une quelconque des questions énoncées ci-dessus aux alinéas a) à d) est oui, le défendeur s'est-il rendu coupable d'une conduite qui justifie l'octroi de dommages-intérêts punitifs?
- e. Si la réponse à la question énoncée ci-dessus à l'alinéa d) est oui, quel montant de dommages-intérêts punitifs devrait être accordé?
- f. Les définitions suivantes s'appliquent à la présente ordonnance :
 - a. « Autochtone(s) » ou « enfants autochtone(s) » Une ou des personnes dont les droits sont reconnus et confirmés par l'article 35 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982.
 - b. « Droit ancestral » ou « droits ancestraux » Tous les droits ancestraux et issus de traités reconnus et confirmés par l'article 35 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982.
 - c. « Convention » La Convention de règlement relative aux pensionnats indiens datée du 10 mai 2006 conclue par le Canada pour régler les

MESURES DE REDRESSEMENT DEMANDÉES

1. Les représentants demandeurs, au nom des collectivités indiennes de Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc et de Sechelt, et au nom des membres du recours collectif, demandent :

- (a) une déclaration selon laquelle la bande indienne de Sechelt (désignée sous le nom de bande shishálh ou shishálh) et la bande Tk'emlúps, ainsi que tous les membres du groupe des bandes indiennes du recours collectif autorisé par la Cour, ont le droit ancestral de parler leurs langues traditionnelles et de se livrer à leurs coutumes et pratiques religieuses traditionnelles;
- (b) une déclaration portant que le Canada avait des obligations fiduciaires, constitutionnelles, d'origine législative et en common law envers les membres du recours collectif, qu'il a manqué à ces obligations et qu'il violé des conventions et des pactes internationaux ainsi que le droit international, en rapport avec les fins, l'établissement, le financement, le fonctionnement, la supervision, le contrôle, l'entretien et le soutien du PIS, du PIK et d'autres pensionnats indiens déterminés;
- (c) une déclaration portant que la politique relative aux pensionnats, le PIK, le PIS et les pensionnats déterminés ont causé des dommages culturels, linguistiques et sociaux et un tort irréparable aux membres du recours collectif;
- (d) une déclaration portant que le Canada a violé ou viole les droits linguistiques et culturels (ancestraux ou autres) des membres du recours collectif, ainsi que des violations de conventions et de pactes internationaux et des violations du droit international comme conséquence de son établissement, son financement, son administration, sa supervision, son contrôle, son entretien et son soutien de la politique relative aux pensionnats et les pensionnats déterminés et du fait que le Canada a obligé les membres du groupe des survivants à les fréquenter;
- (e) une déclaration portant que le Canada est responsable envers les membres du recours collectif des dommages causés par son manquement à des obligations fiduciaires et constitutionnelles, d'origine législative et en common law, et par sa violation de droits ancestraux ainsi que par des violations de conventions et de pactes internationaux et des violations du droit international, en rapport avec les fins, l'établissement, le financement, l'administration, la supervision, le contrôle, l'entretien et le soutien des pensionnats déterminés et leur fréquentation obligatoire par les membres du groupe des survivants;
- (f) les dommages-intérêts généraux non pécuniaires et pécuniaires et les dommages-intérêts spéciaux dont le Canada est redevable pour manquement à des obligations fiduciaires, constitutionnelles, d'origine législative et en common law et violation de droits ancestraux, ainsi que pour violations de conventions et de pactes internationaux et violations du droit international, en plus des montants pour rembourser le coût de soins en cours et l'élaboration de plans de bien-être pour les membres du recours collectif ainsi que les coûts de la restauration, de la protection et de la préservation du patrimoine linguistique et culturel du groupe des bandes;

- (g) la construction par le Canada de centres de guérison au sein des collectivités appartenant au groupe ;
- (h) les dommages-intérêts exemplaires et punitifs dont le Canada est redevable;
- (i) les intérêts avant et après jugement ;
- (j) les coûts de la présente action;
- (k) toute autre réparation que la Cour pourrait estimer juste.

DÉFINITIONS

2. Les définitions suivantes s'appliquent aux fins de la présente réclamation :

Pour plus de précision, les survivants sont tous ceux qui étaient membres du groupe de survivants précédemment certifié dans le cadre de cette affaire, dont les réclamations ont été réglées selon les conditions établies par la convention de règlement signée le [DATE] et approuvée par la Cour fédérale le [DATE].

LES PARTIES

Les demandeurs

3. La bande indienne Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc et la bande shísháhl sont des bandes indiennes autochtones et elles agissent toutes deux en tant que représentants demandeurs du groupe. Les membres du recours collectif représentent les intérêts collectifs et l'autorité de chacune de leurs communautés respectives.

Le défendeur

4. Le Canada est représenté dans cette procédure par le Procureur général du Canada. Le procureur général du Canada représente les intérêts du Canada et du Ministre des Affaires autochtones et du Nord Canada ainsi que des ministres responsables « Indiens » l'ayant précédé en vertu de l'article 91 (24) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, et qui étaient, à toutes les époques en cause, responsables de l'élaboration et de la mise en œuvre de la politique relative aux pensionnats, ainsi que de l'entretien et du fonctionnement du PIK et du PIS.

EXPOSÉ DES FAITS

5. Au cours des dernières années, le Canada a reconnu l'impact dévastateur de sa politique relative aux pensionnats sur les peuples autochtones du Canada. La politique relative aux pensionnats du Canada a été conçue afin d'éradiquer la culture et l'identité autochtones et d'assimiler les peuples autochtones du Canada à la société eurocanadienne. Par cette politique, le Canada a sapé les fondements de l'identité de générations de peuples autochtones et a causé des dommages incommensurables aux personnes ainsi qu'aux communautés.

6. Le Canada a directement bénéficié de la politique relative aux pensionnats était le Canada, car ses obligations en ont été allégées, proportionnellement au nombre de générations et d'Autochtones qui ont cessé de reconnaître leur identité autochtone et ainsi moins exercé leurs droits garantis par la Loi et par les obligations fiduciaires et constitutionnelles, d'origine législative et en common law du Canada.

7. Le Canada a également bénéficié de la politique relative aux pensionnats, celle-ci ayant servi à affaiblir les revendications des peuples autochtones sur leurs terres et ressources traditionnelles. Le résultat a été la séparation des peuples autochtones de leurs cultures, de leurs traditions et finalement de leurs terres et de leurs ressources. Cette situation a rendu possible l'exploitation de ces terres et de ces ressources par le Canada, non seulement sans le consentement des peuples autochtones, mais aussi, contrairement à leurs intérêts, à la Constitution du Canada et à la Proclamation royale de 1763.

8. La vérité de ce tort et les dommages causés ont maintenant été reconnus par le Premier ministre au nom du Canada, et par le règlement pancanadien des réclamations des personnes qui ont résidé dans les pensionnats du Canada en vertu de la convention de règlement ayant pris effet en 2007. Malgré la vérité et la reconnaissance du tort et des dommages causés, de nombreux membres des communautés autochtones du Canada ont été exclus de cette convention, non pas parce qu'ils n'ont pas fréquenté les pensionnats et subi des dommages culturels, linguistiques et sociaux, mais simplement parce qu'ils n'ont pas résidé dans des pensionnats.

9. La présente réclamation est présentée au nom des membres du recours collectif, composé de communautés autochtones au sein desquelles les pensionnats étaient situés, ou dont les membres sont ou étaient des survivants.

Le système de pensionnats

10. Les pensionnats ont été créés par le Canada avant 1874, en vue de l'éducation des enfants autochtones. Dès le début du vingtième siècle, le Canada a commencé à conclure des accords officiels avec diverses organisations religieuses (les « Églises ») pour assurer le fonctionnement des pensionnats. En vertu de ces accords, le Canada contrôlait, réglementait, supervisait et dirigeait tous les aspects du fonctionnement des pensionnats. Les Églises ont assuré le fonctionnement quotidien de nombreux pensionnats sous le contrôle, la supervision et la direction du Canada, pour lesquels le Canada a versé aux Églises une subvention par personne. En 1969, le Canada a directement repris le contrôle des opérations.

11. À partir de 1920, la politique des pensionnats prévoit la fréquentation obligatoire dans des pensionnats pour tous les enfants autochtones âgés de 7 à 15 ans. Le Canada a retiré la plupart des enfants autochtones de leur foyer et de leur communauté pour les déplacer dans des pensionnats qui se trouvaient souvent très loin. Cependant, dans certains cas, des enfants autochtones vivaient dans leurs foyers et au sein de leurs communautés; ceux-là devaient quand même fréquenter les pensionnats, mais en tant qu'élèves externes et non en tant que pensionnaires. Cette pratique a touché un nombre encore plus grand d'enfants au cours des dernières années de la politique relative aux pensionnats. Une fois dans un pensionnat, tous les enfants autochtones ont été confinés et privés de leur héritage, de leurs réseaux de soutien et de leur mode de vie; forcés d'adopter une langue étrangère et une culture qui leur était étrangère et punis en cas de manquement.

12. L'objectif de la politique relative aux pensionnats était l'intégration et l'assimilation complètes des enfants autochtones dans la culture eurocanadienne ainsi que l'effacement de leur langue, culture, religion et mode de vie traditionnels. Le Canada a voulu causer les dommages culturels, linguistiques et sociaux qui ont porté préjudice aux peuples et aux nations autochtones du Canada.

13. Le Canada a choisi d'être déloyal envers ses peuples autochtones, en mettant en œuvre la politique relative aux pensionnats dans son propre intérêt, notamment son intérêt économique, et au détriment et en ne tenant pas compte des intérêts des personnes autochtones envers lesquels le Canada avait des obligations fiduciaires et constitutionnelles. L'éradication intentionnelle de l'identité, de la culture, de la langue et des pratiques spirituelles autochtones, dans la mesure où elle est réussie, entraîne une réduction des obligations dues par le Canada en proportion du nombre d'individus, sur plusieurs générations, qui ne s'identifieraient plus comme autochtones et qui seraient moins susceptibles de revendiquer leurs droits en tant que personnes autochtones.

Les effets de la politique relative aux pensionnats sur les membres du recours collectif

La bande indienne Tk'emlúps

14. Les Tk'emlúpssemc, « le peuple du confluent », actuellement connus sous le nom de bande indienne Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc, sont des membres du peuple vivant le plus au nord du Plateau et des peuples Salish du continent de langue secwépemc (Shuswap) de la Colombie-Britannique. La bande indienne Tk'emlúps s'est établie sur une réserve actuellement adjacente à la ville de Kamloops, où le PIK a été établi par la suite.

15. Le secwepemetsin est la langue des Secwépemc. Il s'agit de l'unique moyen unique par lequel les connaissances et l'expérience culturelles, écologiques et historiques du peuple Secwépemc sont comprises et transmises entre les générations. C'est à travers la langue, les pratiques spirituelles et le passage de la culture et des traditions, notamment les rituels, le tambour, la danse, les chansons et les histoires, que les valeurs et les croyances du peuple Secwépemc sont comprises et partagées. Selon les Secwépemc, tous les aspects du savoir Secwépemc, notamment leur culture, leurs traditions, leurs lois et leurs langues, sont intégralement et essentiellement liés à leurs terres et à leurs ressources.

16. La langue, tout comme la terre, a été donnée aux Secwépemc par le Créateur afin de permettre la communication avec le peuple et le monde naturel. Cette communication a créé une relation de réciprocité et de coopération entre les Secwépemc et le monde naturel qui leur a permis de survivre et de s'épanouir dans des environnements difficiles. Ce savoir, transmis oralement de génération en génération, contenait les enseignements nécessaires au maintien de la culture, des traditions, des lois et de l'identité secwépemc.

17. Pour les Secwépemc, leurs pratiques spirituelles, leurs chants, leurs danses, leurs histoires orales, leurs récits et leurs cérémonies faisaient partie intégrante de leur vie et de leur société. Il est absolument vital de conserver ces pratiques et traditions. Leurs chants, leurs danses, leurs percussions et leurs cérémonies traditionnelles relient les Secwépemc à leur terre et leur rappellent continuellement leurs responsabilités envers la terre, les ressources et le peuple Secwépemc.

18. Les cérémonies et pratiques spirituelles des Secwépemc, notamment leurs chants, leurs danses, leurs percussions et la transmission de leurs contes et de leur histoire, perpétuent leurs enseignements vitaux et leurs lois concernant la récolte des ressources, notamment des plantes médicinales, la chasse du gibier et la pêche du poisson, ainsi que la protection et la préservation respectueuses des ressources. Par exemple, conformément aux lois Secwépemc, les Secwépemc chantent et prient avant de récolter toute nourriture, tout médicament et toute autre matière provenant de la terre, et font une offrande pour remercier le Créateur et les esprits pour tout ce qu'ils prennent. Les Secwépemc croient que tous les êtres vivants ont un esprit et qu'il faut leur témoigner le plus grand respect. Ce sont ces croyances vitales et intégrales et ces lois traditionnelles, ainsi que d'autres éléments de la culture et de l'identité secwépemc, que le Canada a cherché à détruire avec la politique relative aux pensionnats.

La bande Shishálh

19. La nation shishálh, une branche des Premières nations salish de la côte, occupait à l'origine la partie sud de la côte de la Colombie-Britannique. Le peuple shishálh s'est installé dans la région il y a des milliers d'années et regroupait environ 80 villages établis sur une vaste étendue de terre. Le peuple shishálh se compose de quatre sous-groupes qui parlent la langue shashishalhem, qui est une langue distincte et unique, même si elle fait partie de la branche des Salish de la côte des langues salish.

20. La tradition shíshálh décrit la formation du monde shíshálh (l'histoire de Spelmulh). Tout commence par les esprits créateurs, envoyés par l'Esprit divin pour former le monde, ceux-ci ont creusé des vallées laissant une plage le long du bras de la Baie Porpoise. Plus tard, les transformateurs, un corbeau mâle et un vison femelle, ont ajouté des détails en sculptant des arbres et en formant des bassins d'eau.

21. La culture shíshálh comprend des chants, des danses et des percussions qui font partie intégrante de la culture et des pratiques spirituelles de ce peuple; elles constituent un lien avec la terre et le Créateur et permettent la transmission de son histoire et de ses croyances. Le peuple shíshálh avait recours au chant et à la danse pour raconter des histoires, bénir des événements et même à des fins de guérison. Leurs chants, danses et percussions symbolisent également les événements saisonniers majeurs qui font partie intégrante de la vie des Shíshálh. Leurs traditions comprennent également la fabrication et l'utilisation de masques, de paniers, de parures et d'outils pour la chasse et la pêche. Ce sont ces croyances vitales et intégrales et ces lois traditionnelles, ainsi que d'autres éléments de la culture et de l'identité shíshálh, que le Canada a cherché à détruire avec la politique relative aux pensionnats.

L'impact des pensionnats

22. Conformément à la politique relative aux pensionnats, une discipline stricte a été appliquée à tous les enfants autochtones ayant été contraints de fréquenter les pensionnats. À l'école, les enfants n'étaient pas autorisés à parler leur langue autochtone, même à leurs parents. Par conséquent, les membres de ces communautés autochtones étaient contraints d'apprendre l'anglais.

23. Conformément aux directives du Canada, notamment la politique relative aux pensionnats, la culture autochtone était strictement réprimée par les administrateurs de l'école. Au PIS, les membres des shishalh ont été contraints de brûler ou de donner aux agents du Canada des mâts totémiques, des ornements, des masques et autres « objets chamaniques » et d'abandonner leurs potlachs, leurs danses et leurs festivités hivernales, ainsi que d'autres éléments faisant partie intégrante de la culture et de la société autochtones des peuples shishálh et Secwépemc.

24. Étant donné que le PIS était physiquement situé dans la communauté shishálh, le Canada, à la fois directement et par l'intermédiaire de ses agents, surveillait les aînés et punissait ceux-ci sévèrement lorsqu'ils pratiquaient leur culture, parlaient leur langue ou transmettaient celles-ci aux générations futures. Malgré cette surveillance étroite, les membres du peuple shishálh ont lutté, souvent sans succès, pour pratiquer, protéger et préserver leurs chansons, leurs masques, leurs danses et leurs autres pratiques culturelles.

25. Les Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc ont subi un sort semblable en raison de leur proximité avec le PIK.

26. On a inculqué aux enfants des pensionnats la honte de leur identité, de leur culture, de leur spiritualité et de leurs pratiques autochtones. On les qualifiait, entre autres épithètes méprisantes, de « sales sauvages » et de « païens » et on leur apprenait même à renoncer à leur identité. Le mode de vie, les traditions, les cultures et les pratiques spirituelles autochtones des membres du recours collectif ont été supplantés par l'identité eurocanadienne qui leur a été imposée par le Canada dans le cadre de la politique relative aux pensionnats.

27. Les membres du recours collectif ont perdu, en tout ou en partie, leur viabilité économique traditionnelle, leur autonomie gouvernementale et leurs lois, leur langue, leur assise territoriale et leurs enseignements fondés sur la terre, leurs pratiques spirituelles et religieuses traditionnelles, ainsi que le sens de leur identité collective.

28. La politique relative aux pensionnats, mise en œuvre par le biais des pensionnats, a dévasté les communautés du groupe sur les plans culturel, linguistique et social tout en modifiant leur mode de vie traditionnel.

Règlement entre le Canada et les anciens élèves pensionnaires

29. Depuis la fermeture des pensionnats jusqu'à la fin des années 1990, les communautés autochtones du Canada ont dû composer avec les dommages et les souffrances de leurs membres à la suite de la politique relative aux pensionnats, sans obtenir aucune reconnaissance de la part du Canada. Au cours de cette période, les survivants des pensionnats ont commencé à parler de plus en plus ouvertement des conditions horribles et des abus qu'ils ont subis, ainsi que de l'impact dramatique que ceux-ci ont eu sur leur vie. Durant ce temps, de nombreux survivants se sont suicidés ou ont se sont automédicamentés au point d'en mourir. Ces décès ont dévasté la vie et la stabilité des communautés représentées par le groupe.

30. En janvier 1998, le Canada a publié une déclaration de réconciliation présentant des excuses et reconnaissant l'échec de la politique relative aux pensionnats. Le Canada a reconnu que la politique relative aux pensionnats avait pour but d'assimiler les peuples autochtones et qu'il avait eu tort de poursuivre cet objectif. Les demandeurs plaident que la déclaration de réconciliation du Canada est une admission par le Canada des faits et des obligations énoncés dans les présentes et qu'elle est pertinente à la demande de dommages-intérêts des Demandeurs, en particulier les dommages-intérêts punitifs.

31. La déclaration de réconciliation affirme, en partie, ce qui suit :

Malheureusement, notre histoire en ce qui concerne le traitement des peuples autochtones est bien loin de nous inspirer de la fierté. Des attitudes empreintes de sentiments de supériorité raciale et culturelle ont mené à une répression de la culture et des valeurs autochtones. En tant que pays, nous sommes hantés par nos actions passées qui ont mené à l'affaiblissement de l'identité des peuples autochtones, à la disparition de leurs langues et de leurs cultures et à l'interdiction de leurs pratiques spirituelles. Nous devons reconnaître les conséquences de ces actes sur les nations qui ont été fragmentées, perturbées, limitées ou même anéanties par la dépossession de leurs territoires traditionnels, par la relocalisation des peuples autochtones et par certaines dispositions de la Loi sur les Indiens. Nous devons reconnaître que ces actions ont eu pour effet d'éroder les régimes politiques, économiques et sociaux des peuples et des nations autochtones.

Avec ce passé comme toile de fond, on ne peut que rendre hommage à la force et à l'endurance remarquables des peuples autochtones qui ont préservé leur diversité et leur identité historique. Le gouvernement du Canada adresse aujourd'hui officiellement ses plus profonds regrets à tous les peuples autochtones du Canada à propos des gestes passés du gouvernement fédéral, qui ont contribué aux difficiles passages de l'histoire de nos relations.

Un des aspects de nos rapports avec les peuples autochtones durant cette période, le système des écoles résidentielles, mérite une attention particulière. Ce système a séparé de nombreux enfants de leur famille et de leur collectivité et les a empêchés de parler leur propre langue, ainsi que d'apprendre leurs coutumes et leurs cultures. Dans les pires cas, il a laissé des douleurs et des souffrances personnelles qui se font encore sentir aujourd'hui dans les collectivités autochtones. Tragiquement, certains enfants ont été victimes de sévices physiques et sexuels.

Le gouvernement reconnaît le rôle qu'il a joué dans l'instauration et l'administration de ces écoles. Particulièrement pour les personnes qui ont subi la tragédie des sévices physiques et sexuels dans des pensionnats, et pour celles qui ont porté ce fardeau en pensant, en quelque sorte, en être responsables, nous devons insister sur le fait que ce qui s'est passé n'était pas de leur faute et que cette situation n'aurait jamais dû se produire. À tous ceux d'entre vous qui ont subi cette tragédie dans les pensionnats, nous exprimons nos regrets les plus sincères. Afin de panser les blessures laissées par le régime des pensionnats, le gouvernement du Canada propose de travailler avec les Premières nations, les Inuits, les Métis, les communautés religieuses et les autres parties concernées pour résoudre les problèmes de longue date auxquels ils ont à faire face. Nous devons travailler ensemble pour trouver une stratégie de guérison en vue d'aider les personnes et les collectivités à affronter les conséquences de cette triste période de notre histoire...

32. La réconciliation est un processus permanent. En renouvelant notre partenariat, nous devons veiller à ce que les erreurs qui ont marqué notre relation passée ne se reproduisent pas. Le gouvernement du Canada reconnaît que les politiques visant à assimiler les peuples autochtones, hommes et femmes, n'étaient pas le moyen de bâtir une communauté forte... Le 11 juin 2008, le premier ministre Stephen Harper a présenté, au nom du Canada, des excuses (« Excuses ») reconnaissant les torts causés par la politique relative aux pensionnats indiens du Canada :

Pendant plus d'un siècle, les pensionnats indiens ont séparé plus de 150 000 enfants autochtones de leurs familles et de leurs communautés. Dans les années 1870, en partie afin de remplir son obligation d'instruire les enfants autochtones, le gouvernement fédéral a commencé à jouer un rôle dans l'établissement et l'administration de ces écoles. Le système des pensionnats indiens visait deux objectifs principaux : isoler les enfants et les soustraire à l'influence de leurs foyers, de leurs familles, de leurs traditions et de leur culture, et les intégrer par l'assimilation dans la culture dominante. Ces objectifs reposaient sur l'hypothèse que les cultures et les croyances spirituelles des Autochtones étaient inférieures. D'ailleurs, certains cherchaient, selon une expression devenue tristement célèbre, « à tuer l'Indien au sein de l'enfant ». Aujourd'hui, nous reconnaissons que cette politique d'assimilation était erronée, qu'elle a fait beaucoup de mal et qu'elle n'a aucune place dans notre pays. [l'italique et les caractères gras sont de l'auteur]

33. Dans ses excuses, le premier ministre a reconnu certains faits importants concernant la politique des pensionnats et son impact sur les enfants autochtones :

Le gouvernement du Canada a érigé un système d'éducation dans le cadre duquel de très jeunes enfants ont souvent été arrachés à leurs foyers et, dans bien des cas, emmenés loin de leurs communautés. Bon nombre d'entre eux étaient mal nourris, mal vêtus et mal logés. Tous ont été privés des soins et du soutien de leurs parents et des membres de leurs communautés. Les langues et cultures des Premières nations, des Inuits et des Métis étaient interdites dans ces écoles. Malheureusement, certains de ces enfants sont morts en pension et d'autres ne sont jamais retournés chez eux.

Le gouvernement reconnaît aujourd'hui que les conséquences de la politique sur les pensionnats indiens ont été très néfastes et que cette politique a causé des dommages durables à la culture, au patrimoine et à la langue autochtones.

L'héritage laissé par les pensionnats indiens a contribué à des problèmes sociaux qui persistent dans de nombreuses communautés aujourd'hui.

Nous reconnaissons maintenant que nous avons eu tort de couper les enfants de leur culture et de leurs traditions riches et vivantes, créant ainsi un vide dans tant de vies et de communautés, et nous nous excusons d'avoir agi ainsi. Nous reconnaissons maintenant qu'en séparant les enfants de leurs familles, nous avons réduit la capacité de nombreux anciens élèves à élever adéquatement leurs propres enfants et avons scellé le sort des générations qui ont suivi, et nous nous excusons d'avoir agi ainsi. Nous reconnaissons maintenant que, beaucoup trop souvent, ces institutions donnaient lieu à des cas de sévices ou de négligence et n'étaient pas contrôlées de manière adéquate, et nous nous excusons de ne pas avoir su vous protéger. En plus d'avoir vous-mêmes subi ces mauvais traitements pendant votre enfance, une fois devenus parents à votre tour, vous avez été impuissants à éviter le même sort à vos enfants, et nous le regrettons.

Le fardeau de cette expérience pèse sur vos épaules depuis beaucoup trop longtemps. Ce fardeau nous revient directement, en tant que gouvernement et en tant que pays. Il n'y a pas de place au Canada pour que les attitudes qui ont inspiré le système de pensionnats indiens puissent prévaloir à nouveau. Vous tentez de vous remettre de cette épreuve depuis longtemps, et d'une façon très concrète, nous vous rejoignons maintenant dans ce cheminement. Le gouvernement du Canada présente ses excuses les plus sincères aux peuples autochtones du Canada pour avoir si profondément manqué à son devoir envers eux, et leur demande pardon.

Le manquement du Canada à ses obligations envers les membres du recours collectif

34. De par l'élaboration de la politique relative aux pensionnats et par son exécution, soit la fréquentation forcée des pensionnats, le Canada a causé des pertes inestimables aux membres du recours collectif.

35. Les membres du recours collectif ont tous été affectés par la répression ou l'élimination de leurs cérémonies traditionnelles et par la perte de la structure de gouvernance héréditaire sur laquelle ils comptaient pour gouverner leurs peuples et leurs terres.

Les obligations du Canada

36. Le Canada était responsable de l'élaboration et de la mise en œuvre de tous les aspects de la politique relative aux pensionnats, notamment tout ce qui avait trait au fonctionnement et à l'administration des pensionnats. Les Églises ont servi d'agents du Canada afin de l'aider à atteindre ses objectifs; le Canada étant responsable de ces objectifs et des moyens mis en œuvre en vue de leur réalisation. Le Canada était responsable de :

- (a) l'administration de la Loi et des lois qui l'ont précédée ainsi que de toutes les autres lois relatives aux Autochtones et de tous les règlements promulgués en vertu de ces lois et de celles qui les ont précédées pendant la période visée par le recours;
- (b) la gestion, du fonctionnement et de l'administration du ministère des Affaires indiennes et du Nord canadien et de ses prédécesseurs et des ministères et services connexes, ainsi que les décisions prises par ces ministères et services;
- (c) la construction, du fonctionnement, de l'entretien, de la propriété, du financement, de l'administration, de la supervision, de l'inspection et de la vérification des pensionnats ainsi que de la création, la conception et la mise en œuvre du programme d'éducation visant les Autochtones qui les ont fréquentés;
- (d) la sélection, du contrôle, de la formation, de la supervision et de la réglementation des exploitants des pensionnats, notamment leurs employés, préposés, agents et mandataires, et de la prise en charge, l'éducation, le contrôle et le bien-être des autochtones qui fréquentaient les pensionnats;
- (e) la préservation, de la promotion, de la conservation et l'absence d'interférence avec les droits ancestraux, dont le droit de conserver et pratiquer leur culture, leur spiritualité, leur langue et leurs traditions, ainsi que le droit d'apprendre pleinement leur culture, leur spiritualité, leur langue et leurs traditions auprès de leur famille, de leur famille élargie et de leur communauté;
- (f) la prise en charge et la surveillance de tous les survivants pendant qu'ils fréquentaient les pensionnats au cours de la période visée par le recours.

37. De plus, le Canada s'est engagé, pendant toute la période en cause, à respecter le droit international en ce qui concerne le traitement de sa population, ces obligations, qui ont été violées, constituant un engagement minimal envers les peuples autochtones du Canada, dont les membres du recours collectif. Plus spécifiquement, les violations commises par le Canada concernent le non-respect des dispositions et de l'esprit de :

- (a) la Convention pour la prévention et la répression du crime de génocide, 78 RTNU 277 (entrée en vigueur : 12 janvier 1951), et en particulier l'article 2(b), (c) et (e) de cette convention, en s'engageant dans la destruction intentionnelle de la culture des enfants et des communautés autochtones, causant des blessures culturelles profondes et permanentes au groupe du recours collectif;

- (b) la Déclaration des droits de l'enfant, Rés AG 1386 (XIV), Doc off AGNU, 14^e session, supp n° 16, Doc NU A/4354 (1959) 19 en ne fournissant pas aux enfants autochtones les moyens nécessaires de se développer de façon normale, matériellement et spirituellement, et en ne les mettant pas en mesure de gagner leur vie et de les protéger contre l'exploitation;
- (c) la Convention relative aux Droits de l'enfant, Rés AG 44/25, annexe, Doc off AGNU, 44^e session, supp n° 49, Doc NU A/44/49 (1989) 167; 1577 RTNU 3; 28 ILM 1456 (1989), et en particulier les articles 29 et 30 de cette convention, en ne fournissant pas aux enfants autochtones une éducation visant à inculquer le respect de leurs parents, de leur identité culturelle, de leur langue et de leurs valeurs, et en niant le droit des enfants autochtones d'avoir leur propre vie culturelle, de professer et de pratiquer leur propre religion et d'employer leur propre langue;
- (d) le Pacte international relatif aux droits civils et politiques, Rés AG 2200A (XXI), Doc off ANGU, 21^e session, supp n° 16, Doc NU A/6316 (1966) 52, 999 RTUN 171 (entrée en vigueur : 23 mars 1976), en particulier les articles 1 et 27 de ce pacte, en portant atteinte aux droits des membres du recours collectif de conserver et de pratiquer leur culture, leur spiritualité, leur langue et leurs traditions, au droit d'apprendre pleinement leur culture, leur spiritualité, leur langue et leurs traditions auprès de leur famille, de leur famille élargie et de leur communauté et au droit d'enseigner leur culture, leur spiritualité, leur langue et leurs traditions à leurs propres enfants, petits-enfants, à leurs familles élargies et à leurs communautés;
- (e) la Déclaration américaine des droits et devoirs de l'homme, Rés OEA XXX, adoptée par la neuvième Conférence internationale des États américains (1948), réimprimée dans les Documents de base sur les droits de l'homme dans le Système Interaméricain, OEA/Ser.L.V//II.82 doc 6 rév 1 (1992) 17, et en particulier l'article XIII, en violant le droit des membres du recours collectif de participer à la vie culturelle de leur communauté;
- (f) la Déclaration des Nations Unies sur les droits des peuples autochtones, Rés AG 61/295, Doc NU A/RES/61/295 (13 sept. 2007), 46 ILM 1013 (2007), signée par le Canada le 12 novembre 2010, et en particulier l'article 8, 2(d), qui l'engage à mettre en place des mécanismes de recours efficaces en cas d'assimilation forcée.

38. En vertu de la présomption de conformité du droit canadien au droit international, une violation des obligations prévues par ce dernier constitue une preuve de la violation du droit interne.

Violation des obligations fiduciaires et constitutionnelles

39. Le Canada a des obligations constitutionnelles et une relation fiduciaire avec les peuples autochtones du Canada. Le Canada a créé, planifié, établi, mis en place, inauguré, exploité, financé, supervisé, contrôlé et réglementé les pensionnats et a établi la politique relative aux pensionnats. Compte tenu de ces lois, et en vertu de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982 et des dispositions de la Loi, telle que révisée, le Canada avait une obligation fiduciaire envers les membres du recours collectif.

40. Parmi les devoirs constitutionnels du Canada, on peut citer l'obligation de préserver l'honneur de la Couronne dans toutes ses relations avec les peuples autochtones, y compris avec les membres du recours collectif. Cette obligation est née avec l'affirmation de la souveraineté de la Couronne dès le premier contact et se poursuit dans le cadre des relations suivant les traités. Cette obligation est et demeure une obligation de la Couronne et était une obligation de la Couronne lors de toute la période en cause. L'honneur de la Couronne est un principe juridique qui exige que la Couronne agisse en tout temps de la manière la plus honorable possible afin de protéger les intérêts des peuples autochtones dans ses relations avec ceux-ci, depuis le premier contact et après la signature de traités.

41. Les obligations fiduciaires du Canada l'obligeaient à agir en tant que protecteur des droits ancestraux des membres du recours collectif, à savoir la protection et la préservation de leur langue, de leur culture et de leur mode de vie, et l'obligation de prendre des mesures correctives afin de rétablir la culture, l'histoire et le statut des demandeurs, ou de les aider à le faire. À tout le moins, l'obligation du Canada envers les peuples autochtones comprenait l'obligation de ne pas réduire délibérément le nombre de bénéficiaires envers lesquels le Canada avait des obligations.

42. Les obligations fiduciaires et constitutionnelles du Canada s'étendent au recours collectif, car la politique relative aux pensionnats avait pour but de miner et de chercher à détruire le mode de vie de ces nations dont les identités étaient et sont considérées comme collectives.

43. Le Canada a agi dans son propre intérêt et à l'encontre des intérêts des enfants autochtones, non seulement en étant déloyal envers ces enfants et les communautés autochtones, mais il les a également trahis alors qu'il avait le devoir de protéger. Le Canada a abusé de son pouvoir discrétionnaire et de son autorité sur les peuples autochtones, en particulier sur les enfants, pour son propre bénéfice. La politique relative aux pensionnats indiens a été mise en œuvre par le Canada, en tout ou en partie, pour éradiquer ce que le Canada considérait comme le « problème indien ». En l'espèce, le Canada a cherché à se défaire de ses responsabilités morales et financières envers les peuples autochtones, des dépenses et des inconvénients liés à la cohabitation avec des cultures, des langues, des habitudes et des valeurs différentes de l'héritage eurocanadien prédominant du Canada, et des enjeux découlant des revendications territoriales.

44. Le Canada, en violation de ses obligations fiduciaires, constitutionnelles, légales et de common law à l'égard du groupe de recours collectif, a manqué, et continue de manquer, à réparer adéquatement les dommages causés par ses actes, manquements et omissions. En particulier, le Canada n'a pas pris de mesures adéquates pour réparer les dommages culturels, linguistiques et sociaux subis par les membres du recours collectif, en dépit du fait que le Canada admette depuis 1998 le caractère répréhensible de la politique relative aux pensionnats.

Violation des droits ancestraux

45. Avant leur contact avec les Européens, les peuples shíshálh, Tk'emlúps et tous les membres du recours collectif, disposaient de lois, de coutumes et de traditions faisant partie intégrante de leurs sociétés distinctes. Plus particulièrement, et cela depuis une époque antérieure au contact avec les Européens, ces nations ont soutenu leurs membres, leurs communautés et leurs cultures distinctes en parlant leurs langues et en pratiquant leurs coutumes et leurs traditions.

46. En raison de la politique relative aux pensionnats indiens, les membres du recours collectif se sont vus refuser la possibilité de jouir de leurs droits ancestraux et de les exercer de façon collective au sein de leurs bandes, compte tenu, mais sans s'y limiter, des éléments suivants :

- (a) les activités culturelles, spirituelles et traditionnelles shíshálh, tk'emlúps et autochtones ont été perdues ou altérées;
- (b) les structures sociales traditionnelles, y compris le partage égal de l'autorité entre les dirigeants masculins et féminins, ont été perdues ou altérées;
- (c) les langues shíshálh, tk'emlúps et d'autres langues autochtones ont été perdues ou altérées;
- (d) les formes traditionnelles de parentalité shíshálh, Tk'emlúps et d'autres peuples autochtones ont été perdues ou altérées;
- (e) le savoir-faire en matière de cueillette, de culture, de chasse et de préparation d'aliments traditionnels shíshálh, Tk'emlúps et d'autres peuples autochtones a été perdu ou altéré;
- (f) les croyances spirituelles shíshálh, tk'emlúps autochtones ont été perdues ou altérées ;

47. De tout temps, le Canada avait et continue d'avoir l'obligation de protéger les droits ancestraux des membres du recours collectif, notamment le droit d'exercer leurs pratiques spirituelles et à la protection traditionnelle de leurs terres et de leurs ressources, ainsi que l'obligation de ne pas transgresser ou entraver les droits ancestraux des membres du recours collectif. Par sa politique relative aux pensionnats indiens, le Canada a manqué à ces devoirs, et ce sans justification.

Responsabilité du fait d'autrui

48. Le Canada est responsable du fait d'autrui pour avoir négligé les obligations fiduciaires, constitutionnelles, d'origine législative et en common law de ses agents.

49. De plus, les demandeurs tiennent le Canada pour seul responsable de la création et de la mise en œuvre de la politique relative aux pensionnats indiens et, en outre :

- a. les demandeurs renoncent expressément à tout droit qu'ils pourraient avoir de recouvrer du Canada, ou de toute autre partie, toute partie de la perte des demandeurs qui pourrait être attribuable à la faute ou à la responsabilité d'un tiers et pour laquelle le Canada pourrait raisonnablement être en droit de réclamer à un ou plusieurs tiers une contribution, une indemnité ou une répartition en common law, en équité ou en vertu de la Negligence Act, RSBC, 1996, c. 333, ainsi modifiée; et
- b. Les demandeurs ne chercheront pas à recouvrer d'une tierce partie, autre que le Canada, une partie de leurs pertes réclamées, ou qui auraient pu être réclamées à d'autres tiers.

Dommages

50. En raison de la violation des obligations fiduciaires, constitutionnelles, d'origine législative et en common law, et de la violation des droits autochtones par le Canada et ses agents, pour lesquels le Canada est responsable du fait d'autrui, les membres du groupe du recours collectif se sont vus privés de la possibilité d'exercer pleinement leurs droits autochtones collectivement, notamment le droit d'avoir un gouvernement traditionnel fondé sur leurs propres langues, pratiques spirituelles, lois et pratiques traditionnelles.

Motifs des dommages-intérêts punitifs et majorés

51. Le Canada a délibérément planifié l'éradication de la langue, de la religion et de la culture des membres du recours collectif. Ces actions étaient malveillantes et destinées à causer un préjudice, et dans les circonstances, les dommages-intérêts punitifs et majorés sont appropriés et nécessaires.

Fondement juridique de la réclamation

52. Les membres du recours collectif sont des bandes indiennes autochtones.

53. Les droits ancestraux des membres du recours collectif existaient et étaient exercés en vertu de l'article 35 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982, soit l'annexe B de la Loi de 1982 sur le Canada (R-U), 1982, c. 11, pour toute la période concernée par cette dernière.

54. Lors de cette période, le Canada avait envers les demandeurs et les membres du recours collectif une obligation spéciale et constitutionnelle de diligence, de bonne foi, d'honnêteté et de loyauté en vertu des obligations constitutionnelles du Canada et de son obligation d'agir dans l'intérêt supérieur des peuples autochtones et surtout des enfants autochtones particulièrement vulnérables. Le Canada a manqué à ces obligations, causant ainsi un préjudice.

55. Les membres du recours collectif appartiennent à des peuples autochtones qui disposaient de leurs lois, coutumes et traditions respectives, celles-ci faisant partie intégrante de leurs sociétés distinctes avant leur contact avec les Européens. Plus particulièrement, et depuis une époque antérieure au contact avec les Européens jusqu'à aujourd'hui, les peuples autochtones constituant les membres du recours collectif ont assuré la subsistance de leur peuple, de leurs communautés et de leur culture distincte en exerçant leurs lois et en pratiquant leurs coutumes et traditions respectives, parties intégrantes de leur mode de vie, qui comprennent la langue, la danse, la musique, les loisirs, l'art, la famille, le mariage et les responsabilités envers la communauté, ainsi que l'utilisation des ressources.

56. Les membres du recours collectif plaident que tout article de la Loi et des lois qui l'ont précédée, tout règlement adopté en vertu de la Loi et toute autre loi relative aux peuples autochtones qui fournit ou prétend fournir l'autorité légale pour l'éradication des peuples autochtones par la destruction de leurs langues, de leur culture, de leurs pratiques, de leurs traditions et de leur mode de vie, est en violation des articles 25 et 35(1) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982, des articles 1 et 2 de la Déclaration canadienne des droits, L.R.C. 1985, ainsi que les articles 7 et 15 de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, et doivent par conséquent être considérés comme n'ayant aucune force exécutoire.

57. Le Canada a délibérément planifié l'éradication de la langue, de la spiritualité et de la culture des demandeurs et des membres du recours collectif.
58. Les actions du Canada étaient délibérées et malveillantes et, dans ces circonstances, des dommages-intérêts punitifs, exemplaires et majorés sont appropriés et nécessaires.
59. Les demandeurs plaident et s'appuient sur les éléments suivants :

Loi sur les Cours fédérales, LRC., 1985, c. F-7, article 17 ;

Règles des Cours fédérales, DORS/98-106, partie 5.1 Recours collectifs ;

The Defendant

20. Canada is represented in this proceeding by the Attorney General of Canada. The Attorney General of Canada represents the interests of Canada and the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Canada and predecessor Ministers who were responsible for “Indians” under s.91(24) of the Constitution Act, 1867, and who were, at all material times, responsible for the formation and implementation of the Residential Schools Policy, and the maintenance and operation of the KIRS and the SIRS.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

21. Over the course of the last several years, Canada has acknowledged the devastating impact of its Residential Schools Policy on Canada's Aboriginal Peoples. Canada's Residential Schools Policy was designed to eradicate Aboriginal culture and identity and assimilate the Aboriginal Peoples of Canada into Euro-Canadian society. Through this policy, Canada ripped away the foundations of identity for generations of Aboriginal People and caused incalculable harm to both individuals and communities.

22. The direct beneficiary of the Residential Schools Policy was Canada as its obligations would be reduced in proportion to the number, and generations, of Aboriginal Persons who would no longer recognize their Aboriginal identity and would reduce their claims to rights under the Act and Canada's fiduciary, constitutionally-mandated, statutory and common law duties.

23. Canada was also a beneficiary of the Residential Schools Policy, as the policy served to weaken the claims of Aboriginal Peoples to their traditional lands and resources. The result was a severing of Aboriginal People from their cultures, traditions and ultimately their lands and resources. This allowed for exploitation of those lands and resources by Canada, not only without Aboriginal Peoples' consent but also, contrary to their interests, the Constitution of Canada and the Royal Proclamation of 1763.

24. The truth of this wrong and the damage it has wrought has now been acknowledged by the Prime Minister on behalf of Canada, and through the pan-Canadian settlement of the claims of those who resided at Canada's Residential Schools by way of the Agreement implemented in 2007. Notwithstanding the truth and acknowledgement of the wrong and the damages caused, many members of Canada's Aboriginal communities were excluded from the Agreement, not because they did not attend Residential Schools and suffer Cultural, Linguistic and Social Damage, but simply because they did not reside at Residential Schools.

25. This claim is on behalf of the members of the Survivor Class, namely those who attended ~~an Identified~~ Residential School for the Cultural, Linguistic and Social Damage occasioned by that attendance, as well as on behalf of the Descendant Class, who are the first generation descendants of those within the Survivor Class, and the Band Class, consisting of the Aboriginal communities within which the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools were situated, or whose members belong to and within which the majority of the Survivor and Descendant Class members live.

{01447063.2}

26. The claims of the ~~proposed~~ Representative Plaintiffs are for the harm done to the Representative Plaintiffs as a result of members of the Survivor Class attending the KIRS and the SIRS and being exposed to the operation of the Residential Schools Policy and do not include the claims arising from residing at the KIRS or the SIRS for which specific compensation has been paid under the Agreement. This claim seeks compensation for the victims of that policy whose claims have been ignored by Canada and were excluded from the compensation in the Agreement.

The Residential School System

27. Residential Schools were established by Canada prior to 1874, for the education of Aboriginal Children. Commencing in the early twentieth century, Canada began entering into formal agreements with various religious organizations (the “Churches”) for the operation of Residential Schools. Pursuant to these agreements, Canada controlled, regulated, supervised and directed all aspects of the operation of Residential Schools. The Churches assumed the day-to-day operation of many of the Residential Schools under the control, supervision and direction of Canada, for which Canada paid the Churches a per capita grant. In 1969, Canada took over operations directly.

28. As of 1920, the Residential Schools Policy included compulsory attendance at Residential Schools for all Aboriginal Children aged 7 to 15. Canada removed most Aboriginal Children from their homes and Aboriginal communities and transported them to Residential Schools which were often long distances away. However, in some cases, Aboriginal Children lived in their homes and communities and were similarly required to attend Residential Schools as day students and not residents. This practice applied to even more children in the later years of the Residential Schools Policy. While at Residential School, all Aboriginal Children were confined and deprived of their heritage, their support networks and their way of life, forced to adopt a foreign language and a culture alien to them and punished for non-compliance.

29. The purpose of the Residential Schools Policy was the complete integration and assimilation of Aboriginal Children into the Euro-Canadian culture and the obliteration of their traditional language, culture, religion and way of life. Canada set out and intended to cause the Cultural, Linguistic and Social Damage which has harmed Canada's Aboriginal Peoples and Nations. ~~In addition to the inherent cruelty of the~~ As a result of Canada's requirements for the forced attendance of the Survivor Class members under the Residential Schools Policy itself, many children attending Residential Schools were also subject to spiritual, physical, sexual and emotional abuse, all of which continued until the year 1997, when the last Residential School was closed.

30. Canada chose to be disloyal to its Aboriginal Peoples, implementing the Residential Schools Policy in its own self-interest, including economic self-interest, and to the detriment and exclusion of the interests of the Aboriginal Persons to whom Canada owed fiduciary and constitutionally-mandated duties. The intended eradication of Aboriginal identity, culture, language, and spiritual practices ~~and religion~~, to the extent successful, results in the reduction of the obligations owed by Canada in proportion to the number of individuals, over generations, who would no longer identify as Aboriginal and who would be less likely to make claims to their rights as Aboriginal Persons.

The Effects of the Residential Schools Policy on the Class Members

Tk'emlúps Indian Band

31. Tk'emlúpsəmc, 'the people of the confluence', now known as the Tk'emlúps te Secwépəmc Indian Band are members of the northernmost of the Plateau People and of the Interior-Salish Secwépəmc (Shuswap) speaking peoples of British Columbia. The Tk'emlúps Indian Band was established on a reserve now adjacent to the City of Kamloops, where the KIRS was subsequently established. Most, if not all, of the students who attended, but did not reside at the KIRS were or are members of the Tk'emlúps Indian Band, resident or formerly resident on the reserve.

32. Secwepemctsin is the language of the Secwépəmc, and it is the unique means by which the cultural, ecological, and historical knowledge and experience of the Secwépəmc people is understood and conveyed between generations. It is through language, spiritual practices and passage of culture and traditions including their rituals, drumming, dancing, songs and stories, that the values and beliefs of the Secwépəmc people are captured and shared. From the Secwépəmc perspective all aspects of Secwépəmc knowledge, including their culture, traditions, laws and languages, are vitally and integrally linked to their lands and resources.

33. Language, like the land, was given to the Secwépəmc by the Creator for communication to the people and to the natural world. This communication created a reciprocal and cooperative relationship between the Secwépəmc and the natural world which enabled them to survive and flourish in harsh environments. This knowledge, passed down to the next generation orally, contained the teachings necessary for the maintenance of Secwépəmc culture, traditions, laws and identity.

34. For the Secwépəmc, their spiritual practices, songs, dances, oral histories, stories and ceremonies were an integral part of their lives and societies. These practices and traditions are absolutely vital to maintain. Their songs, dances, drumming and traditional ceremonies connect the Secwépemc to their land and continually remind the Secwépemc of their responsibilities to the land, the resources and to the Secwépemc people.

35. Secwépemc ceremonies and spiritual practices, including their songs, dances, drumming and passage of stories and history, perpetuate their vital teachings and laws relating to the harvest of resources, including medicinal plants, game and fish, and the proper and respectful protection and preservation of resources. For example, in accordance with Secwépemc laws, the Secwépemc sing and pray before harvesting any food, medicines, and other materials from the land, and make an offering to thank the Creator and the spirits for anything they take. The Secwépemc believe that all living things have spirits and must be shown utmost respect. It was these vital, integral beliefs and traditional laws, together with other elements of Secwépemc culture and identity, that Canada sought to destroy with the Residential Schools Policy.

Shishálh band

36. The shishálh Nation, a division of the Coast Salish First Nations, originally occupied the southern portion of the lower coast of British Columbia. The shishálh People settled the area thousands of years ago, and occupied approximately 80 village sites over a vast tract of land. The shishálh People are made up of four sub-groups that speak the language of Shashishalhem, which is a distinct and unique language, although it is part of the Coast Salish Division of the Salishan Language.

37. Shishálh tradition describes the formation of the shishálh world (Spelmulh story). Beginning with the creator spirits, who were sent by the Divine Spirit to form the world, they carved out valleys leaving a beach along the inlet at Porpoise Bay. Later, the transformers, a male raven and a female mink, added details by carving trees and forming pools of water.

38. The shishálh culture includes singing, dancing and drumming as an integral part of their culture and spiritual practices, a connection with the land and the Creator and passing on the history and beliefs of the people. Through song and dance the shishálh People would tell stories, bless events and even bring about healing. Their songs, dances and drumming also signify critical seasonal events that are integral to the shishálh. Traditions also include making and using masks, baskets, regalia and tools for hunting and fishing. It was these vital, integral beliefs and traditional laws, together with other elements of the shishálh culture and identity, that Canada sought to destroy with the Residential Schools Policy.

The Impact of the ~~Identified~~ Residential schools

39. For all of the Aboriginal Children who were compelled to attend the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools, rigid discipline was enforced as per the Residential Schools Policy. While at school, children were not allowed to speak their Aboriginal language, even to their parents, and thus members of these Aboriginal communities were forced to learn English.

40. Aboriginal culture was strictly suppressed by the school administrators in compliance with the policy directives of Canada including the Residential Schools Policy. At the SIRS, ~~converts to Catholicism~~ members of shishalh were forced to burn or give to the agents of Canada centuries-old totem poles, regalia, masks and other "paraphernalia of the medicine men" and to abandon their potlatches, dancing and winter festivities, and other elements integral to the Aboriginal culture and society of the shishálh and Secwépemc peoples.

41. Because the SIRS was physically located in the shíshálh community, ~~the church~~ and Canada's ~~government~~ eyes, both directly and through its Agents, were upon the elders and they were punished severely for practising their culture or speaking their language or passing this on to future generations. In the midst of that scrutiny, the Class members struggled, often unsuccessfully, to practice, protect and preserve their songs, masks, dancing or other cultural practices

42. The Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc suffered a similar fate due to their proximity to the KIRS.

43. The children at the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools were ~~indoctrinated into Christianity~~, and taught to be ashamed of their Aboriginal identity, culture, spirituality and practices. They were referred to as, amongst other derogatory epithets, “dirty savages” and “heathens” and taught to shun their very identities. The Class members’ Aboriginal way of life, traditions, cultures and spiritual practices were supplanted with the Euro-Canadian identity imposed upon them by Canada through the Residential Schools Policy.

44. This implementation of the Residential Schools Policy further damaged the Survivor Class members of the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools, who returned to their homes at the end of the school day and, having been taught in the school that the traditional teachings of their parents, grandparents and elders were of no value and, in some cases, “heathen” practices and beliefs, would dismiss the teachings of their parents, grandparents and elders.

45. The assault on their traditions, laws, language and culture through the implementation of the Residential Schools Policy by Canada, directly and through its

Agents, has continued to undermine the individual Survivor Class members, causing a loss of self-esteem, depression, anxiety, suicidal ideation, suicide, physical illnesses without clear causes, difficulties in parenting, difficulties in maintaining positive relationships, substance abuse and violence, among other harms and losses, all of which has impacted the Descendant Class.

46. The Band Class members have lost, in whole or in part, their traditional economic viability, self-government and laws, language, land base and land-based teachings, traditional spiritual practices and religious practices, and the integral sense of their collective identity.

47. The Residential Schools Policy, delivered through the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools, wrought cultural, linguistic and social devastation on the communities of the Band Class and altered their traditional way of life.

Canada's Settlement with Former Residential School Residents

48. From the closure of the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools ~~in the 1970's~~ until the late 1990's, Canada's Aboriginal communities were left to battle the damages and suffering of their members as a result of the Residential Schools Policy, without any acknowledgement from Canada. During this period, Residential School survivors increasingly began speaking out about the horrible conditions and abuse they suffered, and the dramatic impact it had on their lives. At the same time, many survivors committed suicide or self-medicated to the point of death. The deaths devastated not only the members of the Survivor Class and the Descendant Class, but also the life and stability of the communities represented by the Band Class.

{01447063.2}

49. In January 1998, Canada issued a Statement of Reconciliation acknowledging and apologizing for the failures of the Residential Schools Policy. Canada admitted that the Residential Schools Policy was designed to assimilate Aboriginal Persons and that it was wrong to pursue that goal. The Plaintiffs plead that the Statement of Reconciliation by Canada is an admission by Canada of the facts and duties set out herein and is relevant to the Plaintiffs' claim for damages, particularly punitive damages.

50. The Statement of Reconciliation stated, in part, as follows:

Sadly, our history with respect to the treatment of Aboriginal people is not something in which we can take pride. Attitudes of racial and cultural superiority led to a suppression of Aboriginal culture and values. As a country we are burdened by past actions that resulted in weakening the identity of Aboriginal peoples, suppressing their languages and cultures, and outlawing spiritual practices. We must recognize the impact of these actions on the once self sustaining nations that were disaggregated, disrupted, limited or even destroyed by the dispossession of traditional territory, by the relocation of Aboriginal people, and by some provisions of the Indian Act. We must acknowledge that the results of these actions was the erosion of the political, economic and social systems of Aboriginal people and nations.

Against the backdrop of these historical legacies, it is a remarkable tribute to the strength and endurance of Aboriginal people that they have maintained their historic diversity and identity. The Government of Canada today formally expresses to all Aboriginal people in Canada our profound regret for past actions of the Federal Government which have contributed to these difficult pages in the history of our relationship together.

One aspect of our relationship with Aboriginal people over this period that requires particular attention is the Residential School System. This system separated many children from their families and communities and prevented them from speaking their own languages and from learning about their heritage and cultures. In the worst cases, it left legacies of personal pain and distress that continued to reverberate in Aboriginal communities to this date. Tragically, some children were the victims of physical and sexual abuse.

The Government of Canada acknowledges the role it played in the development and administration of these schools. Particularly to those individuals who experienced the tragedy of sexual and physical abuse at Residential Schools, and who have carried this burden believing that in some way they must be responsible, we wish to emphasize that what you experienced was not your fault and should never have happened. To those of you who suffered this tragedy at Residential Schools, we are deeply sorry. In dealing with the legacies of the Residential School program, the Government of Canada proposes to work with First Nations, Inuit, Metis people, the Churches and other interested parties to resolve the longstanding issues that must be addressed. We need to work together on a healing strategy to assist individuals and communities in dealing with the consequences of this sad era of our history...

Reconciliation is an ongoing process. In renewing our partnership, we must ensure that the mistakes which marked our past relationship are not repeated. The Government of Canada recognizes that policies that sought to assimilate Aboriginal people, women and men, were not the way to build a strong community...

51. On or about May 10, 2006, Canada entered into the Agreement to provide compensation primarily to those who resided at Residential Schools.

52. The Agreement provides for two types of individualized compensation: the Common Experience Payment ("CEP") for the fact of having resided at a Residential School, and compensation based upon an Independent Assessment Process ("IAP"), to provide compensation for certain abuses suffered and harms these abuses caused.

53. The CEP consisted of compensation for former residents of a Residential School in the amount of $10,000 for the first school year or part of a school year and a further $3,000 for each subsequent school year or part of a school year of residence at a Residential School. The CEP was payable based upon residence at a Residential School out of a recognition that the experience of assimilation was damaging and worthy of compensation, regardless of whether a student experienced physical, sexual or other abuse while at the Residential School.

Compensation for the latter was payable through the IAP. The CEP was available only for former residents of a Residential School while, in some cases, the IAP was available not only to former residents but also other young people who were lawfully on the premises of a Residential School, including former day students.

54. The implementation of the Agreement represented the first time Canada agreed to pay compensation for Cultural, Linguistic and Social Damage. Canada refused to incorporate compensation for members of the Survivor Class, namely, those students who attended the ~~Identified Residential Schools, or other~~ Residential Schools, but who did not reside there.

55. The Agreement was approved by provincial and territorial superior courts from British Columbia to Quebec, and including the Northwest Territories, Yukon Territory and Nunavut, and the Agreement was implemented beginning on September 20, 2007.

56. On June 11, 2008, Prime Minister Stephen Harper on behalf of Canada, delivered an apology (“Apology”) that acknowledged the harm done by Canada’s Residential Schools Policy:

For more than a century, Indian Residential Schools separated over 150,000 Aboriginal children from their families and communities. In the 1870's, the federal government, partly in order to meet its obligation to educate Aboriginal children, began to play a role in the development and administration of these schools. Two primary objectives of the Residential Schools system were to remove and isolate children from the influence of their homes, families, traditions and cultures, and to assimilate them into the dominant culture. These objectives were based on the assumption Aboriginal cultures and spiritual beliefs were inferior and unequal. Indeed, some sought, as it was infamously said, "to kill the Indian in the child". Today, we recognize that this policy of assimilation was wrong, has caused great harm, and has no place in our country. [emphasis added]

57. In this Apology, the Prime Minister made some important acknowledgments regarding the Residential Schools Policy and its impact on Aboriginal Children:

The Government of Canada built an educational system in which very young children were often forcibly removed from their homes, often taken far from their communities. Many were inadequately fed, clothed and housed. All were deprived of the care and nurturing of their parents, grandparents and communities. First Nations, Inuit and Métis languages and cultural practices were prohibited in these schools. Tragically, some of these children died while attending residential schools and others never returned home.

The government now recognizes that the consequences of the Indian Residential Schools policy were profoundly negative and that this policy has had a lasting and damaging impact on Aboriginal culture, heritage and language.

The legacy of Indian Residential Schools has contributed to social problems that continue to exist in many communities today.

We now recognize that it was wrong to separate children from rich and vibrant cultures and traditions, that it created a void in many lives and communities, and we apologize for having done this. We now recognize that, in separating children from their families, we undermined the ability of many to adequately parent their own children and sowed the seeds for generations to follow, and we apologize for having done this. We now recognize that, far too often, these institutions gave rise to abuse or neglect and were inadequately controlled, and we apologize for failing to protect you. Not only did you suffer these abuses as children, but as you became parents, you were powerless to protect your own children from suffering the same experience, and for this we are sorry.

The burden of this experience has been on your shoulders for far too long. The burden is properly ours as a Government, and as a country. There is no place in Canada for the attitudes that inspired the Indian Residential Schools system to ever prevail again. You have been working on recovering from this experience for a long time and in a very real sense, we are now joining you on this journey. The Government of Canada sincerely apologizes and asks the forgiveness of the Aboriginal peoples of this country for failing them so profoundly.

58. Notwithstanding the Apology and the acknowledgment of wrongful conduct by Canada, as well as the call for recognition from Canada's Aboriginal communities and from the Truth and Reconciliation Commission in its Interim Report of February 2012, the exclusion of the Survivor Class from the Agreement by Canada reflects Canada's continued failure to members of the Survivor Class. Canada continues, as it did from the 1970s until 2006 with respect to 'residential students', to deny the damage suffered by the individual Plaintiffs and the members of the Survivor, Descendant and Band Classes.

Canada's Breach of Duties to the Class Members

59. From the formation of the Residential Schools Policy to its execution in the form of forced attendance at the Identified Residential Schools, Canada utterly failed the Survivor Class members, and in so doing, destroyed the foundations of the individual identities of the Survivor Class members, stole the heritage of the Descendant Class members and caused incalculable losses to the Band Class members.

60. The Survivor Class members, Descendant Class members and Band Class members have all been affected by family dysfunction, a crippling or elimination of traditional ceremonies, and a loss of the hereditary governance structure which allowed for the ability to govern their peoples and their lands.

61. While attending the Identified Residential School the Survivor Class members were utterly vulnerable, and Canada owed them the highest fiduciary, moral, statutory, constitutionally-mandated and common law duties, which included, but were not limited to, the duty to protect Aboriginal Rights and prevent Cultural, Linguistic and Social Damage. Canada breached these duties, and failed in its special responsibility to ensure the safety and well-being of the Survivor Class while at the Identified Residential Schools.

Canada's Duties

62. Canada was responsible for developing and implementing all aspects of the Residential Schools Policy, including carrying out all operational and administrative aspects of Residential Schools. While the Churches were often used as Canada's Agents to assist Canada in carrying out its objectives, those objectives and the manner in which they were carried out were the obligations of Canada. Canada was responsible for:

- (a) the administration of the Act and its predecessor statutes as well as all other statutes relating to Aboriginal Persons and all Regulations promulgated under these Acts and their predecessors during the Class Period;
- (b) the management, operation and administration of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and its predecessors and related Ministries and Departments, as well as the decisions taken by those ministries and departments;
- (c) the construction, operation, maintenance, ownership, financing, administration, supervision, inspection and auditing of the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools and for the creation, design and implementation of the program of education for Aboriginal Persons in attendance;
- (d) the selection, control, training, supervision and regulation of the operators of the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools, including their employees, servants, officers and agents, and for the care and education, control and well being of Aboriginal Persons attending the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools;
- (e) preserving, promoting, maintaining and not interfering with Aboriginal Rights, including the right to retain and practice their culture, spirituality, language and traditions and the right to fully learn their culture, spirituality, language and traditions from their families, extended families and communities; and
- (f) the care and supervision of all members of the Survivor Class while they were in attendance at the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools during the Class Period.

63. Further, Canada has at all material times committed itself to honour international law in relation to the treatment of its people, which obligations form minimum commitments to Canada's Aboriginal Peoples, including the Survivor, Descendant and Band Classes, and which have been breached. In particular, Canada's breaches include the failure to comply with the terms and spirit of:

{01447063.2}

- (a) the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, 78 U.N.T.S. 277, entered into force Jan. 12, 1951., and in particular Article 2(b), (c) and (e) of that convention, by engaging in the intentional destruction of the culture of Aboriginal Children and communities, causing profound and permanent cultural, psychological, emotional and physical injuries to the Class;
- (b) the Declaration of the Rights of the Child (1959) G.A. res. 1386 (XIV), 14 U.N. GAOR Supp. (No. 16) at 19, U.N. Doc. A/4354 by failing to provide Aboriginal Children with the means necessary for normal development, both materially and spiritually, and failing to put them in a position to earn a livelihood and protect them against exploitation;
- (c) the Convention on the Rights of the Child, GA res. 44/25, annex, 44 UN GAOR Supp. (No. 49) at 167, U.N. Doc. A/44/49 (1989); 1577 UNTS 3; 28 ILM 1456 (1989), and in particular Articles 29 and 30 of that convention, by failing to provide Aboriginal Children with education that is directed to the development of respect for their parents, their cultural identities, language and values, and by denying the right of Aboriginal Children to enjoy their own cultures, to profess and practise their own religions and to use their own languages;
- (d) the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, G.A. res. 2200A (XXI), 21 U.N. GAOR Supp. (No. 16) at 52, U.N. Doc. A/6316 (1966), 999 U.N.T.S. 171, entered into force Mar. 23, 1976, in particular Articles 1 and 27 of that convention, by interfering with Class members' rights to retain and practice their culture, spirituality, language and traditions, the right to fully learn their culture, spirituality, language and traditions from their families, extended families and communities and the right to teach their culture, spirituality, language and traditions to their own children, grandchildren, extended families and communities.
- (e) the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man, O.A.S. Res. XXX, adopted by the Ninth International Conference of American States (1948), reprinted in Basic Documents Pertaining to Human Rights in the Inter-American System, OEA/Ser.L.V//II.82 doc.6 rev.1 at 17 (1992), and in particular Article XIII, by violating Class members' right to take part in the cultural life of their communities.
- (f) the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, G.A. Res. 61/295, U.N. Doc. A/RES/61/295 (Sept. 13, 2007), 46 I.L.M. 1013 (2007), endorsed by Canada 12 November 2010, and in particular article 8, 2(d), which commits to the provision of effective mechanisms for redress for forced assimilation.

64. Canada's obligations under international law inform Canada's common law, statutory, fiduciary, constitutionally-mandated and other duties, and a breach of the aforementioned international obligations is evidence of, or constitutes, a breach under domestic law.

Breach of Fiduciary and Constitutionally-Mandated Duties

65. Canada has constitutional obligations to, and a fiduciary relationship with, Aboriginal People in Canada. Canada created, planned, established, set up, initiated, operated, financed, supervised, controlled and regulated the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools and established the Residential Schools Policy. Through these acts, and by virtue of the Constitution Act 1867, the Constitution Act, 1982, and the provisions of the Act, as amended, Canada assumed the power and obligation to act in a fiduciary capacity with respect to the education and welfare of Class members.

66. Canada's constitutional duties include the obligation to uphold the honour of the Crown in all of its dealings with Aboriginal Peoples, including the Class members. This obligation arose with the Crown's assertion of sovereignty from the time of first contact and continues through post-treaty relationships. This is and remains an obligation of the Crown and was an obligation on the Crown at all material times. The honour of the Crown is a legal principle which requires the Crown to operate at all material times in its relations with Aboriginal Peoples from contact to post-treaty in the most honourable manner to protect the interests of the Aboriginal Peoples.

67. Canada's fiduciary duties obliged Canada to act as a protector of Class members' Aboriginal Rights, including the protection and preservation of their language, culture and their way of life, and the duty to take corrective steps to restore the Plaintiffs' culture, history and status, or assist them to do so. At a minimum, Canada's duty to Aboriginal Persons included the duty not to deliberately reduce the number of the beneficiaries to whom Canada owed its duties.

68. Canada's fiduciary duties and the duties otherwise imposed by the constitutional mandate assumed by Canada extend to the Descendant Class because the purpose of the assumption of control over the Survivor Class education was to eradicate from those Aboriginal Children their culture and identity, thereby removing their ability, as adults, to pass on to succeeding generations the linguistic, spiritual, cultural and behavioural bases of their people, as well as to relate to their families and communities and, ultimately, their ability to identify themselves as Aboriginal Persons to whom Canada owed its duties.

69. The fiduciary and constitutional duties owed by Canada extend to the Band Class because the Residential Schools Policy was intended to, and did, undermine and seek to destroy the way of life established and enjoyed by these Nations whose identities were and are viewed as collective.

70. Canada acted in its own self-interest and contrary to the interests of Aboriginal Children, not only by being disloyal to, but by actually betraying the Aboriginal Children and communities whom it had a duty to protect. Canada wrongfully exercised its discretion and power over Aboriginal People, and in particular children, for its own benefit. The Residential Schools Policy was pursued by Canada, in whole or in part, to eradicate what Canada saw as the "Indian Problem". Namely, Canada sought to relieve itself of its moral and financial responsibilities for Aboriginal People, the expense and inconvenience of dealing with cultures, languages, habits and values different from Canada's predominant Euro-Canadian heritage, and the challenges arising from land claims.

71. In breach of its ongoing fiduciary, constitutionally-mandated, statutory and common law duties to the Survivor, Descendant and Band Classes, Canada failed, and continues to fail, to adequately remediate the damage caused by its wrongful acts, failures and omissions. In particular, Canada has failed to take adequate measures to ameliorate the Cultural, Linguistic and Social Damage suffered by the Survivor, Descendant and Band Classes, notwithstanding Canada's admission of the wrongfulness of the Residential Schools Policy since 1998.

Breach of Aboriginal Rights

72. The shíshálh and Tk'emlúps people, and indeed all members of the Band Class, from whom the individual Plaintiffs have descended have exercised laws, customs and traditions integral to their distinctive societies prior to contact with Europeans. In particular, and from a time prior to contact with Europeans, these Nations have sustained their individual members, communities and distinctive cultures by speaking their languages and practicing their customs and traditions.

73. During the time when Survivor Class members attended the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools, in compliance with the Residential Schools Policy, they were taught to speak English, were punished for using their traditional languages and were made ashamed of their traditional language and way of life. Consequently, by reason of the attendance at the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools, the Survivor Class members' ability to speak their traditional languages and practice their shíshálh, Tk'emlúps, and other, spiritual, religious and cultural activities was seriously impaired and, in some cases, lost entirely. These Class members were denied the ability to exercise and enjoy their Aboriginal Rights, both individually and in the context of their collective expression within the Bands, some particulars of which include, but are not limited to:

- (a) shíshálh, Tk'emlúps and other Aboriginal cultural, spiritual and traditional activities have been lost or impaired;

- (b) the traditional social structures, including the equal authority of male and female leaders have been lost or impaired;
- (c) the shishálh, Tk'emlúps and other Aboriginal languages have been lost or impaired;
- (d) traditional shishálh, Tk'emlúps and Aboriginal parenting skills have been lost or impaired;
- (e) shishálh, Tk'emlúps and other Aboriginal skills for gathering, harvesting, hunting and preparing traditional foods have been lost or impaired; and,
- (f) shishálh, Tk'emlúps and Aboriginal spiritual beliefs have been lost or impaired.

74. The interference in the Aboriginal Rights of the Survivor Class has resulted in that same loss being suffered by their descendants and communities, namely the Descendant and Band Classes, all of which was the result sought by Canada.

75. Canada had at all material times and continues to have a duty to protect the Class members' Aboriginal Rights, including the exercise of their spiritual practices and traditional protection of their lands and resources, and an obligation not to undermine or interfere with the individual Plaintiffs' and Class members' Aboriginal Rights. Canada has failed in these duties, without justification, through its Residential Schools Policy.

Intentional Infliction of Mental Distress

76. The design and implementation of the Residential Schools Policy as a program of assimilation to eradicate Aboriginal culture constituted flagrant, extreme and outrageous conduct which was plainly calculated to result in the Cultural, Social and Linguistic Damage, and the mental distress arising from that damage, which was actually suffered by the members of the Survivor and Descendant Classes.

Negligence giving rise to Spiritual, ~~Physical, Sexual,~~ Emotional and Mental Abuse

77. Through its Agents, Canada was negligent and in breach of its duties of care to the Survivor Class, particulars of which include, but are not limited to, the following:

- (a) it failed to adequately screen and select the individuals ~~to whom it delegated who it hired either directly or through its Agents~~ for the operation of the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools, to adequately supervise and control the operations of the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools, and to protect Aboriginal children from spiritual, ~~physical, sexual,~~ emotional and mental abuse at the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools, and as a result, such abuses did occur to Survivor Class members and Canada is liable for such abuses;
- (b) it failed to respond appropriately or at all to disclosure of abuses in the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools, and in fact, covered up such abuse and suppressed information relating to those abuses; and
- (c) it failed to recognize and acknowledge harm once it occurred, to prevent additional harm from occurring and to, whenever and to the extent possible, provide appropriate treatment to those who were harmed.

Vicarious Liability

78. Through its Agents, Canada breached its duty of care to the Survivor Class resulting in damages to the Survivor Class and is vicariously liable for all of the breaches and abuses committed on its behalf.

79. Further, or in the alternative, Canada is vicariously liable for the negligent performance of the fiduciary, constitutionally-mandated, statutory and common law duties of its Agents.

80. Additionally, the Plaintiffs hold Canada solely responsible for the creation and implementation of the Residential Schools Policy and, furthermore:

- a. The Plaintiffs expressly waive any and all rights they may possess to recover from Canada, or any other party, any portion of the Plaintiffs' loss that may be attributable to the fault or liability of any third-party and for which Canada might reasonably be entitled to claim from any one or more third-party for contribution.

indemnity or an apportionment at common law, in equity, or pursuant to the British Columbia Negligence Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 333, as amended; and

- b. The Plaintiffs will not seek to recover from any party, other than Canada, any portion of their losses which have been claimed, or could have been claimed, against any third-parties.

Damages

81. As a consequence of the breach of fiduciary, constitutionally-mandated, statutory and common law duties, and the intentional infliction of mental distress and the breaches of Aboriginal Rights by Canada and its Agents, for whom Canada is vicariously liable, the Survivor Class members, including the Representative Plaintiffs, suffered injury and damages including:

- (a) loss of language, culture, spirituality, and Aboriginal identity;
- (b) emotional and psychological harm;
- (c) isolation from their family, community and Nation;
- (d) deprivation of the fundamental elements of an education, including basic literacy;
- (e) an impairment of mental and emotional health, in some cases amounting to a permanent disability;
- (f) an impaired ability to trust other people, to form or sustain intimate relationships, to participate in normal family life, or to control anger;
- (g) a propensity to addiction;
- (h) alienation from community, family, spouses and children;
- (i) an impaired ability to enjoy and participate in recreational, social, cultural, athletic and employment activities;
- (j) an impairment of the capacity to function in the work place and a permanent impairment in the capacity to earn income;
- (k) deprivation of education and skills necessary to obtain gainfully employment;
- (l) the need for ongoing psychological, psychiatric and medical treatment for illnesses and other disorders resulting from the Residential School experience;
- (m) sexual dysfunction;

(01447063.2)

- (n) depression, anxiety and emotional dysfunction;
- (o) suicidal tendencies;
- (p) pain and suffering;
- (q) loss of self-esteem and feelings of degradation, shame, fear and loneliness,;
- (r) nightmares, flashbacks and sleeping problems;
- (s) fear, humiliation and embarrassment as a child and adult;
- (t) sexual confusion and disorientation as a child and young adult;
- (u) impaired ability to express emotions in a normal and healthy manner;
- (v) loss of ability to participate in, or fulfill, cultural practices and duties;
- (w) loss of ability to live in their community and Nation; and
- (x) constant and intense emotional, psychological pain and suffering.

82. As a consequence of the breach of fiduciary, constitutionally-mandated, statutory and common law duties, and the intentional infliction of harm and breach of Aboriginal Rights by Canada and its Agents, for whom Canada is vicariously liable, the Descendant Class members, including the Representative Plaintiffs, suffered injury and damages including:

- (a) their relationships with Survivor Class members were impaired, damaged and distorted as a result of the experiences of Survivor Class members in the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools; and,
- (b) their culture and languages were undermined and in some cases eradicated by, amongst other things, as pleaded, the forced assimilation of Survivor Class members into Euro-Canadian culture through the operation of the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools.

83. As a consequence of the breach of fiduciary, constitutionally-mandated, statutory and common law duties, and the intentional infliction of harm and breach of Aboriginal Rights by Canada and its Agents, for whom Canada is vicariously liable, the Band Class has suffered from the loss of the ability to fully exercise their Aboriginal Rights collectively, including the right to have a traditional government based on their own languages, spiritual practices, traditional laws {01447063.2}

and practices and to have those traditions fully respected by the members of the Survivor and Descendant Classes and subsequent generations, all of which flowed directly from the individual losses of the Survivor Class and Descendant Class members' Cultural, Linguistic and Social Damage.

Grounds for Punitive and Aggravated Damages

84. Canada deliberately planned the eradication of the language, religion and culture of Survivor Class members and Descendant Class members, and the destruction of the Band Class. The actions were malicious and intended to cause harm, and in the circumstances punitive and aggravated damages are appropriate and necessary.

85. The Class members plead that Canada and its Agents had specific and complete knowledge of the widespread physical, psychological, emotional, cultural and sexual abuses of Survivor Class members that were occurring at the ~~Identified~~ Residential Schools.

86. Despite this knowledge, Canada continued to operate the Residential Schools and took no steps, or in the alternative no reasonable steps, to protect the Survivor Class members from these abuses and the grievous harms that arose as a result. In the circumstances, the failure to act on that knowledge to protect vulnerable children in Canada's care amounts to a wanton and reckless disregard for their safety and renders punitive and aggravated damages both appropriate and necessary.

Legal Basis of Claim

87. The Survivor and Descendant Class members are Indians as defined by the Indian Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 1-5. The Band Class members are bands made up of Indians so defined.

{01447063.2}

88. The Class members' Aboriginal Rights existed and were exercised at all relevant times pursuant to the Constitution Act, 1982, s. 35, being Schedule B to the Canada Act 1982 (UK), 1982, c. 11.

89. At all material times, Canada owed the Plaintiffs and Class members a special and constitutionally-mandated duty of care, good faith, honesty and loyalty pursuant to Canada's constitutional obligations and Canada's duty to act in the best interests of Aboriginal People and especially Aboriginal Children who were particularly vulnerable. Canada breached those duties, causing harm.

90. The Class members descend from Aboriginal Peoples who have exercised their respective laws, customs and traditions integral to their distinctive societies prior to contact with Europeans. In particular, and from a time prior to contact with Europeans to the present, the Aboriginal Peoples from whom the Plaintiffs and Class members descend have sustained their people, communities and distinctive culture by exercising their respective laws, customs and traditions in relation to their entire way of life, including language, dance, music, recreation, art, family, marriage and communal responsibilities, and use of resources.

Constitutionality of Sections of the Indian Act

91. The Class members plead that any section of the Act and its predecessors and any Regulation passed under the Act and any other statutes relating to Aboriginal Persons that provide or purport to provide the statutory authority for the eradication of Aboriginal People through the destruction of their languages, culture, practices, traditions and way of life, are in violation of sections 25 and 35(1) of the Constitution Act 1982, sections 1 and 2 of the Canadian

Bill of Rights, R.S.C. 1985, as well as sections 7 and 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and should therefore be treated as having no force and effect.

92. Canada deliberately planned the eradication of the language, spirituality and culture of the Plaintiffs and Class members.

93. Canada's actions were deliberate and malicious and in the circumstances, punitive, exemplary and aggravated damages are appropriate and necessary.

94. The Plaintiffs plead and rely upon the following:

Federal Courts Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. F-7, s. 17;

Federal Courts Rules, SOR/98-106, Part 5.1 Class Proceedings;

Crown Liability and Proceedings Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-50, ss. 3, 21, 22, and 23;

PUBLIC ORDER AND REASONS

(The Confidential Order and Reasons were issued on October 1, 2021, and no redactions are necessary)

[1] These are the Reasons for the Court approval of the Fee Agreement dated June 4, 2021, reached in relation to the partial settlement of this class proceeding.

[2] By separate Order and Reasons reported at 2021 FC 988 on September 24, 2021, the Court approved the Settlement Agreement for the settlement of the Survivor Class claims and the Descendant Class claims.

[3] The Fee Agreement is separate from the Settlement Agreement.

[4] This Motion was heard in Vancouver on September 8, 2021, following the Motion for approval of the Settlement Agreement.

[5] For the reasons that follow, the Fee Agreement is approved in the form submitted.

Sealing Order

[6] Portions of the information filed in support of this Motion were filed under seal as the Band Class portion of this class proceeding has not been settled and the litigation is ongoing. At the request of the parties, on August 27, 2021, the Court issued a Sealing Order to protect the information related to the Plaintiffs' retainer agreements and funding agreements as they constitute solicitor-client information. Likewise, some of the Affidavits filed in support of this Motion have been redacted or sealed.

[7] To maintain the confidentiality of this information, the lawyers representing Canada who will continue to be involved in the band class litigation were not involved in negotiation of the Fee Agreement and did not participate in this Motion.

Background

[8] The factual background to this class proceeding and the details of the Settlement Agreement for the Survivor Class and Descendant Class are more fully outlined in the Order and Reasons approving the Settlement Agreement, 2021 FC 988.

[9] In support of this Motion for Court approval of the Fee Agreement, the following Affidavits were filed:

- Affidavit of Shane Gottfriedson, Representative Plaintiff and former elected Chief of Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc (also known as Kamloops Indian Band), sworn on August 23, 2021;
- Affidavit of Garry Feschuk, Representative Plaintiff and former elected Chief of shíshálh Nation (also known as Sechelt Indian Band), sworn on August 23, 2021;

- Affidavit of Peter Grant, co-counsel for the Plaintiffs, sworn on August 25, 2021;
- Affidavit of Jasmine Paul, Stewardship and Territorial Land Management Division Manager with shísháhlh Nation sworn on August 26, 2021;
- Affidavit of Travis Anderson, a Certified Aboriginal Financial Manager, and Executive Director of Finance with Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc sworn on August 23, 2021;
- Affidavit of Bill Namagoose, Executive Director of the Cree Nation Government and the Grand Council of the Crees (Eeyou Istchee), sworn on August 23, 2021;
- Affidavit of Charlotte Anne Victorine Gilbert, Representative Plaintiff for the Survivor Class, sworn on August 23, 2021;
- Affidavit of Diena Marie Jules, Representative Plaintiff for the Survivor Class, sworn on August 23, 2021;
- Affidavit of Daphne Paul, Representative Plaintiff for the Survivor Class, sworn on August 23, 2021;
- Affidavit of Darlene Matilda Bulpit, Representative Plaintiff for the Survivor Class, sworn on August 23, 2021;
- Affidavit of Rita Poulsen, Representative Plaintiff for the Descendant Class, sworn on August 23, 2021; and,

- Affidavit of Amanda Deanne Big Sorrel Horse, Representative Plaintiff for the Descendant Class, sworn on August 23, 2021.

Key Terms of Fee Agreement

[10] The key terms of the Fee Agreement are as follows:

- section 3 provides that Canada will pay the sum of $8,392,619.11 to Class Counsel in trust for legal fees, disbursements, and applicable taxes incurred in the initiation and prosecution of the class action from 2012 to February 28, 2021 (“Past Fees”);
- section 4 provides the amount of $1,200,000.00 allocated for “Negotiation and Implementation Fees”, to be paid by Canada to Class Counsel in trust for legal fees, disbursements and applicable taxes incurred in the negotiation and implementation of the Settlement Agreement from March 1, 2021 until the Implementation Date. Court approval is required for these payments, and any amount paid by Canada to Class Counsel for Negotiation and Implementation Fees, including accrued interest, which remain in trust after these fees, disbursements and taxes have been paid will be transferred to the Day Scholars Revitalization Fund;
- section 5 provides the amount of $2,500,000.000 allocated for “Reconsideration Fees”, to be paid by Canada to Class Counsel in trust for legal fees, disbursements, and applicable taxes incurred for the provision of legal services related to requests for reconsideration of denied claims for Day Scholar Compensation Payments. Court approval is required for these payments, and any unused amounts remaining in trust will be transferred to the Day Scholars Revitalization Fund; and,

- section 6 provides Honoraria payments of $15,000.00 each to the eight named Representative Plaintiffs for the Survivor and Descendant Class, to be paid by Canada in trust to Class Counsel. The payments to Violet Catherine Gottfriedson and Frederick Johnson, both of whom are deceased, will be distributed to their family members, on the advice of the related Representative Plaintiffs.

[11] The Fee Agreement also takes into account any amounts that have previously been paid by Canada during this class proceeding.

Issues

[12] The issues for determination on this Motion are as follows:

1. Approval of the Fee Agreement; and
2. Approval of Honoraria payments to the Representative Plaintiffs.

Analysis

1. Approval of the Fee Agreement

General Principles

[13] Rule 334.4 of the Federal Courts Rules, SOR/98-106 requires that all legal counsel fees in a class action be approved by the Court.

[14] The test applied by the Court on a motion to approve counsel fees is whether the legal fees are “fair and reasonable” in the circumstances (McLean v Canada, 2019 FC 1077 at para 2 [McLean]).

[15] A number of cases including Manuge v Canada, 2013 FC 341 at para 28; Condon v Canada, 2018 FC 522 at para 82; Merlo v Canada, 2017 FC 533 at para 78-98, have outlined the following considerations to be weighed in assessing the reasonableness of legal fees:

- a) Risk undertaken
- b) Results achieved
- c) Time expended
- d) Complexity of issues
- e) Importance of litigation to the plaintiffs
- f) Quality and skill of counsel
- g) Expectation or views of the Class
- h) The existence of a fee agreement
- i) Ability of the Class to pay
- j) Fees in similar cases.

[16] In this case, the Fee Agreement was negotiated independently from the Settlement Agreement. Isolating these agreements ensured that even if the Fee Agreement was not approved, the Settlement Agreement (if approved) could still be implemented. The two agreements are also independently funded by Canada.

[17] In considering these factors, it is important to highlight that unlike many other class proceedings, legal counsel in this matter were not retained on a contingency fee basis. Rather, legal counsel worked on an hourly fee-for-service basis and rendered legal accounts (at reduced rates) as the matter progressed. The absence of a contingency fee agreement is an important distinguishing feature in considering and weighing the factors noted above. However, in my view, it is still necessary to consider these factors as against the fees sought to be approved.

a) Risk Undertaken

[18] Typically, the primary risk undertaken by Class Counsel acting on a contingency fee basis is the risk of non-payment if the claim fails. That risk was somewhat ameliorated in this case. However, Class Counsel nonetheless assumed the risk of only being paid the reduced rate portion of their legal fees if the matter was not successfully concluded. Class Counsel describes this as a risk-sharing arrangement.

[19] This was risky litigation and success was far from certain as it involved novel legal claims in seeking damages for loss of language and culture. Canada vigorously defended this class proceeding and raised a number of defenses including limitation defenses, the IRSSA releases, and denying any duty of care on the part of Canada.

[20] The fact that no other claims were initiated in Canada on behalf of Day Scholars and the fact that this group was excluded from the IRSSA, highlights the uncertainty that surrounded these claims and the risks undertaken by legal counsel in committing years of time and resources to pursue the action.

b) Results Achieved

[21] The Representative Plaintiffs' objectives for resolution of the class proceeding was that no day scholar would be left behind; that there be a simple, streamlined, and speedy claims process; that there would be no cap on the overall settlement; that IRSSA releases could not be relied upon; and that any settlement would not prejudice the ongoing Band Class litigation.

[22] The Settlement Agreement of the Survivor Class and Descendant Class met and exceeded these objectives. In addition to the individual $10,000.00 Day Scholar Compensation Payment, the settlement also includes a $50 million dollar Day Scholars Revitalization Fund. This fund provides for Indigenous-led initiatives to support healing, wellness, education, language, culture, heritage and commemoration activities for the Survivor Class members and Descendant Class members.

c) Time Expended

[23] This litigation has been ongoing for almost a decade. The legal issues were complex, and success was uncertain.

[24] The Settlement Agreement was reached a few months before the September 2021 common issues trial was scheduled to begin. A great deal of work had been undertaken to prepare this matter for trial, and the fees sought are based on the time spent on this litigation on a fee-for-service basis. Class Counsel has provided a detailed Affidavit outlining the work performed and has attached copies of time dockets providing a breakdown of the description of the work performed, by who, and the amount of time expended.

[25] To date, Class Counsel has expended thousands of hours on this claim. They will also continue to provide legal support in the implementation of the Settlement Agreement and in the reconsiderations of denied Day Scholar Compensation Payment claims.

[26] Based upon the time recorded, the fees sought to be approved represent the hours actually worked at non-discounted rates, plus the sum of $1,600,000 representing a premium. In considering the risks and obligations undertaken by Class Counsel and the success achieved for the Survivor and Descendant classes, I agree that counsel has earned a premium in excess of the docketed time.

d) Complexity of Issues

[27] The complexity of this class action cannot be overstated and is discussed in more detail in the Order for the Settlement Approval. The claims advanced were novel and untested. The evidence was historic and voluminous.

[28] The case involved a number of interlocutory motions including Canada's motion to stay the action entirely and a contested Certification Motion. In the months prior to settlement, legal counsel was engaged in extensive preparations for a 74-day trial.

e) Importance of Litigation to the Plaintiffs

[29] The exclusion of the Day Scholars from the IRSSA settlement was hurtful and those who suffered harm in Residential Schools felt that their experiences were not recognized. The affidavits of the Representative Plaintiffs attest to the significance and the importance of this litigation. Even those who objected to the settlement spoke about the harm caused and the lack of recognition in the previous settlements.

[30] This litigation has come at a great personal cost to the Representative Plaintiffs, who, in the pursuit of this action, had to relive traumatic experiences in a public forum. The affidavits of the Representative Plaintiffs outline not only the effect their experiences as Day Scholars had on them and their families, but also the lasting, intergenerational trauma that has resulted.

[31] While no amount can ever compensate the Survivors or their Descendants for the harms they endured, and continue to endure, this settlement is a key step towards healing and reconciliation.

f) Quality and Skill of Counsel

[32] Class Counsel are a team of highly experienced lawyers combining their expertise in Aboriginal law and class action litigation. Three of the lead counsel were involved in the IRSSA settlement and were specifically sought out to act on this matter because of their expertise.

[33] Class Counsel was clearly committed to the class action and prosecuted the claim diligently in spite of significant procedural and legal hurdles. Ultimately, after many years, Class Counsel was able to achieve a settlement that met and exceeded the objectives of the Survivor and Descendants class members. Counsel will continue to be involved in providing legal services in the claims and reconsideration processes. As well, the Band Class claim is scheduled for trial in September 2022.

g) Expectation or Views of the Class

[34] The affidavits of the Representative Plaintiffs support the approval of the Fee Agreement and confirm that the Fee Agreement is in keeping with their understanding of how fees were to be paid on a successful resolution of the action. They also confirm that in their opinion the fees are fair and reasonable.

[35] There were no objections to the Fee Agreement voiced at the Motion. However, during the Settlement Approval Motion, one Class Member objecting to the settlement stated that the payment to class members was minimal compared to the lawyers “salaries”. This comment is of no assistance in assessing if the legal fees are fair and reasonable in these circumstances.

h) The Existence of a Fee Agreement

[36] As noted, Class Counsel was acting on a fee-for-services retainer and not a contingency fee agreement. Class Counsel's Affidavit and the Affidavits of the Representative Plaintiffs provide details on the Plaintiffs' retainer agreements and funding agreements. The Court is satisfied that this class action proceeding would not have been pursued without these agreements.

i) Ability of the Class to Pay

[37] The Representative Plaintiffs state in their Affidavits that they had no ability to fund this litigation on their own, and there is no evidence that any such individual claims have been filed.

j) Fees in Similar Cases

[38] The total value of this settlement is approximately $154 million. The legal fees sought to be approved for past fees is the sum of $8,392,619.11 broken down as follows:

a.	Legal fees billed by Class Counsel	$4,055,765.66
b.	Class Counsel premium	$1,600,000.00
c.	Legal disbursements of Class Counsel	$ 973,729.67
d.	Plaintiffs' expenses	$1,763,123.78

[39] The Class Counsel premium of $ 1,600,000.00 is the only amount claimed for past legal fees which is over and above the docketed time. As stated above, this is a well-earned premium.

[40] The Fee Agreement provides that the legal fee amounts allocated for negotiation and implementation work ($1,200,000) and for reconsideration fees ($2,500,000) have not yet been incurred and will be subject to further approval by the Court.

[41] Accordingly considering the total value of the settlement of approximately $154 million, legal fees of $8.3 million is modest.

[42] By comparison, in McLean the settlement was approximately $2 billion and the approved legal fees were $55 million plus $7 million for legal fees for services rendered for a period of four years afterward. In Riddle v Canada, 2018 FC 641 [Riddle], the settlement was $750 million and a $75 million legal fee agreement was approved.

[43] Recently in MacDonald et al v BMO Trust Company et al, 2021 ONSC 3726 [MacDonald] Justice Belobaba (paras 21-22) characterized class action settlement amounts of over $100 million as being “mega fund” settlements for which legal fees required closer judicial scrutiny. This statement was made in the context of applying a straight-line calculation of an agreed upon contingency fee percentage to the settlement amount. This calculation, according to Justice Belobaba, can result in an “underserved windfall” in class action litigation. In MacDonald the settlement was $100 million and class counsel was seeking $25 million in legal fees.

[44] While this case would fall into the mega-fund category as defined in MacDonald, the fees sought to be approved are not based upon a contingency fee calculation because Class Counsel was not acting pursuant to a contingency fee agreement. The legal fees sought to be approved here are based upon the actual time the lawyers worked on this action. Accordingly, the Court has the benefit of the details of the time docketed on this matter. This provides a useful benchmark against which to assess the reasonableness of the proposed legal fees. In addition, as noted above, my view is that the legal fee premium sought was well-earned and reasonable when considered against the results obtained.

[45] Overall, I am satisfied that this Fee Agreement is fair and reasonable.

2. Approval of Honoraria payments to the Representative Class Plaintiffs

[46] This Court has noted that compensation to representative plaintiffs is appropriate in situations where the plaintiff has provided services which are over and above the usual duties of a representative plaintiff (Merlo at para 73).

[47] The list of factors relevant for consideration on whether Representative Plaintiffs should receive an honorarium include: significant personal hardship; active involvement in the initiation of the litigation and retainer of counsel; time spent and activities undertaken in the litigation; communication and interaction with other class members; and participation at various stages of the litigation (Merlo-at para 72; Toth v Canada, 2019 FC 125 at para 96).

[48] The litigation required exceptional efforts on the part of the Representative Plaintiffs, who spent nine years reliving painful and personal details of their experiences at Residential Schools and the resulting lifelong harms that ensued. They have provided personal affidavits detailing their experiences. They endured cross-examinations and were prepared to testify openly at trial. In doing so, they exposed themselves to re-traumatization at great personal cost, but done for the collective benefit of the class members. In fact, so painful and heavy was the burden that two of the proposed Representative Plaintiffs stepped away when they were unable to continue in their roles.

[49] The Representative Plaintiffs spent significant time travelling to meetings, gathering and reviewing documents, attending examinations and hearings, and reviewing materials to stay up-to-date and informed on the status of the litigation. The Representative Plaintiffs have met regularly with legal counsel to receive updates and provide instructions.

[50] They have also participated in media interviews and engaged in extensive outreach efforts to communicate with class members by telephone, email and various social media platforms.

[51] During the course of this class proceeding two Representative Plaintiffs, Frederick Johnson and Violet Gottfriedson, passed away, but not before demonstrating their commitment to this class action to ensure it was pursued.

[52] In the circumstances, I have no difficulty in finding that this is an appropriate case to recognize the extraordinary efforts of the Representative Plaintiffs and I approve the honoraria payments of $15,000.00 to each.

Conclusion

[53] For the above reasons, the Fee Agreement, including the honoraria payments to the Representative Plaintiffs, is approved.

ORDER IN T-1542-12THIS COURT ORDERS that:

1. The Fee Agreement is fair and reasonable and in the best interests of the Survivor and Descendant Classes, and is hereby approved pursuant to Rule 334.4 of the Federal Courts Rules, SOR/98-106, and shall be implemented in accordance with its terms;
2. The payment of the total and all-inclusive amount of $8,392,619.11 by the Defendant to Class Counsel in trust for the legal fees, disbursements and taxes applicable thereon incurred in the initiation and prosecution of this action, from its commencement in 2012 to February 28, 2021, as set out in the Fee Agreement, is approved and shall be paid by the Defendant to Class Counsel in trust within 30 days of the Implementation Date (as defined in the Settlement Agreement dated June 4, 2021);

§9.20 Where there have been significant problems in identifying possible claimants and/or where an aggregate settlement recovery cannot be economically distributed to individual class members, the courts have approved cy-près distributions to specified not-for-profit entities rather than the class members. These entities are intended to act as surrogates for the categories of claimants who are not easily identifiable or for whom the award would be insignificant.

For example, in Sutherland v. Boots Pharmaceutical PLC,¹ the class was comprised of consumers of a specific drug who purchased the drug as a result of misleading advertisements. The class consisted of 520,000 people. Based upon the proposed settlement, each class member would receive a payment of $30 to $70. The administrative costs of distributing the funds would result in a large portion of the fund being dissipated. The court held that the settlement funds should be distributed to cy-près beneficiaries which would include advocacy associations to assist consumers in locating alternative drugs and research groups.

In McSheffrey v. Ontario, Justice Perell of the Ontario Superior Court of Justice stated that, as a general rule, cy-près distributions should not be approved where direct compensation to class members is practicable.²

§9.21 In considering whether or not to approve a particular cy-près award, the court should have regard to the factors of access to justice objectives for class members and behaviour modification of the defendant. Class counsel bears the responsibility for selecting the recipient of the cy-près distribution and cannot delegate that responsibility to others. Where there are multiple worthy recipients, class counsel must decide which organizations or institutions should receive the funds. Although the ultimate responsibility of identifying a worthy recipient rests with class counsel, the best way to determine the collective interest of class members is to listen to the views of the class members themselves. Ascertaining class member views will be possible because class counsel will give notice of the proposed settlement that will include its recommendation for a cy-près
